This filmed excursion to the Cirque Napoleon Rancy, performing at Lille, France, was a shreds-and-patches affair that never got into a swinging gait. The acts just tumbled on, did their bits in front of a live audience, and skipped off. Producer Derek Burrell -Davis didn't achieve much atmosphere, and also deployed his cameras to give too many close-ups, some at the wrong time, so that the heart-in-mouth excitement, essential to a circus, was largely lost.

Highspot was provided by the Reynolds Trio, a skillful and graceful flying-trapeze group who performed masterly gyrations in the

Although they had a net, this wasn't apparent until the end of the act; it added to the tension. Another aerial asset came from the Astonis, performed daring capers such as the man holding the twirling girl by his teeth.

The rest were competent examples of usual circus fare. Tarzana moved her lions about fearlessly. The Bedinis did gymnastics, culminating in two of them revolving at the end of a pole held by the third man's feet. And Karrey and his partner juggled four clubs with slightly too much effort.

The horses were in charge of Sabine Rancy, and they trotted capably. As a twist, she had a camel and dromedary, who walked on their knees. The Chabris clowned a ballet pas-de-deux, and the Allegros did the one with human puppet that, after being thrown around, revealed itself as a strapping blonde.

The circus was billed as the world's "oldest established." And it fitted the bill by being staunchly traditional, arousing nostalgia more than anything else. Otta.

SAUL OF TARSUS
With Patrick Troughton, Martin Miller, Mark Dignam, Walter Fitzgerald, John Southworth, Stuart Hutchinson, Kenneth Mackintosh, John Graham, Robert Gillespie, Joyce Chancellor, Julian Sherrier, William Treacher, Kim Grant, John Flint, Judith Gibson, Anthony Jacobs, David Spenser, John Woodnutt, Meadows White, Paul Streather, Frank Shelley
Writer, TV Producer: Joy Harington
30 Mins., Sun., 5:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Joy Harington has previously exhibited a remarkable talent for combining drama with reverence in adaptations of biblical stories. "Saul of Tarsus," conceived in 10 half-hour installments, promises to be her finest chore to date in this vein.

In the episode viewed, Saul was seen as the ruthless persecutor of the Nazarenes. In the service of the High Priest, he led the stoning of Stephen, who was proclaiming the truths of the Messiah. Then Saul was dispatched to root out the Christian "heretics" in Damascus, and the tale took in his blinding, the recovery of his sight through the mediation of Ananias, and his subsequent conversion to the true faith. The skein ended with his escape over the city walls.

Joy Harington's script was sturdy simple, and never jarred with a false word; she gave clear outlines to her characters, and didn't cloud them with sentiment. The same sharp impact was evident in her production, a cunning mixture of film and studio. Richard Henry's sets and costumes added dignity to the proceedi

But the abiding impression was of lively incident, intriguing in its own right and not dependent on its scriptural associations, although it gained from them. Patrick Troughton made of Saul a strong central figure, given firstrate support by Mark Dignam, Walter Fitzgerald, and Martin Miller, whose Ananias was a notable portrait of goodness. In fact, a triumph all round — and its Sunday-afternoon viewing-time gave it a suitable audience of youngsters as well as adults. Otta.

SOMERSET MAUGHAM HOUR
With Hugh Williams, Guy Deghy, Wensley Pithey, Kevin Brennan, Harold Kasket, Julie Allan, George Ricarde, Arthur Hewlett, James Goel, Chin Yu, Gloria Mitchell, Pearl Ho
Director: Joan Kemp-Welch
Writer: W. Somerset Maugham
Adaptation: William Woods
55 Mins., Fri., 9:35 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

Associated-Rediffusion, which did a very creditable job last season in dramatizing som of W. Somerset Maugham's yarns, fell both dramatic and climactic, the skein with "The Four Dutchmen." Lamentably lacking atmosphere, both dramatic and climatic, the story of a comradeship between four jolly, childish, fat seamen that disintegrates following the infatuation of one for a moneygrabbing slut became an episodic bore which didn't come to life at any point. The web will have to make up a lot of ground quickly if it's to re-establish the series to any effect.

The only piquancy the narrative gained came very late in the proceedings when, following the all-too-foreseeable murder of one of the four by the infatuated one and the latter's suicide, the two survivors faced the cringing whore alone. For the rest, the proceedings trundled along with Guy Deghy trying vainly to whip up some sympathy as the gross lover and Kevin Brennan, Harold Kasket and Wensley Pithey striving to present portraits of lovable bonhomie suffering change. Julie Allan, as the girl, did pretty well, but Hugh Williams who is to act as the introducer of and participator in the stories couldn't overcome the basic fact that he was required to hang around looking useless. Joan Kemp-Welch's direction was flat and the settings looked, for the most part, like settings. Erni.

THE FRIDAY SHOW
With Lita Roza, Peter Gilmore, David Kernan, Steve Perry, Jane Shore, Peter Jones, Clive Dunn, George Mitchell Singers
Writer: Alec Grahame
Director: Yvonne Littlewood
Producer: Dennis Main Wilson
35 Mins., Fri., 7:55 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Keyed to a topical event and with its top star switching week by week, "The Friday Show" hasn't any format to speak of. It's just an excuse to put on a song-and-patter show, and what's so special about Friday anyway?

This one kicked off with the Motor Show as its motif, that event having been one of the week's talking points. Lita Roza wended her own classy chassis among the metal ones, singing the while. And guest comics Peter Jones and Clive Dunn were allotted a so-so sketch in which a fake salesman sold his stooge a rare he didn't own. Jones' specialty of fast-talking crookery, familiar from a radio series, raised reminiscent yocks.

But the burden of the entertainment fell on Lita Roza, and she carried it with poise. Highspots were a production number combining "I've Got My Eyes on You," "The Other Woman," and "Isn't It Romantic?" into a moral tal about straying husband and exciting mistress; and a finale of show tunes, which concentrated on the near-winners rather than the show-stoppers.

Miss Roza was joined by sturdy males, David Kernan and Steve Perry, for a couple of numbers. And she was given a breather by Peter Gilmore and Jane Shore, who tried the easy target of guying Spanish dancing and missed it.

Yvonne Littlewood's direction had zing and imagination and the show had polish, but lacked point. Otta.

INSIGHT
With Dr. J. Bronowski
Producers: Humphrey Fisher, Bill Wright
Writer: Gerald Leach
30 Mins., Tues., 9:15 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Aim of this skein is to explore new scientific knowledge about nature and to relate it to underlying principles about the world. This first one began by unravelling the growth of consciousness in children, and later programs will bring in the birth of matter, new concepts of space, human and animal psychology, new theories about chance. In fact, it's a wide-ranging attempt to synthesise a number of intellectual discoveries into a pattern.

As lecturer, Dr. Bronowski proved a fine choice. Known for his appearances on egghead discussions like "The Brains Trust," he's also been concerned as propagandist to bridge the gap between science and the humanities. His manner is clear, fatherly, and unhurried. He linked clips of film that traced a baby from its birth, through the gradual coordination of its limbs and the discovery of the meaning of objects, to the awareness gained from playing games. It made an absorbing session, for the film was charming as well as instructive. A child caught unawares is a natural anyway.

Mme. Jean-Claire, a child psychologist from Switzerland, helped out ably with the interpretations, and Bronowski succeeded in setting an intriguing pace as a come-on for the follow-ups. Otta.

THE JAPANESE REVUE
With Don Yada's Japanese company Gilbert Harding
Director: Henry Caldwell
45 Mins., Sat., 7:50 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

"Tokyo," declared interlinker Gilbert Harding in introducing this recording of the revue at the Paris Moulin Rouge, "has gone into business as we know it." Which may be ammunition sometime for those who declare show biz is doing a dive. A sort of bastard mixture of traditional Japanese ditty and dance and 1930-style occidental jazz, the bulk of the material hardly rated alongside Broadway or London vaudeville—though a couple of items that bore direct comparison with those to be found in a Western variety bill, from jugglers and acros, were in fact way ahead.

The novelty of the whole stage presentation saw the tv program through, even if the so-so telerecording couldn't do justice to the costumes, lighting et al. The meaning of some of the items was necessarily wrapped in some mystery, as that of the opening "street scene in Japan," a song about Yogashima with parasols yet, and a kind of local cha-cha to a tune that sounded vaguely like "Rawhide."

Throughout there was no denying the talent of the company, especially the well-drilled dancers, while Harding did his best to be informative and drily comic. Production, considering the circumstances, was slick. Even if "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" needn't start trembling in its shoes, the whole shenanigans whiled away its 45 minutes divertingly Erni.

Foreign TV Followups

The Third Reich (Part 2)

Part Two of "The Third Reich," which has been billed and highly publicized as West Germany's most ambitious and most serious attempt to school its young people on the horrors of Naziism, has just come across the nation's television screens. And while Part One was criticized for its lack of dramatic impact to make it sufficiently interesting to the often uninformed young people of the former Nazi-land, Part Two goes into a fascinating examination of Hitler's powerful propaganda methods.

In seeing how Hitler and his henchman Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels lined up the newspapers, the radio and the films, and started to educate and train the youth of the country in the National Socialist theories, one sees Hitler as probably one of the greatest organizers of all time.

But Hitler the madman, Hitler the worst murderer of the 20th Century, Hitler of the concentration camp mass atrocity, is not yet portrayed. One might examine this film in order to learn how a dictator runs his country efficiently. But still one has not encountered the horror of Hitlerdom. And in dealing with the side issues, it seems that the German audience might almost be expected to praise the master organizer, and still not find out why Hitler is to be hated. Maybe the constant watchers who remain for the next 12 parts of this 14-part documentary film on the Nazi times will eventually find out what's wrong about Hitler.

Using newsreels, newspapers, diaries, and clips from old movies, this 55-minute show reveals how Hitler grabbed up the major newspapers, radio and movies and got them under his control, while simply stating that powerful men in these fields who opposed him were imprisoned. One sees that the papers and radio become entirely party-line, as to their "executives" were high ranking SS-men.

In the movie industry, it's especially interesting to note that UFA, once the greatest film-making, distribution and exhibiting group of the world, is taken over by the Nazis and concentrates on films that glorify the Nazi youth and the brave fighters. (While it is intimated that the films were "anti-Semitic," the word "Jew" is not mentioned in Part Two at all—and one of the most notorious hate films of this era, "Jew Suess," is likewise not mentioned, while there are clips from other films about Stuka fighters).

The education of the young people and the propaganda slanted at the mothers is well handled. One sees the young boys being trained as sturdy fighters in the prep schools (and there is an interview with a former teacher at one of these institutes); the girls at their female educational centers are urged to obtain "joy through strength," as Hitler emphasized physical culture to develop strong bodies, for fighting for the boys and bearing children for the girls.

The "mothers' cross" gifted to mothers of more than four children was explored, with newsreels showing the elated simple peasant-like women. The fact that entire villages turned out "to shake Hitler's hand" showed the tremendous appeal of this rabble-rouser.

While critics of Part One of this series deplored that the many prominent men shown in the background of some of the Hitler meetings and parties were not named (and many of them are again prominent in industry in Germany), the same flaw is evident in Part Two. Politicians now deceased are named—but as one views all the crowd scenes, one is forced to reflect where are all these former Hitler lovers now, and what part arethey taking West Germany's current economi boom?

"The Fuehrer is always right" cropped up several times on old newsreel placards during the show. Little of the brutality and ghastly crimes of the Nazi era has been been hinted at so far in this costly series. And one wonders if the young German people, after two sessions of the film, are yet aware that Hitler was a man to be hated. From his propaganda spell-binding methods one might so far draw the implication "The Fuehrer was right"—and folks still haven't yet come to grips with the terrible misdeeds of the Hitler gang.

Sunday-Night Play

This skein of plays specially written for tv had a prestige occasion in "A Subject of Scandal and Concern." Drafted by John Osborne, who was reported to be extra-angry when it was turned down by the commercial web, it had curiosity value, also, BBC-TV secured Richard Burton to star, and he was an additional viewer-teaser.

Never can expectations have bitten the dust so hard, assuming they were roused in the first place. Osborne had ransacked Victorian history and unearthed the story of George Holyoake, artisan and early Socialist, who was brought to trial for making a scandalous reference to the deity at a lecture. The hour took in the speech, the court case, and his six-month sentence, during which Holyoake heard that a fellow-atheist had denied his lack-of-faith and prayed on his prison deathbed and that his child had died, too.

Osborne's aim was to use Holyoake as an argument for freedom of conscience and opinion, and to praise him as some sort of martyr. He failed because his construction was unimaginative, his characterization superficial, and his dialog flat.

But, even worse than the lack of drama, the presentation can only be described as daft, and killed any possible involvement with the story. Whenever the actors paused for breath, up popped tv journalist John Freeman to underline what was already obvious. First, he warned that viewers should not be alarmed with what followed. As the proceedings were no more subversive than any child can read in any history-book, that was an unnecessary laugh. Then, looking hellish uncomfortable, Freeman described what was going to happen—so that no one would have any surprise when it did. Finally, he went out pointing a moral—something about man not being able to live by bread alone, but needing jam with blood on it. This wasn't just irrelevant; it was meaningless, too.

Something was saved from the wreck by the performance of Richard Burton. Hampered by Holyoake's stutter, which might be authentic but certainly turned minutes into hours, he dropped it at moments of excitement. In fact, Burton carried off Holyoake's de-

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U.S.

George M. Perkins has been named v.p. in charge of programming for CBS Radio.

Perkins has been acting radio program boss for the web since former striper Howard Barnes moved to CBS-TV's Hollywood operation in August. He'd been assistant to Barnes for nine months, prior to which he was g.m. at WROW, Albany.

Election Nite Arbitron Reaffirms NBC-TV's Competitive Leadership

NBC-TV walked off with the lead in every half-hour tallied by Arbitron's National Report on Election night, CBS-TV came in a consistent second and ABC-TV a consistent third. Total number of homes viewing NBC each minute was 13,260,000, CBS 10,050,000 and ABC 4,040,000.

Yet NBC-TV and CBS-TV were virtually neck-and-neck in the seven-city Arbitron report made the same night. Reason for this is that the latter's N. Y. flagship station, WCBS-TV, which accounts for 35% of the total coverage in Arbitron's seven-city sample, was way ahead of its local competition.

WCBS-TV's viewership was 20% higher than that for WNBC-TV, NBC's flag, and eight times greater than WABC-TV's, last being the ABC-TV key.

On a national basis, NBC-TV clobbered the other two, never grabbing less than a 37% share of audience and rising as high as a 47.1% share (at 8:30 p.m.). CBS ran from 28.4% to 40.1%, and ABC began at 17.9% and went down steadily to 8.8%.

Met B'casting's WRUL Envisions Snazzy Global Com'l Operation

By BOB CHANDLER

Metropolitan Broadcasting has the world by the tail, and after the first of the year will start twisting.

Company's takeover of the 29-year-old WRUL, the U. S.' only only commercial shortwave station, will mark a drastic change-over from the semi-dormancy—in the commercial sense—of the operation until now.

Met has assigned Ralf Brent, wh ' been v.p. of WIP, Philadelphia, to the presidency of its Worldwide Broadcasting division, which will operate WRUL, and Brent's plans include:

1. Increasing commercial shortwaving from the current four and a half hours daily to 26 hours a day over five separate transmitters.

2. Formalizing the current transitory affiliation setups with foreign stations into a regularized, contractual relationship with guaranteed clearances for international advertisers.

3. Expanding service into Portuguese (for Brazil) and French, apart from expansion of current English and Spanish programming.

4. Exploring west coast transmitter sites for broadcasting to the Far East.

5. Setting up two-way program exchanges whereby Latin American stations will provide WRUL with special broadcasts, news and cultural, which it can beam back to South America.

6. Getting the WRUL message to as many international advertisers who've been looking for such a service as quickly as possible.

7. Affiliating with one or mor U. S. radio webs to extend their service for shows sponsored by international-type advertisers into foreign markets.

WRUL was founded and owned by Walter Lemmon, who started it out as an international educational station, and who after the war fought single-handed to have it returned to private ownership after the Government took over the other shortwave operations (RCA, GE, Crosley, etc.) for Voice of America use. A few years ago, Lemmon turned commercial, but primarily for special broadcasts.

Brent's plan envisions an eventual fulltime commercial operation along formal lines. He plans to line up permanent affiliates and set up a rate card and compensation system, under which he can sell regular and special programming on the basis of guaranteed penetration and circulation.

Flexible 'Formats'

Station can operate in several optional ways. It can broadcast to shortwave receivers. It can broadcast shortwave, with pickups by commercial radio stations which change the signal to AM and retransmit under their own signals. It can rent non-broadcast shortwave facilities and beam to stations for immediate or delayed broadcast in AM, and it can prepare and mail taped material for delayed broadcast.

Brent anticipates the major activity in the commercial AM tie-ins, where the AM translations can reach a wider audience than shortwave-only. His permanent affiliate relationships would involve station

Requests! A quiet Sunday morning program on KCBS has stirred up more than 16,000 people in and around San Francisco. Enough to get them to send money. The show was "The Scotch Gardener" with Jim Kerr, sponsored by the Liquinox Company. An offer was made on the program to send listeners a small packet of seeds for 10¢. Letters and dimes poured in for months. The sponsor raised the price to 25¢ and the requests continued to pour in from 33 counties. That's the way people respond to KCBS.

RADIO SAN FRANCISCO

Eye-opener! "One Deadly Drink," produced by WCAU in recognition of the 25th anniversary of Alcoholics Anonymous, produced an eye-opening response from listeners and critics alike. The N.Y. Times called it "powerful"; Variety, "intelligent and absorbing" and the N. Y. Daily News said it "proves that New York and Hollywood need not have a monopoly on important contributions to broadcasting." Audiences, actively responsive to provocative programming, also respond actively to advertising on WCAU.

RADIO PHILADELPHIA

Sponsors! The response of sponsors to a program is not unimportant to a radio station (or to other advertisers). As "The Jack Sterling Show" celebrates its twelfth year on the air, it's many, many happy returns for Eastern Air Lines and the Franklin Savings Bank who have been sponsors since the initial broadcast. And for Pall Mall Cigarettes and Breyer's Ice Cream who have been members of the family for over 5 years. This long, happy relationship is typical of the way sponsors respond to WCBS.

Postcards! Sure, the customers always write... but what radio station gets 171,258 postcards in one week? And from 42 states? In St. Louis, it could only be KMOX. Every year KMOX holds an annual Radio Week during National Radio Month. This year listeners were asked to send in their names, addresses and occupations to be eligible for a daily drawing of 7 radios. They responded at the rate of more than 24,000 per day! The customers always buy, too. And with audience reaction like this, it's no wonder that advertisers get swift, sizable results in response to KMOX.

Offer! It isn't a question of "weather" Chicago's Showmanship Station gets results; often it's a question of whether the sponsor can keep up with the demand. St. Paul Federal, now in its second year of garnering new accounts on WBBM, offered listeners a booklet, "Weather Whys." This offer, mentioned once a morning for five successive days, blew up a storm of requests running over 1,000 per day. Another clear indication that the sales weather in Chicago is always bright because listeners respond to the live, listenable showmanship programs on WBBM.

Newest! Brand-new on the Boston scene, "Listen!" a program on WEEI Radio from 3:00-6:00 P.M. daily featuring Paul Benzaquin. Do people really listen to "Listen"? Reprints of 6 well-known New England scenes by artist, Jack Frost, were offered to listeners at fifty cents a set. In the first couple of days over a thousand requests and fifty-cent pieces were received. Mail from the first program included such quotes as: " 'Listen!' is what Boston radio needs today!" and " 'Listen!' I'm going to " Around Boston, people act fast in response to WEEI.

Splendid! "This is a brief note of appreciation for the job that Mel Baldwin is doing for Super M vitamins. This agency has never experienced such splendid personal cooperation and such gratifying results. Mel has gone through our laboratory twice and has a thorough knowledge of the product. He even answers inquiries from listeners personally and most important—he has increased our sales. He is a credit to KNX." This letter from W. C. Beals Advertising, Inc. indicates that ad agencies as well as listeners respond to KNX.

Exciting programming! That is the basic reason for the exceptional audience response to all seven of the CBS Owned Radio Stations. Only the C-O stations can offer listeners in their markets CBS Network programming in addition to their successful local shows. Now these local programs have added DIMENSION. This series of fascinating, entertaining vignettes-in-sound, conversation pieces by the outstanding people of our time, is yet another reason why more people listen to C-O programming. When people actively listen, they are more likely to hear your advertising message and respond on son Dowd as Jimmy Tomorrow, Tom Pedi as Rocky the bartender, Robert Redford as Don Porritt and Michael Strong as Chuck. Others in the cast included Charles White, Maxwell Glanville, Sorrell Booke, Julie Bovasso Hilda Brawner, Jean Copeland, and Walter Klavun.

The Lewis Freedman production was introed by Brooks Atkinson, dean of N.Y. drama critics now doing a column for the N.Y. Times. Worthington (Tony) Miner, exec producer of "The Play of the Week," also came in for a few introductory remarks.

A note following the play explained the station's position of maintaining the integrity of the author's in "The Play of the Week." The note also pointed out that the participating sponsors had nothing to do with the play's production.

Mature nature of the outing finds station scheduling the play at 10:30 p.m. instead of the regular 8:30 p.m. starting time for "The Play of the Week." The play, edited down from five to four hours, is being given in two parts, the first half of the play being given this week and the second two hours next week. For the preem only the station telecast the full four hours. The windup time was 2:30 a.m., early enough to make any "Late, Late" viewer of pix bleary eyed.

"The Play of the Week" opened this season with Shakespeare's "Henry IV, Part One." "The Iceman Cometh," weeks later, set the high mark for this exciting dramatic showcase. Horo.

Bell Telephone Hour

With Veterans Day as a peg, the "Bell Telephone Hour" recaptured songs from four wars in its Friday (11) airing via NBC-TV. The handsomely mounted production turned back the pages of history with the aid of a battery of talent led by Alfred Drake, Mindy Carson, Barbara Cook, Genevieve and Gisele MacKenzie.

A slender plot thread neatly wove the tapestry of tunes together. Drake portrayed an American serviceman who fought in the four wars while Miss Carson, et al., were his romantic interests. In the Revolutionary War bit Miss Carson soloed 'Johnny Has Gone for a Soldier" with ample emotion and later dueted "Soldier, Soldier Will You Marry Me?" with Drake.

Excerpts from Civil War music were interesting listening and viewing as sung by Miss Cook and Drake. But perhaps the best of the hour's salute was the World War II sequence. Genevieve, in particular, was a delight with her animated version of "Madelon" backed by some can-can girls. Miss MacKenzie brought back some vivid memories of World War II with her vocals of "I'll Be Seeing You" and "I'll Walk Alone," among other tunes of that era.

Drake was in fine voice throughout this Henry Jaffe production. Don Voorhee's orchestra provided impeccable backing while Burgess Meredith as host handled his chores with warmth and dignity. Decidedly appropriate was use of the West Point Choir for four service songs and "America the Beautiful." Latter number opened and closed the hour. Gilb.

Eternal Light

"About Sophie Meier" is apparently becoming part of the "Eternal Light's" standard repertoire. The story, dealing with the problems of the aged, received its second showing on the NBC-TV Sunday series (13). It was telecast for the first time about a year-and-a-half ago.

Although the title role assignment was retained by Mildred Dunnock, NBC-TV and co-producer Jewish Theological Seminary scrapped the original tape in favor of "recreating" the drama. The late Sylvia Berger and Virginia Mazer prepared a neat little script full of heart-tugs and poignancy. It bordered on the soap opera but it was handled with taste and restraint.

Miss Dunnock had the bulk of the thesping assignment and carried it off admirably with a top-flight assist from Barbara Barry, Marian Seldes, Nell Harrison and Alan Manson in lesser sales. Martin Hoad's directorial hand held it together for maximum impact. Gros.

Poller Suit Vs. CBS Tossed Out of Court

Washington, Nov. 15.

U.S. Court of Appeals has dismissed an anti-trust suit against CBS brought by former Milwaukee UHF operator Lou Poller.

Poller sued the network after it severed affiliation with his outlet and purchased a competing UHF station. Poller's station was a financial loser and closed down March, 1959.

Splitting two-to-one, the three-man bench said it saw "no monopoly or attempt to monopolize, but, instead, an unsuccessful attempt to compete with other Milwaukee stations."

Doc Simon Exits Garry's Show for B'way Play; Barasch & Moore In

The Garry Moore show will lose one of its major assets in the scripting department in mid-December when Doc Simon exits to devote fulltime to his upcoming Broadway play and Paramount screen treatment, "Come Blow Your Horn." Moving in to replace Simon will be the team of Norman Barasch and Carroll Moore. Barasch & Moore also have a Broadway-bound comedy. It's called "Send Me No Flow" and stars David Wayne. Show preemed in Baltimore, Nov. 10.

Simon's comedy, his first for Broadway, opens in late December, and he'll devote fulltime to polishing. Michael Ellis production is already sold to Paramount for filming, so in the spring Simon Coasts to prepare the screenplay, which means he'll be out all season. Barasch & Moore's latest venture has been scripting of "The American Private Eye" as a Max Liebman U.S. Steel special in the spring. They did "The American Cowboy" for Liebman last season.

Sterling's Turell

papers and industries in the communities involved. Farm News Digest will be a weekly film service to tv stations with a national sponsor credit. Stations will pay a service charge, but the films will be open end for local spot sale. Negotiations are currently underway with a national farm service company.

On the syndie front (Sterling Sales), company continues to circulate "Abbott & Costello," "AMF Bowling," "Crusade in the Pacific" and the "Captain Sailor Bird" cartoons, and is putting a sports five-minute shorty on the market, "The Big Moment," out of the Hearst library.

Finally, the company is getting into the pubservice field with a cartoon series on science that will go both to schools and tv via the Sterling Educational Films subsid.

Turell figures Sterling's steady growth can be attributed in part to the longevity of exec personnel. Heading up various subsids, all with the company for 10 years or so, brother Norman Turell, Screen News Digest; Elliott Abrams, Sterling Sales; and Leonard Feldman, educational division.

Feature Sales

to negotiations and Seven Arts feels it's close to a deal in the market.

What has triggered many sales in markets for Seven Arts and NTA is the competitive situation. In Tampa and St. Louis, for example, one station bought the NTA package and the other turned to the Warner Bros. group. When the ball starts rolling, one distribution exec feels, stations will be less reluctant to commit for fresh coin, in the face of still to be paid commitments on old pix.

Screen Gems, in the meantime, is sitting on its post-'48's after making initial bids in the N.Y. market. Present state of the features-to-tv market is dictating a go-slow attitude on the Columbia post-'48 pix.

The comparative inertia has enveloped other pix as well, the dubbed foreign pix and pre-'48's. It seems many would-be buyers are waiting to see what the competition does, where fresh pix are coming from, what prices are being bandied around, etc. All these factors account for the comparative slow pace of pix sales.

WMCA

WMCA executive got carried away with himself and copped a feed (network undisclosed) of Nixon's middle-of-the night "concession" speech without the web's permission.

Although WMCA had regular wire service copy and a few reporters of its own in the field, the exec evidently couldn't come up with his own live Nixon transmission, so he did the next best thing. Management says it was "really upset" when the pirating was discovered.

WMCA stuck mainly to reports every quarter of an hour and the majority of its radio time was taken up by platter spinning. "We worked on the theory," said the station, "that if anybody wanted regular election coverage, they'd turn to television."

Other N. Y. indies picked up tv material, but, as far as can be determined, it was used with network permission.

Disney

many of the ABC affiliates are equipped to handle color transmission.

It is known that the Disney forces have also recently held meetings with the ABC high command. Said the same source, "Whichever network offers him the best deal, Disney will take."

(ABC-TV brass in N. Y. deny knowledge of any negotiations for a new contract with Disney.)

ABC-TV's success with programs filmed by outside studios may weigh in that network's favor, it is said. It is not likely that any definitive action will be taken until early next year after Disney has weighed all offers and concessions. Consensus is that if ABC converts to color it has a good chance of continuing the Disney association.

Why WW Exited From ABC Show

A bone infection of the jaw made Walter Winchell ask for his release from ABC-TV and his sponsor, Hazel Bishop. The columnist returned to tv after a considerable layoff on Oct. 2 in the network's Sunday 10:30-11 p.m. slot, but only did two telecasts before getting ill, first with a heavy cold and an abcessed tooth.

The next four stanzas were done for him by a group of columnists and newscasters. Last Sunday (13), he was supposed to have switched his time period by pre-arrangement from 10:30 to an 11-11:15 p.m. slot on Sunday nights to make room for ABC-TV's new Churchill half-hour series. There was said to be a good chance that he'd return to the 10:30 period next spring, still under Hazel Bishop sponsorship.

Network said Winchell requested cancellation to be fair to ABC and the sponsor. The 11-11:15 period has been returned to the ABC-TV affiliated stations for local programming.

Despite the Winchell pullout, ABC-TV is managing to retain the Hazel Bishop billings, with the client channeling the coin into "The Islanders" and "Adventure In Paradise."

BPA's 'Shirtsleeves' Convention

ourselves," the BPA convention responded with enthusiasm. This was particularly reflected in the subsequent exchange-of-ideas bull sessions and seminars which, for the most part, were highly informative and educational.

In terms of "trade agendas," this BPA one was meaty, with its "How to ." thematic continuity that extended through the Monday-Tuesday-Wednesday discussions. All three networks, which were well represented, were active participants at the meet and took advantage of the convergance of station men on New Orleans for peripheral network-affiliate promo-motional huddling, with the inevitable cocktail parties as bonus attractions.

That promotion should be designed to outsmart competition rather than out-shout it, keyed the warning by Joseph Epstein Sr., exec v.p. of the Fitzgerald Agency, and the "how to . . ." seminars that followed took it from there—with 18 variations of panels spanning such diverse subjects as "How to promote color television," "How to use exploitation in broadcast promotion," "How to merchandise in broadcasting," "How to live with Rule 317," "How to promote radio audiences," "How to promote television audiences," "How to use graphic arts in promotion," "How to create public relations and build image," "How to effectively handle trade press advertising and publicity," "How to use cross-media promotion," etc.

Gene Godt, of KYW-TV, Cleveland, the outgoing president, chaired the meets. Scheduled as his successor at tomorrow's (Wed.) election is John Hurlbut, of WFMB, Indianapolis.

There's no doubt the choice of New Orleans as a convention city was a big lure in bringing out the banner attendance (next year it'll probably be San Francisco, thus continuing the pattern of utilizing the most attractive "backdrops" as a delegate come-on. But having lured 'em, it's to the credit of BPA it got them involved in a constructive and meaningful meeting.

of one candidate or another. Television's mass circulation had reached them.

The strength of tv established for many of the undecided voters that Kennedy was no kid and might just be as alert and forcible as Nixon is. When Kennedy won the Democratic nomination in July he ended up with a second legacy — the apathy of a powerful bloc of Californians, especially from the liberal Democrats who had unsuccessfully supported Stevenson's nomination. Before the first "debate," Nixon was polled well ahead in California. After the first tv meeting, the polls in the state suddenly put both men at equal strength, a third for Nixon and a third for Kennedy. The rest were undecided, but their ranks grew smaller during subsequent television appearances, as they made up their minds and went, in similar proportions, to one side of the other. This reported trend is reflected in the closeness now of the California vote.

The potency of the television "debates" was so great in circulating personality, if not in establishing the division of issues, that the feeling in Washington today is there probably won't be any debates in 1964. With four years as President, Kennedy will have had time to entrench his fame (i.e., his personality), which could give him the same advantage over his next opponent that Nixon had over him before the first of the immensely important, if not very great, "debates" on televsion.

Albany—"It's Our Town," sponsored by B'nai B'rith, began its fourth season on WTEN-TV Sunday (13) with a new format that puts on camera area leaders in business, labor, politics and religion for interviews by staffers, plus newsmen.

AFTRA-Web Negotiations

had a strike against the networks. This year, though, the picture is complicated by the presence of SAG at the same negotiating table. AFTRA and SAG agreed last summer to co-negotiate their commercial fees and working conditions, so that they could achieve the same contract terms for tape and for film.

"A lot of ground remains still to be covered," said an observer yesterday afternoon. "It can't possibly be done today."

Management last Friday, with the support of the ad agencies, offered AFTRA and SAG counterproposals, which the unions weighed all weekend. On Monday they met, working until midnight, but they still couldn't arrive at a compromise on rates for tv blurbs. The subject was due to come up again last (Tues.) night.

Negotiations reconvened, after caucuses on both sides, Tuesday morning at 11 a.m. Discussion then was strictly about radio commercial rates (no decision) and sportscasters fees, where some gains were made, according to both sides. Rates for radio sportscasters will go up from a minimum of about $150 per stanza to over $200, in "special categories." Some of these categories, like bowl games and championship baseball play, were defined, but there still appeared to be a wide difference of opinion on the rest.

Negotiations have been going on intermittently for somewhat under two months, but in the past two days the meetings, with the threat of a strike becoming more and more imminent, have gotten more intense, with only relatively short breaks being taken for food and rest.

After a break for supper on Monday (14) evening, AFTRA and SAG went back into meetings with network, agency and film producer executives to further discuss management's counterproposals. The counterproposals, centering about a residual payments system for spot tv and radio commercials, were handed to the jointly negotiating unions last Friday, the day after AFTRA's N.Y. branch unanimously (875 to 0) authorized its negotiators to call a strike any time after the Tuesday (15) midnight deadline. Shortly after the N.Y. vote, authorizations to strike came from AFTRA chapters in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Washington and Chicago.

An agency source said that the Monday afternoon meetings in N.Y. had gone amiably. Another agency source felt that AFTRA did not have the support of the National Assn. of Broadcast Employees & Technicians and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, whose own network contracts expire at the end of January.

But union insiders were simultaneously claiming the support of the two technical unions, NABET at ABC and NBC, and IBEW at CBS. Word had gone out from the negotiating actors' unions that the two technical groups would honor AFTRA-SAG picket lines, should any have to be set up in the major radio and tv markets, particularly at the N.Y. and Los Angeles sources of live network programming and taped and filmed commercials.

(Coast regional NABET director Syd Rose stated that if AFTRA requests strike support NABET will give it. As yet there has been no definite word from AFTRA requesting such assistance. Rose indicated there might be some legal problem insofar as NABET official sanction is concerned, but that would only be a minor point and wouldn't block support, it was believed.)

On Monday afternoon, when both sides were weighing the management counterproposals, pressure began seeping through to the tv networks from their affiliated stations. Fearing that an increase in the rates for performers in commercials would lead, as some advertisers threatened (Procter & Gamble for one), to a retrenchment in the national spot buck, some affiliates sought to have the networks hold the line against the union's demands. (Both AFTRA and management, at long last on Monday, seemed to agree that the blurb demands would mean approximately a 300% increase in the reimbursement to performers).

The great majority of the three-network programs this season are on film, and film program production will continue even if there is a strike against the makers of live and tape programs and all manner of blurbs. This led the networks to believe that they could withstand a strike for a long period without suffering unduly in the program area. CBS, NBC and ABC held meetings prior to last night's deadline to determine how they'd handle their schedules. In the main, they decided to dig up old tapes of live shows like Ed Sullivan (CBS) and Perry Como and Dinah Shore (NBC) and use them indefinitely. For the daylight hours, when live programming is predominant, rerun tapes of the live stanzas or half-hour film fill-ins were being dug out of the vaults and laid in readiness.

And in case IBEW and NABET do honor the picket lines of AFTRA and SAG, the networks have been preparing themselves for several weeks to use their own executives in lieu of regular camera and soundmen and the other technical personnel under IBEW or NABET jurisdiction.

TV's 'Sudden Death' Lament

gency huddles with the networks within the past couple of weeks, with the packagers screaming: "What are you trying to do to us?"

The crux of the huddling is to obtain some assurance that the networks will be more considerate of the production companies, burdened as they are with such heavy expenditures, and henceforth commit themselves to minimum of 26 weeks, thus preventing indiscriminate lopping off of costly shows. Otherwise, they claim, they can close shop.

Reducing program buying to a 13-week basis would have tremendous ramifications on the business. It's recalled only too well what happened a few years back when the industry developed mass ulcers after the old network radio pattern of 39 weeks (and even more frequently 52 weeks) was cut to 26. The networks, performers, writers, producers, directors, and even the sponsors and the agencies had to re-orient their thinking and working habits. That one, however, was hurdled.

But inviting a 13-week cycle of programming, particularly with tv production costs, is something else again. The packagers say flatly they cannot live with it; they must be geared to a 26-or-more production pattern to survive. And, in general, the virtual certainty of a 52-week selling season and a quick booting of shows would create administrative havoc around the networks.

Those who decry the "sudden death" formula point to the fact that par for the course on most tv program clicks have been those that survived an initial nervous 13 or even 26 weeks of slow starting. ABC-TV, for one, points to successes last season and this that only made it with patience and proper nursing. And NBC, which is chiefly responsible for causing the current anxieties, managed to parlay a near-casualty last season ("Laramie") into an established entry this season.

Thus a vicious cycle is developing. On the one hand the studios say they can't thrive on 13-week production deals. Some discontented clients with coin in weaker entries want to pull out after 13 (as happened at CBS last week), thus leaving the networks in the middle of a dilly of a situation.

from governmental restrictions. For one thing, he said FCC may give broadcasters more programming leeway by allowing them to plan their formats on the basis of community needs rather than fixed percentages of program types. He also cited withdrawal of FCC's Sec. 317 Public Notice and its onerous sponsor identification requirements.

"All of these developments," he said, "go in the direction of emancipating broadcasters and placing more reliance upon our ability to operate in good faith and in the public interest."

At variance with McCollough's theme was a speech by Howard H. Bell, NAB v.p. for industry affairs. Bell told a session on "Broadcasters and Politics" that the industry may have to fight to keep its right to editorialize. Bell cited a recent statement by Rep. John E. Moss (D-Calif.) voicing concern about alleged "abuse of editorializing" by licensees.

Best way to combat "misconceptions" held in government circles about broadcast editorializing, said Bell, is to get across "what we are dong, how we are doing it and why." He added: "Protection of your freedom makes it possible for you to best serve the public interest—and the public's interest is the government's."

In the same vein, Vincent T. Wasilewski, NAB v.p. for government affairs, said that many of the industry's headaches on Capitol Hill stem from a realization of the medium's power and a fear it will become as partisan as the press. The legislators should understand, Wasilewski added, that unlike newspapers, radio and television has never "painted with the brush of partisanship."

NAB: A Postscript

Washington, Nov. 15.

A postscript on the selection of a new president of the National Assn. of Broadcasters, a post which went to Florida Gov. LeRoy Collins

The field had been narrowed to three men. One of them, Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., removed himself to run for Vice President on the Republican ticket. He lost, and his future employment is unannounced.

The other, George V. Allen, director of the U.S. Information Agency and a career diplomat who held some of the most critical ambassadorships abroad at different times, was passed up on the theory that the broadcasting industry shouldn't take a top man out of the State Dept. at a crucial period in history. The Tobacco Institute, Inc., the national organization of tobacco manufacturers, announced a few days ago that Allen will resign from Government on Dec. 1 to become the institute's new president.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Three Atlanta television stations, WSB-TV, WAGA-TV and WLW-A, have pooled their efforts in getting out a folder titled "Your Finest Hours," giving an advance listing of best tv has to offer along lines of news, entertainment, information, education and inspiration.

A blurb explains to the 4,000 business men, educators, church leaders, teachers, et al., who get pamphlet:

". . . Programs listed on these pages point up the increasingly important role television is playing in the field of communications. They bespeak the high standards of quality the medium is setting for itself . . . and for the enjoyment and edification of its viewers.

"Your three network television stations in Atlanta are proud to offer these programs. They cordially invite you to be selective . . . to use this listing in scheduling 'your finest hours' with television.

Program listings are broken down into these categories: drama-music; current events and documentaries; children's; education and information; travel; community affairs; special interests (including sports); news; and religion.

WLW-T, Cincinnati, top independent tinter, contributed to "Color tv Weekend" with a three-day record of 34 programs and 22½ hours. Scheduling was about 50-50 station origination and NBC-TV feed. There were five-hour stretches of uninterrupted hues Friday (11) and Sunday (13) and firsts for 6:30 a.m. and 11 p.m. news and weather shows, with Peter Grant, Tony Sands and Jim Smith, in color all three days. The six-year old tv'er regularly carries NBC afternoon color programs and tints its own Ruth Lyons "50-50 Club" and Paul Dixon 90-minute shows Monday through Friday, the Saturday night "Western Hayride" hour and Bob Braun's Sunday teenage dance party.

Claimed as the No. 1 color market in the country, Cincy area's average is 5% compared to the national average of 3% of black and white sets in use, according to Robert E. Dunville, Crosley Broadcasting Corp. president.

Red Skelton's seasonal kickoff show, his all-pantomime turn before dignitaries of the United Nations, will be offered to five Iron Curtain countries for airing there. Prints of the program are being sent to the U. S. Embassies in Moscow, Budapest, Warsaw, Sofia and Prague by the U. S. Information Service.

Embassies will hold private screenings for Government officials and will then offer the prints to the television networks in each country free of charge for airing. Skelton was recently awarded U.S.I.A.'s Award for Distinguished Service for his assistance to the agency in spreading goodwill and understandi Videotape Center is enjoying a biz boom, according to John B. Lanigan, v.p. and general manager of Videotape Productions of New York.

Lanigan said the month of September set a new sales record for the company, October was even bigger, "and our studios are booked solid for the first two weeks in November—including Saturdays and Sundays."

During the first two weeks of November, videotape Center was scheduled to produce more than 45 commercials, to half-hour shows in the "Campy's Corner" series, and a considerable volume of last-minute political programs and announcements that were being rushed through in evening production sessions.

Catholic Apostolate Radio-Television-Advertising (CARTA) will hold its annual Communion Breakfast at the Waldorf-Astoria's grand ballroom next Sunday (20) following 9 a.m. mass at St. Patrick's Cathedral. Father Garrett S.J., who teaches advertising at Scranton U., will be featured speaker and Florence Henderson will head the entertainment.

in the first nine months of 1960 paid out around $3,700,000 in compensation to its radio affils.

At 9:30 today, the NBC Radio affils, of whom some 125 to 140 are expected, will have a closed meeting at the Plaza, ostensibly to elect officers and also to determine whether any mass protest or mass posie should be laid at NBC Radio's doorstep. NBC station relations' senior member, Harry Bannister, the web's chiefs, Bob Sarnoff and Bob Kintner, along with tw three others, will appear after the closed session. Save for Sarnoff, who is scheduled to address the Thursday luncheon meeting, they'll probably all address the radio station men. During the same meeting, NBC Radio will offer its sales presentation story. In the afternoon, tv affils will have their own closed meeting.

Thursday morning, it's time for the tv network. NBC-TV salesmen will offer up a second presentation, followed by the Sarnoff luncheon for both radio and tv station execs. The tv affils are expected to represent 150 or so of the stations in the NBC lineup, with many of the video outlets sending more than one exec to N. Y. for the annual powwow.

VARIETY-ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau covers one market. Each week the 10 top rated features for the one market will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the teasured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained..

produce two 60-minute film pilots in Hollywood for the '61-'62 tv season. One is "Three Men & a Girl," an action stanza built around the Italian Riviera, and "The Big Tent," which Jack Emanuel, former Warner Bros. tv story chief, is doing for the web. "Tent" shot backgrounds two weeks ago through the offices of the Cristiani Bros. circus.

The network is also likely to move more inside where tv specials are concerned. Dick Linkroum, director of specs for the web, is reportedly laying out a modus operandi for the increasing internal production of these one-shots, if only to better regulate the output. Increased internal production of NBC specials is not a fact, but it is a fact that the network brass, in line with the seeming upbeat of inside stuff, among the regular stanzas, is thinking of doing the same thing for Linkroum's boys.

Add to this flurry of product bearing the label of "made by NBC," the point that the web already has "Outlaws" on the air. It's a moderate success, and may have in some measure sprung the plan for doing more from within. Also add that Don Hyatt, of special projects, is doing (within the framework of Levy's department) a considerable number of programs that try to combine the elements of both entertainment and public affairs. Hyatt & Co. as pointed out in recent weeks, has six or seven pilots and series already in the works.

NBC-TV seemed to be turning to Inside production a year ago, but mainly ended up with product produced outside. Yet since then, the additions to the staff, according to NBC sources, have made it easier to carry out plans.

Program boss has an affinity for production work, having worked closely on the preparation of "Outlaws" and another NBC stanza, "The Shirley Temple Show." Now that Alan Courtney, his No. 2 man and chief administrator departed last week for a vicepresidency at MCA, all that remains for Levy to do at the moment is find a replacement so that he can continue to be free for actual production detail himself. To decision has been made as to Courtney's replacement, but, according to the latest word, Levy is looking outside.

Sam Schiff to Video Cue

Sam Schiff, formerly an exec producer for NBC-TV, has been named prexy of Video Cue prompting service.

Richard Packard, firm's board chairman, says Schiff gets a financial interest and a stock participation deal for 1961 well as becoming a member of the plans board.

Since leaving NBC, Schiff has been a consultant for film and tv development for foreign countries.

we passed the test in toledo!

The people of Toledo proved what we've been saying all along... Mel-O-Toons are enthusiastically welcomed by parents and teachers... as well as children up to 14 and 15. We'll show you the mail to back it up.

Here's what happened: Two of these new cartoons were shown in a fifteen-minute on-the-air audition over WSPD-TV. Viewers were asked to send in their opinions, with no prizes or incentives of any kind. In less than a week, over 400 replies arrived. All except five individuals were wildly enthusiastic. School principals said, "Excellent!" Parents said, "The kind of children's program we've been waiting for." Children said, "All of us loved them." One mother asked us "in the name of the next generation" please to keep up the standards set by Mel-O-Toons.

These delightful cartoons, based on the most popular children's records, can win the same response from your community. Integrated into one of your children's shows, they'll give your programming longer life, and the strong local support that's so vital today.

VARIETY-ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau covers one market. Each week the 10 top rated features for the one market will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

produce two 60-minute film pilots in Hollywood for the '61-'62 tv season. One is "Three Men & a Girl," an action stanza built around the Italian Riviera, and "The Big Tent," which Jack Emanuel, former Warner Bros. tv story chief, is doing for the web. "Tent" shot backgrounds two weeks ago through the offices of the Cristiani Bros. circus.

The network is also likely to move more inside where tv specials are concerned. Dick Linkroum, director of specs for the web, is reportedly laying out a modus operandi for the increasing internal production of these one-shots, if only to better regulate the output. Increased internal production of NBC specials is not a fact, but it is a fact that the network brass, in line with the seeming upbeat of inside stuff, among the regular stanzas, is thinking of doing the same thing for Linkroum's boys.

Add to this flurry of product bearing the label of "made by NBC," the point that the web already has "Outlaws" on the air. It's a moderate success, and may have in some measure sprung the plan for doing more from within. Also add that Don Hyatt, of special projects, is doing (within the framework of Levy's department) a considerable number of programs that try to combine the elements of both entertainment and public affairs. Hyatt & Co. as pointed out in recent weeks, has six or seven pilots and series already in the works.

NBC-TV seemed to be turning to inside production a year ago, but mainly ended up with product produced outside. Yet since then, the additions to the staff, according to NBC sources, have made it easier to carry out plans.

Program boss has an affinity for production work, having worked closely on the preparation of "Outlaws" and another NBC stanza, "The Shirley Temple Show." Now that Alan Courtney, his No. 2 man and chief administrator departed last week for a vicepresidency at MCA, all that remains for Levy to do at the moment is find a replacement so that he can continue to be free for actual production detail himself. To decisi has been made as to Courtney's replacement, but, according to the latest word, Levy is looking outside.

Sam Schiff to Video Cue

Sam Schiff, formerly an exec producer for NBC-TV, has been named prexy of Video Cue prompting service.

Richard Packard, firm's board chairman, says Schiff gets a financial interest and a stock participation deal for 1961 as well as becoming a member of the plans board.

Since leaving NBC, Schiff has been a consultant for film and tv development for foreign countries.

fense speech with a passionate air. His wife, played by Rachel Roberts, also had a couple of telling moments, memorably caught.

Other acting support was as glib as the writing, and Tony Richardson's direction gave the actors their head. Pity Osborne hadn't provided any horse-power. Otta.

Armchair Theatre

ABC's "Armchair Theatre" turned, as it sometimes does, into Couch Theatre with a psychological piece, Peggy and Lou Shaw's "The Cake Baker." The hour allowed Kim Stanley to stretch herself with a potent, and often moving, bout of hysteria, and thus justified itself. But any close inspection of motive and incident in the script would prove mighty barren.

Ed Norman (William Sylvester), and his neighbors, were somewhat baffled by the behavior of wife Millie (Kim Stanley), who went off into a deep-brown study from time to time, listening to the tinkle of an imaginary chandelier. In these vacant states, the girl was just not with it, and her daughter could slip out of the house unnoticed.

So why and wherefore these moods? Apparently, Millie was just not fulfilling herself, tied indoors with domestic chores and watching tv with Ed. So, instead of baking cakes for a fund-raising social at the local school, she volunteered to write the script for the revue. This angered Ed, who didn't care for her tapping the typewriter of an evening. He forced her to resign from the job, and Millie went back to baking cakes. Climax came with the show itself, when the girl was so upset that she exited screaming, and Ed, feeling sorry, could do nothing about it.

A pretty phony business, this. But given interest and some emotional power by Kim Stanley, a dab hand at mental chaos, and by the baffled resentment of William Sylvester. Support was adequate, and Alan Cooke's direction never really recovered from a ponderous start, lingering too long over the woman's frustration instead of speeding on to the cakes. Otta.

Roving Report

Usually quite a sharp reporting job, "Roving Report," put out for an early-evening 20 minutes by Independent Television News, forgot its cutting edge with "Women of Israel." They'd sent reporter Lynne Reid-Banks with a silent camera to the Jewish haven, superimposed a commentary on the filmed results, and the ensuing product was a tired travelog that wouldn't send a soul for an plane ticket.

Miss Reid-Banks used every weary cliche in the book to describe visits to a kibbutz, to Tel Aviv, to a children's community, to an encounter with Golda Meir, Israel's Foreign Minister. She managed to convey the superficial facts of the country, but she hadn't the imagination to illuminate them.

As there was no topical peg to hang the enthusiastic words upon, the report lacked urgency and impact. The lesson drawn should be that there is no vitality in a filmed essay. Nothing can replace the immediacy of the spoken word. In fact, this visit to Israel might just as well have been a day's jaunt to Bootle—which is a disregarded town in Britian. It had just about the same flavor. Ott

Showtime

This BBC-TV outing, which first set out to round up stars and tunes from stage successes, has now subsided into a routine gathering of acts, hosted by genial David Nixon. Chief interest of this one was provided by a couple of foreign imports. Denmark's Nina & Frederik, who've acquired a following through previous film clips, turned up live, and confirmed their suave charm. They had time for a calypso, "When Woman Say No," and a haunting folksy melody, "Listen to the Ocean," and whetted the appetite for more.

From the States, Carmen McRae emitted two standards, "Exactly Like You" and "Star Eyes," to passable effect. Connoisseurs know her as a good and smoky jazz singer, but she didn't shine in this setting. Better if she were slotted into some more intimate background.

Local warbler Malcolm Mitchell gave "For Me and My Gal" without offense, and some spirited music-hall gagging brought steady yocks for veteran Jimmy James and his two idiot feeds.

In fact, it was a tepid session which passed painlessly down the gullet. Nixon did his conjuring bit and introduced a misfiring film clip, showing him playing with fireworks with his young son. But he's an amiable character for a family audience. Maybe that's what's wrong with "Showtime"; it's so diffuse in its aim that it doesn't hit anyone in the vital spot. Graeme Muir's production was competent. Otta.

WRUL

compensation of 55% of their network rate, with WRUL in its capacity as salesman-producer retaining 45%. He's attempting to work out a pattern where such affiliates would carry sponsored programming on the compensation basis and would carry sustainers sans compensation but with the right to sell the shows locally subject to recapture.

Indication of the type of sponsoring that's available came in Met's first major sale, the election coverage. Owens-Corning Fiberglass and Philco shared the tab from 9:30 p.m. till the final count was in, with Owens-Corning bankrolling 45 minutes of Spanish coverage and Philco 15 minutes of English during every hour. Before Met entered the picture, Lemmon last summer had sold a similar package, a half-hour a day of the Rome Olympics, to IT&T. Outboard Marine and Firestone, the latter getting a mail pull of 50,000 on a key-ring giveaway.

But Brent hopes to sell one-fourth of his daily schedule as well soon after he begins the expanded operation. That daily sked will consist of 12 hours of Spanish and four of English, beamed to Lati America; three hours of Portuguese, also to Latin America; six hours of English and an hour of French to Europe and Africa. Shows would consist of extensive news and stock market reports, musical programming, including name Spanish deejays and personalities as well as live concerts and opera, and informational feature programs.

Brent and Met prexy John John Kluge are high on the acceptance of WRUL abroad, largely because of the fact that the only other shortwave programming emanating from the U. S. is the Voice of America, which as a governmental instrument tends to be regarded as propaganda. Moreover, much of the WRUL programming would be transmitted over local facilities, bearing the blessing of local broadcasters though identified as to source.

New Studio Setup

The possibilities and potentials are so multifold, Brent says, that his present problem is deciding what not to do. Consequently, though envisioning other services, he's restricting the operation to straight broadcasting and production of commercials, though seeing other applications later on. What's holding things up right now is construction—a new, modern studio setup is going up above N. Y.'s Paris Theatre and when that's completed, WRUL swings into its expanded program. Additional construction for the future would be the enlargement of WRUL's transmitting facilities in Boston.

Television Reviews

sumed greater appeal, then he erred in judgment, because it washed out the documentary purpose of his story.

His principal character, a housewife who has become immobilized by frustration and loss of identity, was not the "average" woman she was supposed to be, and for all the distortion of her problem she still seemed unduly sorry for herself. As played (or overplayed) by Phyllis Thaxter, she was not very believable in her entrapment nor particularly sympathetic. Her husband (Michael Strong) was idealized in the best soaper tradition, and many a femme viewer ailing with the same occupational disease must have felt the girl in the story had it made.

Worst of all, the script offered a dangerously romantic pink pill for the cure of the "disenchantment syndrome," namely to find thyself and be thyself—"give yourself a rose." It's easier said, especially by the untypical girl in the story, who had had a good education and once had written poetry, than done.

In brief, the story part of the show simply did not adequately bear out the str ight documentary part. The latter, with Pauline Frederick reporting, offered the only useful information, from the fact that "housewife's fatigue" is a new national problem, to the sum-up that it's chiefly caused by the desire of women to live up to the perfect image of the American housewife, as depicted in national women's magazines and in television commercials. A panel of two psychologists threw some light on the problem but offered little towards a remedy, and the analysis is left to stand as an implicit indictment of the contemporary system of living.

In view of what was blamed on tv commercials, it was almost obscene that Purex did not change its advertising tack for this program but continued to show happy, perfect housewives whose problems go merrily down the drain when they use Trend, Sweetheart Soap and Dutch Cleanser. Les.

ARTISTS' SHOWCASE
With Louis Sudler, George Stone, Anne Perillo Michuda, Joseph Gallichio orch
Producer: Don Marcotte
Director: David Barnhizer
30 Mins.; Sun. (alt.), 2:30 p.m.
WNBQ, Chicago (color)

It's noble of a local station to offer exposure to young operatic talent and musical virtuosi on Sunday afternoons, but WNBQ's "Artists' Showcase" is so full of starch that it's almost uncomfortable to watch. It's possible to treat the longhair arts with dignity without being frigidly formal.

The defect seems to go beyond commentator Louis Sudler's first program nervousness; rather, it appears to be conceptual. Everyone involved in the premiere show (6) was inflicted with the stiffness, from the frozen-faced members of Joseph Gallicchio's light concert orchestra to the fellows who framed those rigid camera shots. A less awesome attitude toward "the classics" could perhaps save future shows from rigor mortis.

Idea of the new alternate week series is to give young vocal, instrumental and ballet artists from the Chicago area an opportunity to perform professionally. It should be worth something on their resumes, too, that they were selected by a committee of distinguished longhairs, which includes Dr. Rudolph Ganz, Dr. Thor Johnson and Walter Hendl.

Actually, the program is not as highbrow as it pretends to be, with all the selections in the initialer falling into the pop classics category, apparently in the interests of playing it safe. Lyric soprano Anne Perillo Michuda, a fine talent worth the showcasing, sang only two numbers, "Un Bel Di" from "Madame Butterfly" and "Baubles, Bangles and Beads." For opera buffs it must have seemed th merest sample of her abilities.

WNBQ's staff orchestra, an excellent and always well-rehearsed ensemble, performed three light works, two of which were on the saccharine side. Musically, the smorgasbord was all relish with nothing to sink the choppers into.

Program will alternate, sustaining, with half-hour films of noted classical artists. Les.

ITC is thinking of doing another Cole special, and according to ITC board chairman Michael Nidorf, other internationally known artists are interested in getting on the world-girdling vidtape bandwagon. Beauty of the ITC arrangement is that an English berth is assured and failing a network berth in the U. Coast ASCAPers Mute Squawks at Cuts In Oct. Dividend; Execs Defend Awards

Hollywood, Nov. 15.

Beefs were few at special meeting held last Thursday (10) of the Coast division of American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, called by prexy Stanley Adams and his exec board to discuss recent complaints by both songwriters and publishers over recent cuts in ASCAPers' October dividend.

Approximately 200 composers and lyricists heard Adams and several other execs say that ASCAP had no alternative to recent consent decree it reached with the Dept. of Justice. Coast ASCAPers were calm from the overture of gathering to the finale.

Adams explained to his membership the reasons why the Society had initiated awards setup. The awards are an essential move on the part of ASCAP insomuch that it gave those writer-members an opportunity to participate in additional coin for works that seldom, if at all, are subject to performing fees. He, of course, was pointing to those ASCAPers that write longhair works and special material that is used in niteries and equal places that do not fall under ASCAP's watchful performance eye. ASCAP's awards setup calls for 5% of the org's annual income to be taken from the top and set aside for the awards. ASCAP's income also fell to about 5% for the October dividend.

Another reason pitched to the gathering as to why ASCAPers were taking a coin cut in their quarterly melon was that performance credits have jumped from 28,000,000 to 35,000,000, meaning that the income per credit shrunk accordingly. The big hassle among the ASCAPers was the cut in distribution, but very little comment was raised on the issue at the concluave.

On short-lived dramatic moment was brought about when Leonard Feather, the jazz author and ASCAP member, took the floor and demanded to know what was being done to prevent the skip and jump procession that was underway by ASCAPers to BMI.

Latter org of late has been swinging over a number of ASCAPers with the tempting offers of more annual coi and guaranteed contracts.

Looking at the ASCAP problem realistically, it's the composers who tune the theatrical and tv films who are perturbed at current setup. They are not interested in whether it's the fault of the Justice Dept. that insists on the consent decree or whether the administrati by-passing them.

Jackie Gleason to Host AFM Band Test Finals

Detroit, Nov. 15.

Jackie Gleason will act as host for the national playoffs of the Best New Dance Band of 1960 contest. The competition, sponsored by the American Federation of Musicians, will bring 10 bands, chosen from the 176 bands in 65 cities, to this city's Cobo Hall for the finals on Nov. 21.

Members of the winning orch will fly to New York to appear on NBC-TV's "Saturday Prom" Nov. 26. The winning band also will play a two-week engagement at the Flamingo Hotel in Vegas.

Japanese Diskeries Nix Violent Themes

Tokyo, Nov. 15.

In line with the soft pedaling in the entertainment fields here of works dealing with violence, Toshiba Records withdrew two numbers from its new sales list.

These were "Akuto Yaro" (Bad Guy) and "Colt Serenade," both sung by Tetsuro Tanba, a hard-boiled tv talent. Songs are punctuated with the sound of pistol shots.

Ted Lewis Bullish On Brit. Disk Biz; Presley's Hot Pace

London, Nov. 15.

The Elvis Presley disk of "It's Now Or Never" must be the fastest selling platter ever here, according to British Decca Records chairman E. R. Lewis, with 770,000 copies grabbed in its first two-and-half weeks of release. Lewis made the claim at the company's annual stockholders meet last week, when speaking in bullish terms of Decca Records biz as a whole.

After referring to improved results in the year to March, 1960, due to cuts in expenditure and greater production efficiency accruing from research and money spent on modernization of plant, Lewis declared "we have never felt more confident" about biz, indicated by results in the seven months of the current year. He said there's been slight drop in

MINOR CHANGES IN AWARDS SETUP

The National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences will stick substantially to the voting format of last year in the selection of the 1961 Grammy awards despite squawks from several corners on the '60 nominations. This year, however, members nominations may be supplemented in various categories.

Because of the vast number of releases from September, 1959, to November, 1960, the eligibility of dates of releases, and because of the possibility of overlooking some noteworthy achievements during this time, NARAS has called upon the nominations committee to carefully review the releases in a number of categories and to supplement the member's nominations by no more than three additional nominations.

For example, in the jazz categories, the members will initially submit their five choices. Each record company will similarly submit five choices. The membership is then mailed a total list of all selections thus nominated and asked to vote for five in each category in which they wish to vote. The five selections in each category receiving the most member votes will then be placed on the nominations list.

In addition, committee of NARAS members with the broadest possible exposure to jazz releases will be selected by the Boards of governors and such committee will select no more than three recordings they deem noteworthy. In the event selections are ruplicated between members' nominations and those of the committee, the three choices of the committee will be reduced by one for every duplication.

In this way, members, and members alone, will vote on up to eight nominations, five of which will be their original choices. The NARAS board feels that this system will give members a broader voting base and also afford them the ben-

UA Riding High On Tidal Wave Of Film Themes

United Artists Records is riding high on the current pic theme music wave in the single market. Following on the heels of click single theme releases from such films as "The Unforgiven," "The Apartment" and "Never on Sunday," the UA label has come up with its fastest seller to date in the Ferrante & Teicher duo-piano slice of the "Exodus" theme, which went over the 100,000 mark a couple of weeks it was issued.

UA after Records v.p. and general manager Art Talmadge sees the pic music as not only sparking the sagging single sales market, but also bringing back a better class of music. Impact of the pic themes has been helped by the close promotional tie-ins with the film playdates. That was evidenced in the case of Al Caiola's "Magnificent Seven" disk which started off

The recent defection of a couple of dozen cleffers from the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers to Broadcast Music Inc. is pointing up the growing importance of the performance payoff for background music in television. A central factor in the switch from ASCAP to BMI's is the the latter's substantially upped payoff for tv theme, background and cue music over its former rates. At the present time, BMI, in fact, is paying writers of new theme music far more than they can earn under the ASCAP system.

It's figured that BMI is now paying publishers and writers a total of 30c per half-hour show per station for a combination of theme and other incidental music. ASCAP's system of paying off new themes, etc., at the rate of one-tenth of the rate of a full performance makes it impossible for an ASCAP writer to get any significant coin from this area. ASCAP, however, does top BMI's payments for theme where a so-called "qualifying" work, or standard which has obtained 20,000 or over featured performances, is used for a theme. But this only pertains to a relatively small number of tunes in ASCAP's catalog. ASCAP cut back the payoff on new themes to prevent this type of material from racking up a disproportionate amount of performance credits and minimizing the temptation of tv producers to go into the music business to share ASCAP's melon.

The increased BMI payoff has made it possible for this licensing organization to give attractive guarantees to the background writers under longterm deals. It's figured that they will be able to earn these guarantees without too much difficulty in view of the heavy programming of filmed shows on tv.

BMI has moved into the background music field in order to offer a rounded repertory to users of music. Television is now the dominant source of revenue for the performing rights societies and hence the necessity of controlling a repertory of music which the tv broadcasters need to use. At the present time, there are far more shows on tv using music only incidentally, than there are standard music shows which involve featured song performances.

Satchmo Suspending Tour for UA Pic Role

Louis Armstrong will take a layoff of several weeks from his current tour in Africa to participate in a United Artists picture, "Paris Blues" to be shot in Paris. Armstrong starts the production Dec. 6.

One of the unusual features of this layoff for the band is that it will be paid in full during the hiatus.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Teresa Brewer (Coral): "HAVE YOU EVER BEEN LONELY" (Shapiro-Bernstein*) is set up for a new round of spins via this vibrant vocal attack. "WHEN DO YOU LOVE ME" (Moss Rose†) has a ballad lilt that's worked into an attractive spinning item.

Aretha Franklin (Columbia): "LOVE IS THE ONLY THING" (Omell*) has an impressive beat and a persuasive vocal that will get a spinning buildup from jocks who care about their programming. "TODAY I SING THE BLUES" (Consolidated*) displays a blues styling that usually goes better in the album area but is strong enough to win attention for this new thrush.

Phil Napoleon (Capitol): "GOOD CLEAN FUN" (Sunbeam†) gets a sock Dixieland instrumental treatment. "ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS" (Sunbeam) doesn't grow as well in the Dixieland setting. Both tunes are out of the legitimer "Tenderloin."

Jack Pleis Orch (Decca): "PEPE" (Shapiro-Bernstein*) is lightheartedly instrumental interpretation of the title song from the upcoming Columbia pic with a pleasing bounce that captures deejay spins. "STRANGE FEELING" (Chappell*) has nothing unusual to offer in its instrumental conception. The tune is from UA's "Force of Impulse."

The Fleetwoods (Dolton): "I LOVE YOU SO" (Commodore*) is a slow rocking ballad that falls into a familiar groove. "CONFIDENTIAL" (Prestige*) has a pleasant ballad feel but the lyric line is hard to hold up.

Ronnie Height (Era): "NO DATE" (Bamboo*) swings with a beat and a lyric angle that's built for teen appeal and could hit a spinning takeoff. "MR. BLUES I PRESUME" (Pattern*) could get the kids hopping.

Bobby Beck (ABC-Paramount): "THE DOOR IS ALWAYS OPEN" (Famous*) could open up spinning avenues for this new singer who knows how to handle a big ballad. "YOU GOT ALL MY LOVE" (E. B. Marks†) puts the singer in a free-swinging mood and he handles it well.

The Ivy Three (Shell): "ALONE IN THE CHAPEL" (Saxon†) puts lov in a reverent setting that will win over some fans because of its rousing vocal sincerity. "HUSH LITTLE BABY" (Saxon†) works along a pleasant lilting line for fair results.

Lester Lanin Orch (Epic): "BLUE TANGO ROCK" (Mills*) is LeRoy Anderson's litter hopped up for tecnage approval with the kind of beat they can step in a big way. "THIS COULD BE THE START OF SOMETHING" (Rosemeadow*) is a brightly paced instrumental side.

Al Kasha (Brunswick): "SING" (Merrimac) attractive swinger fashioned along an effective blues mold. "ONE OF THEM" (Merrimac) okay wailer that's pegged for teeners with its simple beat and swinging lyric.

Christmas Records

For the hipsters who are dreaming of a "cool" Christmas, Atlantic Records has the Modern Jazz Quartet on a two-sided interpretation of "God Rest Ye Merry, Gentlemen" called "ENGLAND'S CAROL" (MJQ Music*) . . . Peggy Lee interp lates "Jingle Bells" into a lively slicing of "I LIKE A SLEIGHRIDE" (Maytime†), that's backed with a warm "CHRISTMAS CAROUSEL" (Denslow*) for Capitol . . . Sammy Kaye Orch has a melodic version of the classic "SILVER BELLS" (Paramount*) an internationally flavored "A VERY MERRY CHRISTMAS TO YOU" (St. Nicholas*) for Decca . . . Lor Crane bounces niftily across "JINGLE-BELL ROCK" (Cornell*) and gets a pleasant sound into "CHRISTMAS IN THE COUNTRY" (Jay-Bee*) on the Boardwalk label.

*ASCAP. †BMI.

Best Bets

JOHNNY MATHIS (Columbia) . . . . . HOW TO HANDLE A WOMAN / While You're Young

Johnny Mathis' "How to Handle a Wom (Chappell) is handle with a vocal finesse that will take this fine ballad from the legitimer "Camelot" into payoff circles. "While You're Young" (Cahtry*) has a melodic ballad mood that will win a good sh of turntable tim*

BROOK BENTON (Mercury) . . . . . FOOLS RUSH IN / Someday You'll Want Me To Want You

Brook Benton's "Fools Rush In" (BVC) gets an effective rendition that's surefire for a big spinning takeoff. "Someday You'll Want Me to W nt You" (Duchess*) gets a potent vocal treatment.*

SAM COOKE (RCA Victor) . . . . . SAD MOOD / Love Me

Sam Cooke's "Sad Mood" (Kags†) is in his previous "Ch Gan," clicko groove and will pay off as well over the spinnin circuit. "Love Me" (Kags†) has a mild ballad feel.

JOEY VILLA & ROYAL TEENS (Capitol) . . . . . ALL-AMERICAN GIRL / MICKEY MOUSE GOT A GIRL FRIEND

Joey Villa & Royal Teens' "All-Americ Girl" (World) is a lively s'ice that gets solid buildup from a rousing choral support to bring it into the hot spinning br ckets. "Mickey Mouse Got a Girl Friend" (Sweeteen-Wildcat*) runs at a hectic pace that could catch some juve appreciation.*

ADAM WADE (Coed) . . . . . GLORIA'S THEME / Dreamy

Adam Wade's "Gloria's Theme" (Robbins) is fashioned in ballad groove with a vocal approach that sure to make it a winner. Theme is from the Metro pic "Butterfield 8." "Dreamy" (Octave*) is built along strong ballad lines and it, has a breakthrough potenti.'*

HOAGY LANDS (Judi) . . . . . CRY SOME TEARS / Lighted Window

Hoagy Lands' "Cry Some Tears" (Russbert) ors at a rocking blues pac with a vocal impact that ll grab top play all over. "Lighted Windows" (Russbert) ver trong slicing of a bl s s'owing style that's quit

THE FLAMINGOS (End) . . . . . YOUR OTHER LOVE / Lovers Gotta C

The Flamingo' "Your Ot Love" (Brittany) has a bright rhythmic appeal that could tep ut for big spinning returns. "Lovers Gotta Cry" (Home Folks) is weepy rocking ballad groove that most teeners find impressive.

'Songs of Gilded Age' Foreshadows Shape Of P.D. Standards to Come

A kingsize gift book, "Songs of the Gilded Age" (Golden Press; $6.50), is of interest to the music biz along the lines of the shape of things to come, because any number of popular standards aren't far distant from reaching that point of diminishing ASCAP returns as public domain material. As selected and edited by Margaret Bradford Boni, arranged for the piano by Norman Lloyd (excellent color illustrations by Lucille Corcos), the words and music of American pops from "the Elegant '80s and Gay '90s" aren't as pointed in their p.d. potentials as the excerpts from the first decade of the 20th century.

Fifty-six years later, when initial and renewal 28-year terms expire, available for anthologies of this nature are standards by Glen MacDonough & Victor Herbert, George M. Cohan, Carrie Jacobs-Bond, Edward Madden & Theodore F. Morse, Harry B. Smith & Herbert, Andrew B. Sterling & Harry Von Tilzer, John F. Palmer & Charles B. Ward, William Jerome & Jean Schwartz, Ren Shields & George Evans, R. C. McTherson & James T. (Tim) Brymn, Sidney Brown & Scott Joplin, John Philip Sousa, not to mention the pre-1900s ditties.

Anthologis Boni has several kindred books to her credit and she has rranged these well under categories such as Plac , Love, Girls, Memories, Stories and Patriotism. William Schuman, composer and president of the Juilliard School of Music, wrote th Mrs. Boni has preceded c g with a pithy but interesting anecdote.

Publisher Herb Marks gets elaborate credit from the editor for his assist on this volume which is attractively gotten up with full pianofort arrangements for ready group-around-th -upright community songs. The songs are consistently memorable and, keyed to the historic period, are goodhum red closeups on the moods and mores of the times. Abel.

Album Reviews

"Belafonte Returns To Carnegie Hall" (RCA Victor). This is another powerhouse package production due for big sales impact. Recorded at a Carnegie Hall concert earlier this year, this offering spotlights a varied group of singers, headed by topliner Harry Belafonte, in a colorful program of folk music with broad appeal. Belafonte gets strong support from such two firstrate femme folksingers, Odetta and Miriam Makeba, while the Belafonte Singers and Chad Mitchell Trio are excellent ensembles.

Mantovani Orch: "Music From 'Exodus' and Other Great Themes" (London). Mantovani's solid hold on the instrumental album field will continue with this LP entry of themes from pix and legit. The upcoming big push on the music from "Exodus" will give it an important marquee lure but the Mantovani style is still the big draw for the disk buyer. He's in his top lush, romantic and melodic groove on the music from "Alamo," "A Summer Place," "The Sundowners," "Irma La Douce," "Carousel," "The Sound of Music" and others to complement the two themes from "Exodus."

Judy Garland: "That's Entertainment" (Capitol). This is one of Judy Garland's most exciting sets in some time. She's in top vocal form working over a standout repertoire to Jack Marshall's slick orch backing. The big arrangements on several numbers are credited to Conrad Salinger who's worked with the singer before and knows just what is needed to grab listener's attention. She mixes the sentimental ballad with the uptempo with the ease and assurance that few singers today can master.

The Chipmunks & David Seville: "Around the World" (Liberty). David Seville, whose square handle is Ross Bagdasarian, has whipped up a flock of newies pegged on an international level for his Chipmunks to render with their novelty approach. Some of the originals like "Stuck in Arabi " and "The Pidgin English Hula" will attract lotsa spinning attention. In all, it should be strong seller this Christmas season.

"Abyssinian Baptist Gospel Choir" (Columbia). This is a sampling of gospel singing in its most stirring form. The 120-voice grou under the direction of Professor Alex Bradford are caught in the act at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, Newark, N. J., and they whip up the kind of vocal storm that's seldom been captured on a platter. The gospel buffs will run to Julie Harris: "Poems and Letters of Emily Dickinson" (Caedmon). The sensitive words penned by New England poet Emily Dickinson have found an understanding voice-box in Julie Harris. The actress takes some of Miss Dickinson's most famous works and reads them with passion and illumination. It's a plus for the spoken word catalog.

Arthur Lyman: "On Broadway" (HiFi). Arthur Lyman brings his exotic Island sounds to Shubert Alley for lots of audio kicks. Lyman's group consists of only four men but they swing around through such a variety of instruments that a full-blown and unsual sound is developed. Up for a Lyman treatment here are the scores from "My Fair Lady," "The King and I," "South Pacific" and "Porgy and Bess."

Ray Ventura Singers: "Sing Along In French" (Everest). Friends of the sing along disks can now spread into basic French. Ray Ventura's orch and singers supply a happy and easy-going mood as they lead the way over such familiar Gallic items as "C'est Si Bon," "La Vie En Rose," "Parlez Moi D'Amour" and "Sous Le Ciel De Paris," among others. The package has an authentic Paris punch but would have benefitted if a text of the lyrics had been Dinah Washington: "I Concentrate On You" (Mercury). Thi set puts Dinah Washington in a straight ballad mood. It's a groove in which she's hard to beat. Singer has an understanding of lyri values that gets the message across in no uncertain times. Working over Cole Porter's "I Concentrate On You" to the hilt, she heads across the blues and ballad field with no letup and makes such other items as "Good Morning Heartache," "While We're Young" and "Daybreak" stand up for new spinning chances.

Jan Bart: "More Best Loved Jewish Songs" (Request). This is a natural followup to his previous "Best Loved Jewish Songs." Bart has developed a strong following in the Jewish song cult because of his spirited interpretations and this package will sustain his hold. Although it's a limited market, Request is smart not to overlook it.

Count Basie Orch: "The Count Basie Story" (Roulette). Count Basie's 25th anni as a bandleader is celebrated in elegant style by the Roulette label. Diskery has boxed a two-LP presentation with a folio of text and photograph tracing Basie's bio. The disks show off the Basie beat in fine style and recapture the musical moods of his long-lasting swinging style. The text of "The Basie Story" in the booklet is the work of Leonard Feather who put it together with a fine sense of the bandleader's time and importance.

Sunny Gale: "Sunny" (Warwick). The brassy, belting style, which gave this songstress her "Wheel of Fortune" hit some years ago, gets a full workout in this folio of songs. She's better on the rhythm tunes like "Did You Ever See A Dream Walking?" "Su ," "Blacksmith Blues," Latin version of "Near You," "Everybody Loves My Baby" and "Dance With A Dolly," than on some of the softer ballads beyond her emotional range.

Col Sparking 'Camelot' LP Drive With Special Advance 3-Inch Disk

The postponement of the Broadway opening of the Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loew musical "Camelot" has sparked an advance sale gimmick by Columbia Records which will have the original cast album.

To pick up "Camelot" sales in November and early December before the cast album is released Col has prepared a special three-inch disk that can be bought for the price of the album and exchanged at the retailers for the cast package when it is finally released. Diskery expects to have the album in the stores by Dec. 15. The show opens on Broadway Dec. 3.

Col previously used an advance sale gimmick for "Flower Drum Song" and "Sound of Music." Both show albums were mid-December releases. In the cas of "Flower Drum Song" nd "Sound of Music," however, nly gift certificates were used.

Meantime, Bobby Shad's Time Records is readying a release of an instrumental "Camelot" before the show's Broadway opening. The recording, arranged and conducted by Hugo Montenegro, will be on the market to coincide with the original N. Y. opening date of Nov. 19.

How George Shearing puts his personal Shure microphone to work for his group...

In a superbly original small group such as the incomparable George Shearing quintet . . . where the effect is complete intimacy (even in larger rooms) . . . where tonal balance is critical . . . where extremes in dynamic contrast are integrated into every set, a wide-range unidirectional† microphone (such as the Shure UNIDYNE III) is an absolute necessity.

It will "focus" on an instrument (or a voice) without picking up audience noise or random background sounds. It keeps the instrumentalists in balance over the loudspeakers . . . and allows soloists to project the most subtle nuances and shadings above louder or more percussive instruments. No microphone can improve performance—but a poor (or unfamiliar) microphone can distort even the best balanced group.

...the sound is you

By consistently using his personal Shure UNIDYNE III microphone (rather than taking "pot luck"), George Shearing knows exactly how it performs—where it should be placed for the tonal balance he wants. There's never a question as to what his Unidyne can do—and what it can't.

George Hamilton Switches to Victor; Vaughn Monroe to MGM; Other Deals

George Hamilton IV, formerly with ABC-Paramount Records, has been signed by Chet Atkins, RCA Victor's head of operations in Nashville. A member of the "Grand Ole Opry" cast, Hamilton record in Nashville.

Comedian Dick Shawn has signed a three-year pact with RCA Victor. He was tagged by Dick Peirce, Victor's Coast a&r chief. Shawn's initial album will be cut on the Coast in February prior to his Las Vegas engagement at the Flamingo Hotel. Mel Brooks will write new material for the package.

MGM: Vaughn Monroe

Vaughn Monroe is set to come out under the MGM banner. The longtime RCA Victor disker will debut on MGM with "The Song of the Skier" and "Learn To Ski By Mail."

Also joining MGM last week were Hank & David, a teenage duo from Bethlehem, Pa. Team's initial push will be on "Lop-Sided, Over-Loaded."

Roulette: Barry Sisters

The Barry Sisters have been re-signed to a new contract by Roulette Records. The new pact calls for the recording of both LPs and singles in English and Yiddish. The Barry girls, Claire and Merna, began a tour of England Monday (14).

Royal: Diana Darrin

Actress Diana Darrin has been set to a one-year deal by Magnet Recorders' Royal Records. Miss Darrin, who recently completed "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" for 20th-Fox, will cut a minimum of eight sides during her year with the label.

Strand: Carpenter, Haskell

Thelma Carpenter and Jack Haskell have been added to the Strand label by disker's general manager Sidney Pastner. They'll record for both the LP and singles field. Their first release will hit the market after the first of the year.

Vassar: Sammy Licano

Sam Licano has joined the Vassar roster. Licano, who has been featured in clubs in Japan and Korea, will bow on the label in early December.

UA Records

slowly but rapidly gained ground as the picture went in large scale release. The single hits not only have helped soundtrack LP sales, but also other unrelated albums by such artists as Ferrante & Teicher.

Talmadge pointed out that at the present time there are more pic themes selling than there have been in years. The "Theme From 'The Sundowners'," for instance, now has six versions available; "Green Leaves of Summer," from "The Alamo" score, has seven singles in release; there are nine versions of "Never on Sunday;" two versions of "Ballad of The Alamo" and several other assorted pic singles in release.

The greater accent of strong musical backgrounds in films is the key factor in the disk sales upsurge, Talmadge said. Elvis Presley's vocals in the film, "G.I. Blues," are expected to take off for RCA Victor while UA Records is banking on a pic title song release by Steve Lawrence & Eydie Gorme on "Facts of Life," from the Bob Hope-Lucille Ball starrer. The "Exodus" theme will get its major push when the film is released in December.

General categories covered in the 39 awards are classical, pop, technical (engineering and art), jazz, folk, children, rhythm & blues, and country & western. An additional jazz category has been added to the list of awards. It's that of a jazz composition of more htan five minutes duration. The Board of Governors is also considering giving an annual award to someone within the industry who has made an overwhelming contribution to it. Also, an award for liner notes is being considered.

Plans are now being made to get a tv special early in '61 on which to announce the Grammy awards.

Jazz World to Honor Hub's Hip Rev. O'Connor

Boston, Nov. 15.

Rev. Norman J. O'Connor, C.S.P., Catholic chaplain at Boston U. and of its Newman Foundation, widely known for his work in behalf of jazz, is being honored by his friends in the jazz world and the Newman Foundation with a testimonial dinner at the Statler Hilton ballroom on Nov. 28.

Marian McPartland is bringing her trio fro New York, Teddy King will sing, and Herman Chittison, jazz ianist, currently at the Hotel Lenox in Hub, will play. In addition, Duke Ellington and Dave Brubeck are planning to fit the event into their schedules.

Father O'Connor is donating proceeds from the testimonial dinner to the Newman Foundation.

Rayven Vs. Levine Tests Right of U.S. Pic Distrib To Alter Foreign Score

Question of whether a U.S. film distributor has the right to do what he wants with the score of a foreign film is coming to head in a hassle between Rayven Music and Joseph E. Levine. N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Owen McGivern last week denied Rayven a temporary injunction which would have blocked Levine's Embassy Pictures and Levi-McHugh Music International from altering and distributing the score in a film called "Le Loi," which was renamed here "Where The Hot Wind Blows." Rayven now plans to sue for damages claiming that the value of its original score has been hurt.

Rayven's suit alleges that in 1958 Mondia Music, an Italian firm, assigned Roman Vland's score to producer Jacque Bar, producer of the film, and that in assigning the pic rights to Embassy, the producer prohibited altering of the score. For the pic's release here, Levine had Jimmy McHugh write a new tune to be placed at the opening of the film. The ads and promotion are emphasizing the McHugh tune, with lyrics by Buddy Kaye, which Rayven claims is detrimental to the Vland score and the soundtrack set issued by Everest Records.

In answering the complaint, Levine claims that the contract between Embassy and Bar gives the distributor the right to "dub, redub and make alterations in the film." Rayven, however, claims that in film parlance the right to dub and redub applies to the spoken word only.

Also in answering the complaint, Levine stated that he had made a $592,000 investment in the pic for its U.S. release, including $17,000 to the Ames Bros. for singing the title song. The Ames Bros. waxing was released by RCA Victor.

Rayven was assigned the publication rights to Vland's score in the U.S. and Canada by Mondia Music and had been working on a title song push, with lyrics by Fred Ebb, when Levine moved in with the McHugh melody.

Barbirolli Takes Over Stoki's Houston Baton

Houston, Nov. 15.

Sir John Barbirolli has been named successor to Leopold Stokowski as conductor of the Houston Symphony Orchestra for the 1961-62 season. Stokowski gave notice last spring that he will conclude his music directorship here at the end of this season.

Barbirolli is chief conductor of the Halle Orchestra of Manchester, England, and will continue in that position while serving the Houston orchestra.

Modugno's 'Winner-Take-Nothing' Idea

Italy in Uproar Still as Society Seeks to Control Rigged Song Festivals

Rome, Nov. 15.

A blow to the mounting frenzy for song festivals was dealt in late summer by SIAE, the Italian Society of Authors & Publishers, whose prerogatives include that of collecting all royalties on songs for the benefit of composers and lyric writers. Taking the stand that song festivals, such as the annual giant San Remo and Naples affairs which can launch a winning song and induce millions to buy it, unduly influence the public's taste and are discriminatory toward the rank and file of song writers, SIAE ruled that royalties on prize-winning songs would henceforth not be paid to the authors at all but would be poured into a special song-writers community chest.

The measure has been greeted by cat-calls, applause and words without end, much harsher words, needless to say, than those that get into song-lyrics. Promoters of the big festivals are incensed for, obviously, enforcement of the provision will stop most composers from submitting their work in future festivals. Few song-writers, in fact, are expected to be inspired to sing about "amore" at the thought of enriching a community chest.

SIAE, on the other hand, has the backing of hundred of its members who have long felt that the festivals are rigged in favor of songs already bought up by record companies and film firms who will then stop at nothing to promote them.

While the furor lasts and the next San Remo festival date approaches with no sign of a compromise, a proposal has been put forward by Author Singer Domenico ("Volare") Modugno: let the festivals be held but let them refrain from grading songs and giving prizes be for the space of one year. At each Festival let prizes be given to the compositions submitted in the festival of the year before. At the end of a whole year the public can be counted on to have made up its mind which song it liked best and played more often. The judges will thus have something to go on.

But as one San Remo organizer pointed out: to hold a song festival without a closing prize night would be like asking a crowd to a football game in which no side was allowed to win.

sales during the summer months, mainly export, but the fall in turnover had already been more than recovered with the October figures showing an exceptional increase over those of 1959. Lewis spoke also of "quite an upsurge" in the demand for longplays and anticipated that the upswing would be maintained.

The Decca topper said that expenditure reductions more than offset an increase in distribution costs and "particularly intense competition" faced by its U.S. subsid, London Records. He declared that Decca had been able to increase the efficiency of London Records and results this year were better than those of the same period in 1959.

In a reference to the Government's sales tax on disks, Lewis reckoned that the new Chancellor of the Exchequer might consider transferring some part of this to "tape recorders that pour into the country from abroad" with no liability for such tax.

Noted jazz historian, MARSHALL STEARNS, author of the STORY OF JAZZ, takes notes for his new book on jazz and the dance from an interview tape that he plays back on his NORELCO 'Continental' tape recorder. DR. STEARNS is Director of the INSTITUTE OF JAZZ STUDIES and Associate Professor of English at HUNTER COLLEGE. "I make constant use of my NORELCO 'Continental' when doing field work for my books and articles," states DR. STEARNS. "Here, the most significant feature is three speed versatility. I find that the extremely economical 1⅞ speed is ideal for recording interviews from which I later take material needed for my work. The other speeds are exceptional for their ability to capture the full fidelity of music and voice." The NORELCO 'Continental' is a product of North American Philips Co., Inc., High Fidelity Products Division, Dept. ILL11, 230 Duffy Avenue, Hicksville, Long Island, New York.

ROY ACUFFS MUST PAY 43G IN FED TAX RAP

Memphis, Nov. 15.

Country & western singer and publisher Roy Acuff, and his wife, Mildred, must pay back income taxes of $43,400, according to a ruling handed down last week in Washington by Federal Judge William Drennen.

Judge Drennen upheld a government contention that one-third of a partnership income the Acuffs put into a trust fund for their son, Roy Neill Acuff, 17, was taxable to them. The income derived from the Acuffs' operation of Dunbar Cave, amusement park, hotel and supper club near Clarksville, Tenn., and a half-interest in Acuff-Rose music.

Danny Kessler, who recently sold out his interest in Rush Music to Ed Kassner and Murray Sporn, has opened a new publishing firm, Kryder Music (BMI), as well as his own management company.

COL, VICTOR RUSHING NEW RICHTER ALBUMS

Columbia Records has tagged Soviet pianist Sviatoslav Richter, who is recording on exclusive basis in the U.S., for a long-hair L.P. Label will record Richter with Eugene Ormandy conducting the Philadelphia Orch lat in December. The repertoire has not yet been decided.

Meantime, RCA Victor has already put its second-U.S.-made Richter recording into the groove. The pianist etched Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 with the Boston Symph under Charles Munch's baton. His previous Victor release was Brahms Concerto No. 2 with Erich Leinsdorf conducting the Chicago Symph.

Columbia's previously released Richter recording was cut during a concert in Bulgaria in 1958.

Mexican Hotel Magnate Maps Novel Show Techniques for His U.S. Inns

By JOE COHEN

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

Cesar Balsa, the Mexican bonfface who is seeking to become a major force in American hotel operation, is not a believer in floorshows despite the fact that one of the major foundations of his present holdings is a night club.

Balsa, the 38-year-old hotel magnate who started as a bellboy, is the new operator of the St. Regis Hotel, N. Y., and is still talking a possible deal for the takeover of the Drake Hotel, also in New York, and the Ambassador East and West Hotels in Chicago, all of which are now held by the Zeckendorf Hotel group.

Balsa, a firm believer in class operation, has great faith in power of music as an attraction, but cares little for the formalized floorshows that are current in the U. S. hotels. Presently th operator of eight hotels (four each in Mexico City and Acapulco), Balsa has some form of musical entertainment in all of these inns. It's a graceful accompaniment to graceful kind of living, and not as demanding upon the attentions of a patron as a floorsh w.

It's Smart to Linger

He regards music also as an inducement to linger in spot where food and liquor is abound. In both Mexico City and Acapulco, where th fashionable lunch hour starts around 3 p.m. and dinner at about 9 p.m., lingering is a highly developed pastime among the upper strata.

Balsa's plans for entertainment in the U. S. are not still fully developed. However, close associates believe that he may conceivably pattern his entertai ient tastes on the Jacaranda niteries in both Mexico City and Acapulco. The Jacaranda was Balsa's second venture in Mexico City. It followed his acquisition of the Focalare restaurant.

For the Jacaranda, he hired Max Borges Jr., the architect who designed the Tropicana in Havana.

Ohio Fair's 24G Loss Cues Shuffle

Columbus, Nov. 15.

The 1960 Ohio State Fair ended in the red by $24,144, instead of showing a $27,000 profit announced in earlier reports, indicating that drastic changes are in prospect, especially with Gov Michael V. DiSalle showing a critical attitude toward the annual event. He has named committee of cabinet members to study the fair and hold public hearings to giv terested groups and individuals a chance to be heard.

The Fair showed no profit on the grandstand this year, with all proceeds going to the Christiani Bros. Circus which was booked for 11 appearances. The circus netted approximately $40,000, its guarantee. The 1959 profit came from the state fair's share—totaling $22,161—of grandstand ticket sales of $77,278 of Roy Rogers and his troupe. A four-day fireworks display failed to show any profit.

During 1960, paid admissions totaled 198,465, including 62,159 advance half-fare tickets sold through the Kroger Co. grocery chain. Fair observers said approximately 85% of those who bought half-price tickets would have visited the fair normally and paid the full 75c. admission price.

'HOLIDAY ON ICE' HOT IN OREGON, PULLS 307G

Portland, Ore., Nov. 15.

Morris Chalfen's "Holiday On Ice of 1961" wound up a 10-day date at the New Memorial Coliseum last nite (3-13) with a scorching $307,000, racked up in 10 evening performances and seven matinees. The 10,100 seater was scaled at $3.50. Icer was the first attraction in the $8,500,000 glass palace.

Advance seat sale broke all records for the icer which has made five return trips to this town. Icer heads east to Grand Rapids, Mich. from here.

Hacienda Hotel Chain Buys Jets to Build Biz

Las Vegas, Nov. 15.

The first of two jet airplanes of a planned fleet of six was purchased last week by the Hacienda Hotel chain, according board chairman Warren Bayley.

Bayley said this was the first time in history a hotel has bought jets as part of its promotion. The $35,000,000 transacti ill set up package tours for guests of the various Hacienda hotels, and bring them here from New York, Chicago, Miami, and Honolulu.

The 12-day tours will stop off in Las Vegas for two days.

Planes will be either Convairs or Douglas DC-8s, Bayley said.

Japanese Unit's Tour

Tokyo, Nov. 15.

In addition to the Japanese show which will play the British Isles and possibly the continent for six months beginning Dec. 17 in Glasgow, Toho is sending a 12-girl troupe on a six-week tour of Hong Kong, Saigon, Rangoon, New Delhi, Karachi and Colombo, showing Dec. 1.

The latter unit, titled "Japanese Dancing Troupe," will tour as a cultural mission, introducing traditional Japanese dances in those areas under sponsorship of the Society for International Cultural Exchange (KBS) and the Foreign Ministry.

Danny Thomas Raises 25G in Dallas Benefit

Dallas, Nov. 15.

Seats were sold at $25 top.

New Hotel Casino Planned for Tahoe By Harvey Gross

Reno, Nov. 15.

Construction plans for a multi-million dollar 11-floor casino-hotel at the south end of Lake Tahoe on the California-Nevada border has been set by Harvey Gross, operator of the Wagon Wheel Casino. Gross said the new structure will be an addition to his current club, located at Stateline, only a few hundred feet within the Nevada border.

A club spokesman said the new facility will be a "Las Vegas-type strip casino" with a "top-of-the-Mark" type fo penthouse restaurant. Exact cost of the new structur was not revealed but construction is expected to take 16 months. The casino area of the new club will provide space for 700 slot machines and 32 games.

Gross was one of the early pioneers of gaming at the south end of the mile-high lake.

The new building will more than double the casino space and multiply by five times the banquet space. Plans also call for an enlarged, plush lounge with around-the-clock entertainment.

The Wagon Wheel entertainment is now offered from a small stage behind the bar that allows little in the way of movement. The club currently books four or five acts for afternoon to early morning entertainment. During the tourist season (June-October) entertainment is billed around the clock.

Major entertainment booker at the south end of Tahoe now is Bill Harrah's, operator of Tahoe Harrah's and two other clubs in Reno. His theatre-restaurant, completed last December, seats 700. Harrah's bills the top names in the main room, and also books class acts in the casino lounge.

MCA Exec Sees Its Far East Link Paving 2-Way Talent Street, Urges Easier Japanese Coin Restrictions

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, Nov. 15.

MCA, in opening a Tokyo office, will add a Far East link to the agency's global operations and thereby boost traffic in live talent and canned tv shows between Japan and other countries. Its expansion into Japan as well as Australia was disclosed earlier this month in Hong Kong by company exec Berle Adams who recently arrived here.

Allowing time for cutting red-tape, MCA expects to put up its shingle here within six months. While the Tokyo office will have control over MCA's Japan activities, frequent visits will be made there by Peter McDonald, the agency's veep in charge of Asia and Australia.

Just how deep the muscular agency wil cut into this market remains to be seen. Numerous legal obstacles will have to be hurdled if MCA is to function near its full potential. Accompanying Adams here for three weeks of spadework on establishing the local branch is Herb Stern of the agency's New York office.

Seven Other Offices

Adams pointed out that MCA Intl. has other offices outside the U.S., with branches in London, Paris, Munich, Berlin, Rome, Mexico City and Toronto. Regarding the live talent aspect of MCA's interests, he told VARIETY that if existing obstacles can be overcome, the agency would be sending a flow of acts to perform in Japan and signing Nipponese talent to play throughout the world.

"We have learned that a local talent is never appreciated until he appears elsewhere." Adams noted. "The same is true of American stars. So by working them through the different countries, they gain status in their own country."

He cited, "In the United States,

Sahl's Concert Yocks Net 120G

Mort Sahl's personal take out of the recent tour of one-nighters will be around $120,000 based on an overall gross of $246,370 in his 27-city concert which ended Nov. 12.

Sahl has taken time out of the concert stage to resume work in niteries. He started at Blinstrub's, Boston, Monday (14) and thence to the Lotus, Washington, Nov. 26. He's also set for the Crescendo, Hollywood, Dec. 22 and the Fontainebleau, Miami, Jan. 3.

Carnegie Hall Sellout

Mort Sahl's repeat date in New York, to be played at Carnegie Hall, Nov. 25, has already been sold out. House has been scaled to $9,600, and will again be played under auspices of Felix Gerstman. Standing room hasn't been figured in this compilation.

Sahl played Town Hall, N. Y., Oct. 22, for two shows and scored a heavy $10,600. The Carnegie date, however, is for one show.

Sahl has also been set for the Fontainebleau Hotel, Miami Beach, starting Jan. 5.

ELKORT REELECTED ARTISTS REPS' PREXY

Eddie Elkort was again elected president of the Artists Representatives Assn. at its annual election meeting held last week in New York at the Friars Club. Hattie Althoff was named first vice president, with subsequent veepees being Jackie Green, of Joe Glaser's Associated Booking Corp., Leonard Romm of General Artists Corp. and Paul Sherman, MCA. Out-of-town board members were also named veepees. They are James Langan, Pittsburgh; Dinty Moore, San Francisco; William J. O'Halloran, Detroit; and Jack Russell, Chicago. Renamed as secretary was Ben Kuchuk, and Joe Singer, treasurer.

The officers, per custom are named by the newly elected board of Governors. They comprise, in addition, to the officers, Harry Adler, Joe Flaum, Dick Henry, Vic Rocco, Leo Grund, Howard Hausman, Lee Salomon and Norman Weiss.

Allen-Rossi Must Pay $7,500 to Ex-Manager

A settlement under the supervision of N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Sidney A. Fine was made this week in the breach of contract suit brought by personal manager Buddy Allen against the comedy team of Marty Allen & Steve Rossi. Justice Fein, sitting in the Bronx Supreme Court, okayed a $7,500 settlement. The comedy team has 10 days to get up the coin. Otherwise, Noah L. Braunstein, attorney for Buddy Allen has permission of the court to open suit for $12,500 plus costs.

Original suit demanded $200,000 damages plus $7,500 in back commissions. It was alleged that the team's contract was in force after Allen had split with his former partner Mitch De Wood and formed the new twain. The manager claimed that the team recognized this by continuing to pay commissions for a period following the formation of the new pairing.

Citizens Comm.

it's illegal to employ any entertainer without a license. Another charge leveled by Cohen was the claim that the police license division maintained a list of entertainers with criminal records, but who were permitted to work because of "certain considerations."

Kennedy, at one point, was accused by Cohen of being "psychopathic" and was asked to resign from office. Kennedy declared that he would send a full transcript of the meeting to the Bar Assn. Grievance Committee for possible action against Cohen. Kennedy also promised that he will go to the district attorney and ask him to give immunity to any performer who has, under any circumstance given a gratuity to the Police Dept. He also ordered First Deputy Police Commissioner James P. Kennedy to determine the identity of the man who allegedly solicited the bribe from Buckley.

Another aftermath of the hearing was the order by Kennedy forbidding police to solicit any cabaret entertainers to perform at any function without consent of his office.

Although the Buckley death is regarded as the impetus that resulted in present activity, the movement to repeal the fingerprint and permit rules had been fought recently by attorney Maxwell T. Cohen on behalf of several entertainers and musicians. Cohen had asked the aid of both the American Guild of Variety Artists and the American Federation of Musicians, but both shied way from this issue.

Lord Buckley's license had been picked up as a result of a giving false information on his application. He said he had never been arrested, but police found that he had been convicted of being drunk in Reno 19 years ago, nd was arrested for marijuana possession 17 years ago. There is no record of conviction on the latter charge. Buckley had claimed that the wording of the application had confused him.

D'Lugoff said that he has been the victim of shakedow in his cafe operation. He stated that he is being harassed for dimming his lights during a performance, but he said that no other nitery operator has been charged with that violation despite the fact that all cabarets, at onetime or another, dim their lights during floorshows.

The committee includes, among others, D'Lugoff, producer Lewis Allen, writer Donald Ogden Stewart, novelist Norman Mailler, novelist Harold Humes Jr., composer David Amram; Elaine Lorillard, a founder of the Newport Jazz Festival; Commentary editor Norman Podhoretz; George Plimpton, editor of Paris Review; Jason Epstein, Random House editor, and others.

A spokesman for Police Commissioner Kennedy stated that the Commissioner would like to transfer the licensing requirement for entertainers to the Dept. of Licenses.

er and now entertainment director for the Wagon Wheel, says the calibre of acts will be up-graded with the new operation.

Soon after the Gross announcement, two Reno builders revealed plans for a $2,000,000 motor hotel casino on Highway 395 (the main highway from Reno to Carson City, the capital, and on to Lake Tahoe) just a few minute's driv from downtown Reno.

The planners said a corporation is now being formed to back the venture. Little was announced about the actual structure, but the facility will include a stage bar with live entertainment, it was noted.

Many observers th Reno scene believe the construction of one plush nitery on the highway south of Reno could lead to small scale Las Vegas strip operation. All major entertainment the Reno area is now confined to the immediate downtown boundaries. Leading buyers are the Riverside, the Mapes, the Holiday, Harrah's, the Golden and Harolds.

MCA's Far East Link

there are very few places for a performer to work, especially if he's in the in-between bracket and not a big name. If we can build our international outlets, we can send them to other markets.

Asked about the Finance Ministry's restrictions, which forbid payment in foreign rrency to performers other than concert artists and which limits yen payments to comparatively small "expense" figures, Adams acknowledged the problem. He said, "we are proceeding very, very slowly. We won't do anything that smells of the black market."

Questions Yen Ceiling

In a plea for easing these restrictions, he added, "but why not let the people perform and accept the money in yen? Why place a ceiling on the yen? If that were removed, then we believe we can make available quite a number of talented people and even big names. The public demand exists Japan and we have also been encouraged by many in the entertainment business here."

Adams said that these restrictions have kept many performers, including MCA artists Ricky Nelson and Johnny Mathis, both of whom recently played Manila, from working in Japan.

If the yen payment limitation were lifted, he said, acts would be willing to perform in Japan, using their yen income for expenses and shopping, investing or banking the balance until such time as it could be converted.

Studying Niteries' Potential

Adams said MCA is still probing the potential of the cabarets and night clubs here, having received clouded reports on their above-table and below-table price levels for acts. But he felt a circuit could be made with clubs, theatres, tv shots and U.S. military bases in these parts hooked up to Manila, Australia and perhaps later, Hong Konk.

He disagreed with the common belief that Japanese clubgoers require sight acts to break through the language barrier. "It's not true," Adams said. "While they may not be able to use a talking comic, a good musical act would be appreciated."

Aside from currency restrictions, Japan does not have places to perform which seat tens of thousands and which also have good acoustics, as exist in Manila and Australia. Adams acknowledged this problem, too, saying that these will come with arenas built for the 1964 Olympics and with Matsutaro Shoriki's planned rooftop baseball stadium.

On contracting Japanese talent, Adams commented, "we don't know if the law permits it. There has never been a recognized agency here of our type. We face a repeat history of breaking into the field just as we did in the United States and in other countries. Some of the people don't understand what we do. Many think we're an employment agency. We definitely would like to sign Japanese talent, but there are protective laws here as in other countries. We will have to make applications and explain ourselves."

Back in TV Market

MCA, which pulled out of the tv market here in April of last year because of the comparatively low price ceilings, plunged back into the field several weeks ago with the restoration of the "Alfred Hitchcock Show" on NTV and with sales of "Wagon Train," "Bachelor Father" and "Leave It to Beaver." The turnabout was made in expectation of more improved fiscal conditions and as a door-opener for the Tokyo office.

Adams stressed that MCA will proceed cautiously in Japan. He said, "as an American organization, we have followed the same course in every foreign country. We will not force ourselves upon this market. The people will have to see the advantages of dealing with us. There will be no pressure campaign. We expect to be here a long time."

As previously disclosed, Tadashi "Bozo" Wakabayashi, w.k. here as a former baseball player and manager, will be managing director of the Tokyo office. He'll be assisted by Bobby Hirai, formerly engaged in promotional activities for the Mainichi Newspapers. Hirai will spend a lengthy period of indoctrination in MCA offices in the U.S.

Circus Review

Moscow Circus 1960

Paris, Nov. 8.

Oleg Popov, Vladimir Dourov Animals, Mikhail Touganov Djiguites Riders (10), Mikhail Doveiko Leapers (7), Valentina Sourkova, Solokhine (3), Nicolas Olkhovikov, Milaev (6), Nina Logatcheva, Lev Ossinski, Polina Tchernega & Stepan Razoumov, Do Re Mi Trio, Arkadi Boudnitski, Boris Ossipov Orch (12). At Palais Des Sports, Paris; $3 top.

For the third time the Moscow Circus has come to Paris for a five week stay. It looks to do sock biz in its tenure at the outsize Palais Des Sports judging by its rousing first night welcome, reviews, general good showmanship, movement and high quality acts in this one ring setup.

Only three of its 12 turns were here before. The Moscow Circus, as revealed in VARIETY Sept. 9, 1959, is really a grab bag of thousands of acts sent all over Russia and shuffled for the bigger Mosw needs quite frequently.

Its main appeal is the solid craftsmanship of each number. There may be better individual acts of these types in the West, but rarely a collection of such harmony floated out in balletic tempo with special music backgrounding it from a good orch.

Oleg Popov, the clown, is back for some hilarious interludes between each number. His Buster Brown looks and deceptive ease in mimicking each number are in for yocks and mitts. He is helped by Arkadi Boudnitski's fine straight man chores. Do Re Mi Trio are an okay clown musical number with inventive breakaway props.

Vladimir Dourov mixes all sorts of animals for an excellent number. Cats, mice, roosters and a fox frolic together, dogs ride on ponies, an elephant waltzes and seals cavort agilely to make this a top entry ending with a shower of pigeons enveloping Dourov.

Mikhail Touganov Djiguites Riders are a group of stunt horsemen done at breakneck speed and in for wild mitts.

Mikhail Doveiko Leapers do a series of agile gymnastics heightened by teeterboard-helped somersaults ending with one done by a man on stilts that gets huzzahs. Valentina Sourkova goes through a fine series of trapeze swings and balances. Polina Tchernega & Stepan Razoumov do a series of intricate balancing and acrobatics on a revolving trapeze ending with a gasp provoking fallaway.

Solokhine trio do suave hand to hand acrobatics with one being somersaulted on a rope held by the other two. Nina Logatcheva does a ballet interlude on a tight wire with grace and aplomb. Milaev sextet has a heavyset man undering on a table and footing an immense ladder on which five people climb for balancing. He holds it with one foot and even revolves for an outstanding act. A perch bit on a shoulder with one acrobatting on it above is also included.

Lev Ossinski does some neat balancing on a revolving pedestal. Nicolas Olkhovikov juggles expertly on the back of a circling horse.

Hotel Magnate

The costs ran $100,000 ahead of estimates. However, the Jacaranda was so popular that in three months Balsa retrieved his entire investment. The spot is still a success in Mexico City, and his Acapulco counterpart in the Hotel El Presidente, is also one of the focal points of uppercrust nightlife.

Luxuriant Setting

The Jacaranda is a dimly lit spot, much darker than N.Y. State Liquor Authority is accustomed to, but the atmosphere is lush and warm. On one side, the customer can be relaxed by looking through windows at luxuriant tropical foliage and a waterfall. On another side is a periodic display of a small edition of Dancing Waters. Dance orchestras perform in shifts. The spot itself has a moulded, free form ceiling.

The Jacaranda type of nitery could be repeated architecturally in America, it's believed, despite high building costs. It would also be a comparatively simple matter to retain a sufficient amount of musicians to man a continuous dance policy. Chances of success of such a policy are conceded to be good.

The Balsa empire currently consists of the Hotels El Presidente, Allfer, Del Prado in Mexico City. In Acapulco he has El Presidente, Elcano, Noa Noa, Tampa. There are Focolare Restaurants and Jacaranda niteries in both Mexico City and Acapulco. In New York, the Balsa chain presently has only the St. Regis, although acquisition of the Drake seems imminent.

Being built in Mexico City is the Hotel Maria Isabel, which will be next door to the new American Embassy. This hotel is being constructed by the Patino (Bolivian tin) interests, but has been leased to Balsa for the next 15 years.

Who's Bankrolling Balsa?

Because of the Patino ownership of the Maria Isabel, there have been reports that Patino money is behind Balsa. Other reports contend that the Balsa bankrollers are either former president Miguel Aleman or ex-president Ruiz Cortines, both of whom have considerable wealth. Still other sources maintain that Balsa is operating on his own.

Acquisition of the Drake, Ambassadors East and West would give Balsa a toehold of four hotels in the U.S. With this nucleus, he would be in position to become a strong factor on the entertainment scene. What his plans are on the night life aspects of hotel operation are not yet evident. However, those familiar with his brand of operation seem to feel that it will be something entirely different than is currently available.

ECUADOREAN SINGER OFF-KEY IN MEXICO

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

Singer Julio Jaramillo had his contract revoked by impresario Felix Cervantes because he turned up for a performance allegedly under alcoholic influence, tongue-lashed the producer, the inspector of the Office of Public Entertainments, and made remarks derogatory to Mexico.

His pact had three weeks to run with an extension clause. The National Ass . of Actors also warned Jaramillo in strict terms. Any further "unbecoming conduct" and the Ecuadorean may be "invited" to leave Mexico.

AGVA Auditions Resume in Chi

Chicago, Nov. 15.

Despite election-eve anxieties (or at least anticipated respecting nightclub biz), American Guild of Variety Artists successfully resumed its auditions and celebrity stanzas here with a fullhouse last Mon. (7) in the Trade Winds smallery.

Union had reinstated its once-weekly once-overs last year in the Chez Paree; but that spot is shuttered (for what looks to be for good), hence the new site for the scrutinies.

Preemer came off a strong plus from all vantages. Club's management, of course, enjoyed the hefty patronage (which made it merry, too, for regular bill of Marie McDonald and comics Marsh & Adams), and at least two or three of the turns pulled immediate booker interest.

Other pluses were fact the program actually started at the advertised hour and got smooth steering from columnist Irv Kupcinet in the emcee slot for this first outing.

If some of the auditionees failed to thrill 'em, there still was no voice heard to gainsay the essential value of these AGVA showcases, a value that's especially pointed in this era of shrunken opportunity for vaude talent's "live" breakin, or anything like a learn-the-ropes circuit.

Decorative outfront celebs at initialer included thrush Eileen Barton (who contributed an impromptu vocal), columnist Bob Considine, and joke writer (and ex-tv panelist) Hal Block.

ANTA 1-RING CIRCUS TO TOUR SO. AMERICA

The American National Theatre & Academy is sponsoring a one-ring circus to play South America, following a Russian circus which played Brazil a few months ago. The circus booking was made by Eddie Elkort, veepee of General Artists Corp. in charge of foreign bookings. The package is set to leave Nov. 23 with stops at Sao Paulo, Brasilia, Rio de Janeiro, Buenos Aires and several cities in Uruguay.

Package comprises the Bizzarro Bros., The Shirleys, Baptiste Schrieber, Piero Bros., Chop Chop & Charlene and Excess Baggage. Columnist Ed Sullivan, who recently took a one-ring circus to Moscow, heads ANTA's Variety Panel which passes on overseas variety shows.

SMU Books Gardner

Dallas, Nov. 15.

Dave Gardner will appear here under the sponsorship of Southern Methodist U. on Dec. 10 in the SMU Coliseum. Gardner will be costarred with singer Tommy Edwards.

SMU has also booked Roger Williams April 7.

Ralph C. Whitehead, Stormy Figure Of Theatrical Unionism, Dies at 75

Ralph C. Whitehead, who died of leukemia Thursday (10) in Roscoe, N. Y., at the age of 75, was one of theatrical unionism s most controversial figures. He was instrumental in organizing a movement which ultimately became the American Guild of Variety Artists.

The colorful Whitehead era may have been stormier than the heyday of the White Rats whose strike circa World War I affected only Actors Equity and the producers. But there was scarcely a segment of the performing arts that wasn't involved in the struggles surrounding the Whitehead regime around 1939.

Indignation over the failure of Eva Tanguay to receive as much of the proceeds of a benefit for her as she should have resulted in formation of the Actors Betterment Assn. by Whitehead and the late comedian, Dave Vine, who was aided by attorney Irving Schneider.

Had Performer Support

Performers looked to the ABA to lead them out of abuses which they were subjected to then by politicos, theatre managers and benevolent organizations. The ABA petitioned the Associated Actors and Artistes of America for an affiliation, but was rebuffed on the ground that the group was more akin to a social organization than a union.

The ABA then changed its name to the American Federation of Actors, and a charter was granted with Whitehead as the new union's first executive secretary. Whitehead was later defeated in his bid to absorb the Burlesque Artists Assn. into his organization, but he managed to bring wide sectors of the variety field into his group.

Torn by Dissension

Rifts, political jealousies and internal warfare threatened the AFA which prompted reports that the 4As would take it over. It was at this point that Whitehead and AFA president Sophie Tucker demanded that they be investigated by a jury of their peers.

In the midst of a probe by the 4As, Whitehead and Miss Tucker walked out. They asserted the investigation was merely a fishing expedition with no basis in fact for any charges. A short time later the 4As absorbed the AFA. But Whitehead, still anxious to retain jurisdiction of the variety field, swung the AFA into the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes.

Meantime, sweeping changes were taking place in the amusement industry labor movement in the late 1930s. Howls were being raised in the press over alleged racketeering within the IA. A delegation of actors, unhappy about about the link with the IA, urged that the performer movement be separated from the IA.

The delegation placed its complaint before the 1939 AFL exec committee meeting in Atlantic City. Separation was granted and the 4As gave the performer charter to the American Guild of Variety Artists. Set adrift, the AFA went into oblivion.

Organized Circus Workers

Whitehead, however, made another try in show biz unionism. He was given a federal charter by the AFL and organized the Circus, Carnival, Fair and Rodeo Workers Industrial Union. This group sought to organize all non-performing employes in circuses, and would have organized performers in other branches. The union soon faded after it pulled an unsuccessful strike on the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus at Madison Sq. Garden, N. Y.

A native of New Rochelle, N. Y., Whitehead was a musical comedy performer in his youth and also did a song and dance act in vaudeville. At various times he was director of the variety sector of the Federal Theatre Project and was on the board of Theatre Authority and Actors Fund of America.

During World War II he served as the AFL representative to the War Production Board. He later was an assistant to the late William Green, president of the AFL. About 10 years ago he was stricken with Parkinson's disease and went to live with a sister, Mrs. Charles Fuhrer, at Livingston Manor, N. Y. She survives.

Slater's Skouras Tour

Hypnotist Ralph Slater has been booked for a series of dates on the Skouras Theatres circuit in northern New Jersey. Slater will play the Fox Theatre, Hackensack, Saturday (19) and will follow with the Liberty, Elizabeth, the following day. Other theatres in the area will also play Slater.

The North Jersey houses have been playing one-day stands frequently. Skouras as well as the Stanley Warner Circuit there frequently have one-day attractions in many houses.

Joey Bishop, Four Lads (Jimmy Arnold, Bernie Toorish, Frank Busseri, Connie Codarini; with Billy Dennison and Maurice Marks); Johnny D'Arc, Bonnie Marie; staged by Douglas Coudy; songs, Paul Anka; costumes, Billy Livingston (Mme. Berthe); orchestrations, George Brackman; Paul Shelley and Frank Marti orchs; $6 minimum.

Joey Bishop for laughs and the dynamic 'Four Lads for pops — the latter considerably matured and renowned since their cradling at Toronto's St. Michael's Cathedral Choir School, not to mention a few "gold records" under their belting style—are a surefire box-office combo for Jules Podell's Copacabasement. The East 60th St. bistro opening Thursday (midnight) show looked like a blend of the Friars, Lambs, Equity and AFTRA alumni association with its strong show biz turnout.

Paradox at this show was a somewhat eclipsing of the headliner by the robust young men, fortified by special conductor-pianist Billy Dennison and traps virtuoso Maurice Marks. They were overwhelming not only in numbers but came on strong from the barrier with a surefire medley of popular standards and, just when a normal nitery would be considered over, they got their second wind with a supplementary pot-pourri of their Columbia disk outstanders ("No Not Much," "Moments to Remember" etc.,) after having reeled off a surefire medley of "Down By the Riverside," "Getting To Know You," "Some of These Days," "It Had to Be You," "Do Lord" (a spiritual in Dixieland tempo), a clown solo by Jimmy Arnold, then their "gold record" threesome, followed by "You're Nobody Till Somebody Loves You" and "The Party's Over."

The boffo show biz turnout, of course, was for Joey Bishop. He was in command almost all of the time. Obviously under the weather, for which he stoically did not apologize, although well he might, he had them with him for the main. When Bishop resorted to the celeb introductions it got ragged. It wasn't necessary, unless for a few highlight names. The press could invariably be always brushed off as a group; in the first place, they're there occupationally, so their introductories are extraneous and, from most of the newspaper bunch's perspective, sometimes not even welcomed despite the fact It's all well-intentioned.

Bishop has come a long way since that first New Act notice in VARIETY in December of 1945 at the Greenwich Village Inn, N.Y. He has shown to exceedingly good personal advantage in broad media like films and tv, and has registered in the Vegas top spots, but somehow at this Copa stand he gave the overall impression of lacking a sufficiently well-rounded act.

His stuff is brittle; his mien sophisticated, sharp and offbeat without being far-out. His one-liners and asides are attuned to the best bistro standards, and even when he repeats that "Sayonara" bar mitzvah gag (which registered in a couple of his tv exposures) it is acceptable, because it is indigenous to his style. None the less, there was lacking the zing and the pace expected of a proved pro of Bishop's calibre. It was unfortunate that a seasonal cold handicapped an opening night although there is no gainsaying his overall effectiveness, not to mention the obvious b.o. appeal.

Otherwise it's the same tastifully costumed and produced Doug Coudy revue, the lookers flashing some attractive transformations; Johnny D'Arc and Bonnie Marie the number-leaders; Paul Anka supplying the tuneful set of special songs; and the Paul Shelley band backstopping the proceedings and alternating with Frank Marti's cha-chas for the dansapation. Maitre d' Bruno will be a busy gent for the Bishop-4 Lads semester, on the heels of the just-closed and equally socko Eydie Gorme-Steve Lawrence bistro bonanza at the Podellcabana. Abel.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Nov. 11.

Carmen Cavallaro (4), Billy Williams Orch (6); $1.50-$2 cover.

There's a solid appeal about Carmen Cavallaro, and he is applying it for the sixth time around at Eddys' to the satisfaction of all concerned. As on his last couple of recent trips, Cavallaro has his own backing, the guitar of Jimmy Norton, bass of Richard Meloof and drums of Tony Pondent. It's a moving 45 minutes with a classy approach, and all much appreciated as evidenced by the full house.

It's the full-blown music the crowd comes to hear and Cavallaro gets right into it, running through some proven steadies from the pop fold, some standards, a couple of his own and, of course, his established standbys. There are light veined openers before he thumps out a fanciful "Begin the Beguine," some Latin tinged arrangements, his original "Dolores, My Own," and pop "Just One of Those Things."

Backers come in for some special licks on their own specialties. But by and large it is the Cavallaro fingerings that bring in the customers and he generously fills their desires. His piano artistry is in good form for this session.

Show holds through Nov. 23, as club is closed Thanksgiving Day. Quin.

Savoy, London

London, Nov. 11.

Nina & Frederik, Murio & Sheila, Savoy Dancers (10); Francisco Carez Orch and Savoy Sorrentinos with Ernesto D'Angelo; $6.75 minimum.

Nina and Frederik, a young Danish couple who have already become faves on tv and who have a few disclicks behind them, are now headlining at the Savoy, and doing it very pleasantly. He is tall and bearded and provides the guitar accompaniment, and she is a typical blonde Nordic looker.

In for a three-weeks run, the couple stand together at the far end of the stage and without frills or gimmicks, go into a relaxing 15-minute stint. Highspot of their songalog is "Listen to the Ocean," their current hit disk. They deliver "Sipping Cider," the old English folk song, with plenty of charm and close strongly with "Maladie d'Amour."

Murio and Sheila (on the bill for the first fortnight only) are standard ballroomologists and their routine is enhanced with a fast overhead whirl in which the male spins his partner with remarkable speed. The Savoy Dancers, a line of eight attractive gals and two men, open with a diverting little number entitled "Miss Johnson Phoned Again Today," and close the show with another routine. Their dances are produced by Irving Davies.

The two resident orchs combine nostalgia and rhythm for the dance sessions, while the Savoy Sorrentinos back the cabaret layout with unobtrusive skill. Myro.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Freddy Martin Orch (17); $2-$2.50 cover

Veteran maestro Freddy Martin isn't exactly campaigning, but he's getting in the plug for the "big band" era. Into the plush Empire Room for three weeks, the orphan who became a saxophone salesman and was touted into a bandleading career by Guy Lombardo easily proves that a big, versatile band can neatly fill the floor show stint, as well as providing lotsa dansapation.

It's the biggest (and finest) orch to play a location date here in over a decade, and Martin has a crew that doubles in fine style. He opens his 60-minute show with an overture from "Gypsy," featuring three flutes, three violins and four trombones. From there it's rare to hear such a big band "swell" with the leader on tenor sax to make a five-man reed section.

Trombonist John Cochran vocalizes "Sound of Music" before the full orch does a "Time" medley of four songs; then the w.k. record hits by the Martin band: "Intermezzo," "Symphony," "To Each His Own," "Bumble Boogie," "Sabre Dance" and "Santa Catalina." It's a delightful, and welcome, sound for a new generation of supper clubbers accustomed to a trio or smaller band.

Diz Mullen does a brace of fine vocals, "Lazy River" and "Bill Bailey," before the dixieland group takes over for a rousing session. In saluting big bands of the past, Martin includes imitations of w.k. tunes by Paul Whiteman, Henry Busse, Clyde McCoy and Wayne King, among others. All to the Bark.

Hotel Plaza, N. Y.

Lilo; Ted Straeter and Mark Monte orchs; $4 cover.

Lilo did a pinch-hit for the Persian Room when Jane Froman took ill with hepatitis and, although not scheduled until next spring at this Hotel Plaza plushery, she delivers a tiptop class hotel act. Accent is Francais but it's wisely done with decided Anglais overtones, ranging from the surefire French hit parade ("Follies Bergere," "My Man," "Si Bon," etc.) to specials like "Irma La Douce" (original French), Nick Perito's "La Parisienne," "Mais Oui" and, of course, "Magnifique" and "I Love Paris," the original Cole Porter standards for "Can-Can" which starred Lilo and first brought her to Yank prominence in 1953. Perito is her special conductor.

She also wisely retains the newsboy medley (the French standards) which permits for a change of pace from the Pierre Balmain (Paris) and the Ritter Bros. (domestic vintage) haut couture.

Lilo is a canny songstress who knows how to merchandise her chansons and makes for a highly palatable cafe floor personality. In one number she has a strong assist from Jimmy Sedlar, with an effective "talking trumpet," otherwise horn man with Ted Straeter's versatile dansapators. Mark Monte again spells Straeter's larger orchestra. With the Plaza's new g.m. and v.p. Neal Lang very much in the scene, along with the new maitre d'hotel John Fossati, the Persian Room is in fine stride. Abel.

Tropicoro Club, P. R.

San Juan, P. R., Nov. 10.

Sarita Montiel production with Gogo Andreu, Eleta & Marina, Enrique Brown Ballet (8), Charlie Fisk Orch (17); $5 cover.

The Hotel San Juan Intercontinental room is the biggest and hardest to fill in town, especially in the autumn tourist doldrums, but this show pulled in about 700 patrons opening night, mostly locals. Sarita Montiel is beauteous Spanish film queen making her first foray into cabaret (see New Acts).

For support she brings a Latin production that lasts a full hour before she appears, and all backed by extra fiddles in Charlie Fisk's band and her own musical director, Maestro Solano. Good timing and interest develop solid mitting and buildup for Miss Montiel.

Eleta and Marina, from Argentina, like the other performers, are a classy dance team with Stateside possibilities. Their act is a three-movement ballet set to recorded music. It would be hard to say what it is all about, after accepting the general subject (sex), but she is a looker and clearly in throes of some interesting passion as he leads her through unusual routines.

Gogo Andreu tells a string of fairly hoary jokes in Spanish, but crowd devours them and wants more; Latin taste in comedy favors scatology and verbal pratfalls. His boffola pantomime is a surgeon extracting an appendix distastefully.

Enrique Brown Ballet does mystifying tango to open the show, which is so stylized as to appear a parody, but is well produced and rehearsed and imaginatively costumed (girls' skirts are numerous silk scarves dangling like flags on a windless day). Later, line returns to race through a streamy "macumba" in flickering light and jungly music. Harmi.

Second City, Chi

Chicago, Nov. 9.

"Seacoast of Bohemia," satiric revue with Severn Darden, Eugene Troobnick, Andrew Duncan, Mina Kolb, Barbara Harris & Howard Alk, with William Mathieu at piano; $1.50 cover.

Relatively recent burgeoning here of theatre bistros dedicated to tab shows was led, and is still paced, by this spot, which shrewdly elected to situate in the Old Town section with its colony of white collar intelligentsia. Second City, moreover, has primed its successor role to once popular Compass Players (which incubated Shelley Berman and Nichols & May), and that too has helped the image.

Current potpourri, "Seacoast of Bohemia" (alluding to lowercase adjective), is likely to shore up room's reputation with the regulars, at least with those who like their satire to have a pertinent pungency. At the least, "Sea coast" has a happy laugh quotient, and at enough times blossoms with inspired statement.

Of the faults, there is mainly the ordinariness of many of its concepts, such as the rib of psychological oaters. Also flawing is an unprofessionalism, though that aspect seems stubbornly part of the company's charm for the clientele. A strong card for this troupe, by the way, is the traditional improvisation tucked among the set pieces, which clicks more often than not.

A few of the more droll sketches are Hillary's Himalayan Yeti expedition, issue of dubbed vs. titled foreign pix, and Hollywood's current wave of historical blockbusters, last one good for a rousing finale.

The cast is bright and attractive, and generally effective, if not uniformly talented, with standout contribs from Eugene Thoobnick, Severn Darden and Paul Sand. William Mathieu's piano is a notable assist. Pit.

Flame Room, Mpls.

Minneapolis, Nov. 8.

Betty Johnson, Clair Perreau Orch. (7); $1.50-$2.50 cover.

Betty Johnson sings for young lovers, few of whom frequent this spiffy night spot in the Hotel Radisson. The opening night audience, fairly large in view of its being election eve, gave her an enthusiastic reception and brought her back for several encores. But the response seemed to be generated more by her attractiveness and faultless chirping and less by her repertoire which, for this performance at least, lacked versatility.

From her opening "Everybody Loves Me," Miss Johnson concentrates on amour in such numbers as "Music for Lovers," "You Are in Love," "I Love All of You" and "Let Me Love You." Even in two novelty tunes, "Never Kiss a Man Who Talks" and "The Little Blue Man," she hews to the hearts and flowers theme.

This heavy emphasis on romance might be more appropriate in small amounts on late evening tv. Miss Johnson, of course, established herself as a regular on the Jack Paar show and she gives Paar generous credit for her success. In a tony nitery, however, the steady diet of ballads seems more likely to produce emotional heartburn than the intended heart balm.

Miss Johnson continues through Nov. 19 with Phyllis Diller next in for two weeks. Rees.

Steuben's, Boston

Boston, Nov. 10.

Jenny Collins, Val Perry & Diane (2); Don Dennis, Vic Domino, Tony Bruno Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

Jenny Collins, a fave here, nabs big returns in this 450-seater in the heart of Hub's theatrical district. Miss Collins, opening with "Granada," swings through "Romany" and a medley of Rodgers & Hammerstein and hits the high spot with "Une Bellee Die," displaying her big notes to slick advantage. She wraps it up with encore, partnered with Don Dennis, room's singing emcee, with "My Hero."

Val Perry & Diane, terp team, which has added musicomedy and bongo bits of nice effect, opens the singing show.

Opening with torrid terp number, Perry takes over on an outsize bongo drum as femme looker does some impressionistic terping. Don Dennis gets in a full singing stint. Plus his duet with the headliner, he takes "Cherry Red and Apple Pink" for a ride to fine returns, then segues to "Everythings Coming Up Roses." For clincher he gets crowd to clap along with "Muskrat Ramble."

Vic Domino, newcomer here, plays it straight for laughs with a zany juggling act using cups and plates on wands. He opens with standard pins, hats and balls, then sets up an elaborate stand of wands from which he spins plates, runs around the room handing out wands with spinning plates to audience. Domino races around room from stage to wand holders keeping the plates spinning in a perpetual motion bit. For bowoff he brings femme audience member a wand with spinning plate in either hand and walks off leaving her there for laughs. Tony Bruno's crew cuts the show in fine style and executes Miss Collin's tricky arrangements nicely.

This show exits Nov. 23. Guy...

Myron Cohen, Jane Morgan, Matty Malneck orc (17); $3.50 cover.

With Jane Morgan and Myron Cohen co-headlining afront Matty Malneck's orch, pitted (in for the travellin' Freddy Martin's crew which usually perches here), this entire program comes off strongly in entertainment values.

First to reach the winner's circle is Miss Morgan—who is on first. And though she, like Cohen, is making her Grove debut, she handles herself with the sureness of Perle Mesta hostessing a Washington party.

After several bars of "Fascination" from behind-the-curtain, Miss M. hits the spot in a glove-fitting blue gown that accents her hourglass figure. Now, with all eyes upon her, the platinum blonde fires away with a medley of ballads, show tunes, and several songs couched in French.

Whether she warbled in Continental style or straight, the chanteuse scored. Preemers copped an earful "Strike Up The Band," "Stay Out Of Paris," "Day the Rains Came" and "It Takes Love." Weakest in her repertoire was a folksy "Ballad of Lady Jane."

Cohen was in a laughable stride from the moment he sprang on. Yiddish jokes supposedly lose some of their impact when translated to English. Not so the way Cohen tells 'em. Whether it's his facial expressions, timing, or the inflection of the Jewish accent he uses while storytelling, he evokes yocks.

However, Wednesday's (9) opening crowd was comprised of a lot of showfolk pretty hip to the ways of Cohen. Whether comic's laugh-a-meter will ring loud on other nights will depend solely on whether out-of-towners dropping in are as hip.

Jack Elliott does a creditable job as musical director for Miss Morgan, as do Malneck's tooters who supply good string backing for her, and a lively tempo for the dancers 'tween shows. Kafa.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, Nov. 7.

Guy Lombardo & His Royal Canadians (14), Petticoats (3), Johnny O'Brien, Dorothy Dorben Singers & Dancers (15); roduced by Russ Hall;

Current stint is a playback for Guy Lombardo at Tahoe Harrah's, but it marks the first time he's appeared in the New South Shore Room, which is a 700-seater as compared to the small intimate room in use on his last time around.

Although opening nighters failed to fill the room, the response to the Lombardo styling was impressive, and the music men gave auditors full measure. As per usual, it's a smooth offering filled with standards and evergreens, all executed in faultless manner and interspersed with vocals and spotlighted instrumentaling.

The Dorben Dancers, neatly costumed, take the opener spot with song and dance built around a "cute piece of property" theme with emphasis on the shapely terpers. Choreog is also "cute," and is kept in good taste.

Johnny O'Brien, also in a reprise at Tahoe, is long on chatter (with practically none of it new) and short on his harmonica offerings. Some advantage could be reached with much editing of the one-liners and the shorter stories he essays, and additions in the harmonica titles. He draws a few yocks from first-time tablers, but for those who are catching him for the second time around it's old stuff.

Lombardo has varied his turn with vocals from Kenny Gardner, Bill Flanagan and Cliff Grass, and gives his sidemen good chance for individual recognition. The maestro skillfully batons in his slow motion, tip-toe fashion to full command. And as before, makes personal introduction of brothei Carmen, Lebert and Victor from the band. Titles include such as "Climb Every Mountain," "12th Street Rag," "Third Man Theme" and "Beautiful Ohio."

The Petticoats (three femmes) take a mid spot in the Lombardo 40 minutes for a bit of good harmony to such as "Every Where You Go" and "Bugle Call Rag." The three win good endorsement with a medley of minstrel titles, complete with talents on the banjo from each. They're cute, and do an excellent job. Long.

Hotel St. Regis, N. Y.

Gloria De Haven (with Peter Appleyard Quartet); Milt Shaw Orch and Walter Kay Trio; $3 cover.

Gloria De Haven, a slick, svelte pro with a matured show biz background despite her young years, undoubtedly has more than a "special material" approach when she gets into that "Two-A-Day" number of hers. This is a sort of autobiographical nostalgia, considering her show biz family background (the Carter DeHavens, vaude and musicomedy headliners of a past generation, were her parents) and she probably is one of those romanticized "born-in-a-trunk" kids.

All of which points up the former film ingenue's sleek professionalism as a nitery headliner. She comes by her heritage in the best tradition.

It also points up—on the captious side—wonderment (1) over that titian coiff and (2) her backstopping Peter Appleyard Quartet. Both are relatively minor criticisms because not even a fright wig and this flaming red transformation is nothing of the sort) could handicap Miss De Haven's indelible talent.

Nor is it any reflection on the very rhythmic quartet, headed by the xylophoning and personable Peter Appleyard of whose British background there is made passing albeit pleasant reference.

However, in assaying all values, the customer must recall the softer brownish-blonde coiff which became Miss DeHaven so well; and as for the special musikers, for all their piano-bass-traps-xylo proficiency—and a good group it is too!—they merely become appurtenances to gild the lily.

Miss DeHaven probably could be backstopped as effectively by any competent show band (and none is more pro than Milt Shaw's lamsters from Local 802), therefore arise the considerations what this added overhead means to the performer and (2) whether the outfronters might even wonder why all the fanfare? They're not distracting but, in light of the star's extreme capabilities to carry the load solo, it's extraneous. A special piano-accompanist maybe yes, but why miniature musical aggregation. Still, it's fielder's choice with Miss DeHaven. As for the enhancement values, even when essaying a special routine with maestro Appleyard (in "Making Whoopee") this probably could be chieved with the average good Stej wayist.

Repertoire-wise Miss DeHaven knows her way around a pop or special lyric. With the pops she accents the popular standards and gives them nuance via enhancement of interpretations. Her specials are equally sophisticated and topdrawer, both on script and performance. The Lena Horne influence is there, but then who can get mad about such a standard as a pattern although, in actuality, it doesn't become too intrusive since she confines it to two three interludes ("Deed I Do," etc.).

One wonders also about Miss De Haven's confined and hyperhigh style red-colored sheath which restricts her movement. None the less she varies pace, with an opening-at-the-table mike bit and later an on-the-piano (a la Helen Morgan) interlude. The ballads range from romantic to torch. She varies pace with offbeat madrigal to a "sick" chorus. Withal, a thoroughly professional job apart from opinion on the coif and the quartet.

Town Casino, Buff

Buffalo, Nov. 11.

Tony Bennett, Lottie Bruin, Rummi Bishop, Adorables (5), Moe Balsom Orch (18); $3 minimum $2 entertainment charge.

With this engagement, Tony Bennett returns to one of his early on-the-way-up spots. It's pleasing to record that he recognizes the lift which Harry Altman gave him in his salad days as a singer and he pays tribute publicly to the fact.

Bennett is an extraordinary performer. Few work harder than he to send a song across. There may be singers with better voices and stars with handsomer faces and more imposing physiques, but Bennett puts together what he has for the utmost effectiveness, labors dutifully over every number and emerges on top by reason of a unique combination of hard work, attention to detail and smart showmanship.

Greeted by an overflow crowd which appeared insatiable in its demands, Bennett was in top form for his first showing here in many seasons and he gave it just about everything he had. The orchestra, especially augmented to 18 pieces, was impressive and an immeasurable assist in the overall imprint; but it was Bennett's own way with a song which upped the scoring.

He makes a production of each number and lights it up and lines it out for genuinely enthusiastic returns. His magnetic brand of showmanship comes through in details of dress, demeanor and dialog, and his distinctive mannerisms such as the tie removal and the open-collar gambit add greatly to the impression.

His repertoire opens with "Taking a Chance on Love" and closes with a generous spate of Bennett hits including something from practically all of his best selling disks. A riotous response brings half a dozen enthusiastically received encores.

Supporting show consists of Lottie Bruin in a fast and dexterous juggling stint in the best European music hall metier. Rummi Bishop has a sometimes slow-moving monolog, but soups up the crowd with some antic dancing. The augmented orchestra proves especially striking throughout the run-off which includes the house Adorables comprising five attractive showgirls.

A heavy roster of upcoming bookings is being aggressively plugged by the emcees before and after the show and if Bennett's reception is any criterion, business looks to be on the upgrade.

Tropicana, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Nov. 9.

"Folies Bergere" 2d American edition; Bernard Bros (2), Kathy Barr, Florence & Frederic Dancers, Lily Niagara, Andre Moon Puppets, Dagenham Girl Pipers, Pat Elles, Nicki Martin, Claudine Longet, John & Rene Arnaut, showgirls and dancers (36); Ray Sinatra Orch (16); presented by Lou Walters, designed by Michel Gyarmathy, by arrangement with Paul Derral; choreogrphay, Billy Petch; additional choreo, Ronnie Lewis; decor, R. O. Bodenhorn; orchestral arrangements, Earl Greenberg; $4 minimum.

After several previews, Lou Walters unveiled the second American edition of the "Folies Bergere" to public and press, revealing a sparkling package of entertainment which has all the excitement and flavor of its predecessor. The first "Folies" lasted over a year here, and was going strong at the finish; this edition probably will do as well or better.

The bra-less models wear pasties this time, unlike their completely bare sisters in the previous romp, with only exotic terp star Lily Niagara baring all and passing up the pasties. It will be interesting to see if this turn of events will affect attendance.

Beautiful redhaired Kathy Barr is singing star, socking across a fresh, vibrant personality with her exciting opera-trained voice. Nicki Martino is effective on production vocals as he projects each song with warmth and authority.

The Bernard Brothers (2) click with their very funny pantomime coupled with outlandish costuming and mugging with mouthing to records.

The Florence and Frederic Dancers, with brilliant choreography by Ronnie Lewis, provide stunning framework to the festivities which gorgeously costumed.

John and Rene Arnaut pull yocks with their comedy fiddle and bird whistling turn, and the Andre Moon Puppets please with their precision terps.

Claudine Longet scores as featured terp in a unique silhouette production number, and the atmostphere is churned when the masked dancers splash a colorful Oriental spectacular. The Dagenham Girl Pipers (four bigpipes, five drums, one majorette) add festive volume to a noisy, busy finale, heavily populated with drummers.

"Follies" was designed by Michel Gyarmathy, with overall choreo expertly woven by Billy Petch. Special credit should go to Ray Sinatra, who stepped in at the last minute as replacement maestro for the orch (16), cutting the show with the exact flair needed.

This edition is in for an indefinite run.

Birdland, N. Y.

Herbie Mann Sextet (plus four trumpets), Gloria Lynn, Earl May Trio, Charles Bell Contemporary Jazz Quartet; $1.50 admission, $2.50 minim m.

Flute and saxman Herbie Mann, who's managed to keep his Afro-Cuban Sextet together for a year and a half, mainly through consistent bookings in New York jazz spots, is in this Broadway jazz mecca for his first two-week stand and has added four trumpeters to get the big-band sound that's almost the thing again.

Aside from the big sound, Mann's longtime desire has been to weld into one group incomparable African and Cuban rhythms and the American jazz man's equally incomparable melodic flare. The four trumpeters — Danny Styles Ralph Erickson, Ziggy Shatz and Leo Ball—round out the domestic phase of an international blast that has a lot of authenticity and a lot of showmanship. Latter should bring the band popularity outside the jazz coterie.

Along with Mann's flute and sax solos and the new brass is Johnny Rae on vibes. But for the wild, sustained beat, th band can go to five rhythm with Rae on a switch to drums; Rudy Collins on drums; Knobby Totah, bass; Ray Mantilla, conga, and Michael Ola Tunji, African drums. Latter adds a sharp show biz touch, appearing during the course of a set in native costume.

Band gets sock returns from a book that ranges from Sunny Rolli ' "St. Thomas" (practically a theme with the Sextet) to upbeated standards like "Dearly Beloved" (which winds with an all-rhythm session) to ethnic offerings like the Nigerian chant, "Freedom Words" (featuring Ola Tunji on drums and vocal in native tongue).

Singer Gloria Lynn has come a long way from her shoutin' days five or so years ago at Harlem's vaudery, the Apollo. She's trained down the blues and gospel emoting to become a first-class jazz artist. Best in her varied book are the old standards that lend to a "soul jazz" rendition — "Birth of the Blues," "This Little Boy of Mine," and so on. Earl May trio provides solid accomp.

Charles Bell (piano) Contemporary Jazz Quartet tends to the pretentious in some of its cacophonous "compositions," but strikes some exciting melodic innovations in scores featuring Bell and guitarist Bill Smith in duo.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, Nov. 11.

Mills Bros (3), Billy Falbo, Starlets (8), with Frank Fanelli and Reii De Haven, Lou LeVitt Orch (10); $3 minim m.

In their many past dates at the Riverside the Mills Bros. have always proved a potent lure—and for this playback it's a repeat story. Opening-niters indicated it'll be strong b.o. for the two-week stint, and the threesome draws a type of crowd that's also good for the casino tables. Second-billed is comic Billy Falbo, a newcomer to the area who does an okay job in the opener spot.

The freres, with no change in styling or staging (as it should be), have made some changes in title selection, but (again wisely) only to a slight degree. There are a few new things, but tablers came to hear the familiar, and they get a good portion. Rapport among the three (at least on stage) is obvious, and it comes across well with tablers.

With a minimum of chatter the trio get strong endorsement with such as their trademarked "Glow Worm," "Til Then," "Paper Doll," and "Basin Street Blues," with instrumental impreshes on the latter. Couple not immediately identifiable with the Mills monicker are "How Blue" and "Yellow Bird," both clicks. The boys, as always, turn in command performance. Backing Herbert, Don, and Harry Norman Brown on guitar.

Falbo, debuting in this section of the country, gets a lot of mileage out of his traveling mike, but has a wee to learn of blase Reno auditors. His is a forceful delivery, and he has many good lines. Some difficulty in immediate acceptance, but once he's in he does a neat job. Editing of some of the older lines would do no harm to the routine, ditto a couple of the blue lines, particularly for the booze set in this area who don't seem to be impressed with the indigo. He works fast, and can't be criticized for lack of effort.

Starlets bracket the show in fine fashion in Moro-Landis productions with Frank Fanelli capably handling the vocal-emcee chores, and Rene De Haven working well with the girls in the choreog department. Lou LeVitt batons entire show in first-rate manner.

Hotel manager Bill Miller has the Swe-Danes and the Kings IV set to open on Nov. 24.

Vicky Autier (with John Bonada), Jimmy Blade Orch (6); $2 cover.

Vicky Autier, the Gallic chirper-88er who likes to vocally country-hop, is second-timing in the elegant little Camellia House for what bodes to be a hotsy stand.

Reassuringly, she's even more impressive than her first visit indicated, and proof that solid vocability is still a singer's best route to audience affection. Mlle. Autier offers with moxie, and projects convincingly in all tempi.

Her book is equally refreshing, with (natch) strong Franco-Italo flavoring, and including her version of the new hit, "Never on Sunday." She lines some of 'em to her own Steinway accomp and serves up an engaging solo or two.

A Viennese air is one of the delights, and her windup Edith Piaf-cleffed "Hymn to Love" delineation clinches the session. She gets a notable assist from John Bonada's guitar-accordion manipulations and his cueing of Jimmy Blade's stellar crew.

Comic Henny Youngman is down for a Dec. 2 start.

Dukes of Dixieland (7), Paulette Sisters (3), Jimmy Palmer Orch (11); $2.50 weekni ht minimum; $4 Sats.

The Dukes of Dixieland are playing their first major nitery date in their home town and judging from the enthusiasm their two-beating generated opening night in the plush Blue Room, it looks like the velvet ropes will be up regularly during the next two weeks.

The Dukes were faves with locales and tourists during the years they were based at Hyp Guinle's Famous Door on Bourbon St. before taking to the road and hitting the big time jackpot. They also have built up a following through their disclicks for the Audio Fidelity label.

Set up with two trombones, trumpet, clarinet, piano, drums, tuba and bass, crew dishes out an energetic Dixieland beat. Their library is played with wit and imagination, and they swing out easily with the foot-stompingest and palm-poundingest music ever to rock Seymour Weiss' nocturnal rendezvous.

Frank Assunto's trumpeting is clean and venturesome, and he shines especially in a section of "When the Saints Go Marchin' In." "Dear Old Southland" features the slick tromboning of brother Freddie.

Boys play ensemble and solo with compelling creativity from start to finish and have customers with them all the way. Also spotlighted are Mo Mahoney, drums; Rich Mattison, tuba; Clyde Fuller, clarinet; Clyde Pound, piano, and "Papa Jack" Assunto, father of Frankie and Freddie, who's also a whiz on trombone as well as banjo.

Teeing off the show are Paulette Sisters, playing a return engagement. Three young blonde lookers combine a solid musical beat with a slick package of tunes. Singing is their forte and they get to it quickly, rousing the customers to generous applause.

Girls work nicely together, are well rehearsed and alert to audience tastes. Standout was their voice blending on "Rockabye Baby" and bits from "Music Man."

Jimmy Palmer's orchestra backs show expertly and attracts crowds to floor during ankle-bending sessions with tuneful mixture of old, new and Latino tunes. Band's warbler, Bill Dyer, also wins nice hand for his piping on bandstand.

Show runs for two weeks.

Dean Martin, Page & Bray, Garr Nelson, Copa Girls (12), Antonio Morelli Orch (23); produced by Jack Entratter; choreography Renne Stuart; $4 minimum.

Dean Martin is hotter than ever in Jack Entratter's lineup of blockbusters, and the fact remains that he's one of Vegas' most potent lures for gamblers. Latest turn in the Copa Room spotlights the top-notch showman-singer more relaxed than ever—in fact he appears to be imitating his imitators.

Songalog, punctuated with th typical Dino-ism comedy dialog, plus many topical gags ("I just talked to Jack this morning and he made me Secretary of Liquor," "Here's a number dedicated to Mr. Nixon: 'They Didn't Believe Me' ") pulls hefty yocks and brisk mitting. Ken Lane, 88er fronting the Antonio Morelli orch (23), gives strong assistance to the pleasant party.

One of the best acrobatic terp acts in the biz, Page and Bray, are also on bill. The agile and attractive French couple have a knack of making extremely difficult twists and turns look easy.

Garr Nelson's big voice effectively backbones two Renne Stuart production numbers with the 12 Copa Girls.

Chicago, Nov. 7.

Tania Velia, Cy Touff Orch (4); no cover or minimum.

Shapely singer Tania Velia, student of architecture and champ swimmer from Yugoslavia, is the felicitous choice for incepting a sometime show policy in this intimate cellar dancery, which is the b.o. adjunct of the new Happy Medium cabaret-theatre in the Rush St. nitery belt.

As street's only terp spot, booking the two-beat-to-Latino modes per the Cy Touff and Larry Green bands, Downstage Room has done nicely in first months of existence and claims consistent upcurve biz, finding most favor from the managerial-exec classes who remember when hoofery was a potent after-dark attraction.

Addition of chirpers (when they meet specifications here) is logical wooing of the male for sake of bar commerce, though it helps in the justification if the femme can also sing. In this, it's so much to the good, the Marienthal freres are usually reckoned in this town as sincere on effort. So it comes as no surprise that the blond, beehive-ish-coiffed Miss Velia displays good form in talent, as well.

She offers her basic, if abridged, nitery turn here, playing up a European piquancy that's generally effective and convincing. Naturally, songalog is multilingual, and ranges from witty to torchy. "I'm Gonna Learn to Speak Like You" kids her halting Americanese and our language peculiarities, and makes for an engaging act opener.

Another bit, that doesn't quite hit mark, starts by ribbing barflies and segues into a cry-in-the-beer item, an image Miss Velia doesn't project too well. "Caio Caio Bambino" and the "Anna" picture theme bridge the specials for good response. She shows considerable ken in most departments, being particularly savvy in fore-fronting the charm-personality values. With a bit more nitery exposure, she ought to find good pickin's on the chanteuse circuit.

Room, by the way, is comfortable, and, barring biz jamups, offers an adequate-sized dance floor.

Dog Racing, Baseball Loom for Honolulu

Honolulu, Nov. 15.

The entertainment dollars of the home-towners here may be split in additional directions if two proposals go through. George F. McCarthy, board chairman of a Colorado kennel club, hopes to establish a dog racing track in Honolulu. He also hopes that the 1962 session of the state legislature will legalize pari-mutuel betting on dog racing.

The second part of the one-two punch could come from baseball. There's a move under way for the city to buy the existing Honolulu stadium from Hawaii U. for $1,000,000, then spend $500,000 in renovations and improvements so that Honolulu could qualify for a Pacific Coast League baseball franchise.

House Reviews

Music Hall, N. Y.

"Town and Country," produced by Leon Leonidoff, with Symphony Orch under Raymond Paige, Rockettes (dances by Emilia Sherman), Corps de Ballet (Margaret Sande, director), Helen Wood, David Evans, Barbara Joerling, Dan Resin, The Manhattanaires, Trio Martelli, Margie Lee; sets, James Stewart Morcom; costumes, Frank Spencer; lighting, Eugene Braun; "The World of Suzie Wong" (Par), reviewed in current issue.

Current Music Hall show, "Town and Country," is big and colorful and rather uncertain of theme, almost as if producer Leon Leonidoff could not decide what might appropriately complement the screen attraction ("World of Suzie Wong") which, of course, focuses on Hong Kong prosties.

Result is a mildly diverting paean to Autumn, wherein the Corps de Ballet is featured in a red-coated fox hunt number and the Rockettes appear as an extremely precise group of busy little waitresses (serving Thanksgiving dinner), with a windup that reproduces (on stage) a miniature version of the Radio City skating rink.

The rink rates the biggest hand in the show, not only for James Stewart Morcom's ingenious setting, but also for figure skater Margie Lee, who cuts some fancy ice backed by "Slaughter on Tenth Ave."

Trio Martelli, two guys and a girl, register nicely with a comic acrobatic-dance routine in which the lady gets tossed, flung and dropped around the stage for startling effect. Dancers Helen Wood (as the fox) and David Evans (as the leader of the hunt) effectively front the fox hunt number, but their ballet turns are pretty well dwarfed by the giant stage. It takes the Corps de Ballet and later the Rockettes to really dazzle the eye.

Solo singers Barbara Joerling and Dan Resin are similarly overwhelmed in a brief Thanksgiving Dinner interlude featuring "Moments to Remember" and a full chorus rendition of "You'll Never Walk Alone."

Show, though not very long in running time, comes across as comparatively lethargic by Hall standards, and might have benefitted with one or two outright comedy turns.

Symphony Orch, under Raymond Paige, opens the show with Saint-Saens' "Rondo Capriccioso," spotlighting violin soloist Jesse Cusimano. It's longhair but lively. In any case, the curtain goes up before the natives (and tourists) become restless. Anby.

Bobino, Paris

Paris, Nov. 7.

Francois Deguelt, Annie Fratellini, Richard Anthony, Rene Cousinier, Silvia Ivars Ballet (8), Tanton Sisters (2), Bela Kremo, Pierre Etaix; $1.50 top.

No heavyweight headliners in this program but there's enough breeziness and cohesion to make for an okay two weeks at this nabe house. Francois Deguelt is a personable young singer with a big voice.

But Deguelt has no definite style and just sings songs instead of creating a more stable songalog and showing more feeling and insight into the ditties. However, he is a pleasant entry who should mold into an okay staple with disk chances bright.

Annie Fratellini is a pert songstress with a husky voice who has some circus background to help in her delivery of dramatic and light songs. She, too, needs a more personalized style. But she has showmanship and is a good second spot chirper.

Richard Anthony is a rock and roll singer with acceptable rhythmic songs. He has a fair voice and is helped by a good sense of timing. However, he is only a passable reflection of the Yank practitioners and appears mainly a local bet.

Rene Cousinier is a patter comedian who muggs too much to too light material. He is only intermittently funny.

Silvia Ivars Ballet donates colorful it watered down flamenco and Hispano terp interludes, but it give the show a needed splash of production value. Tanton Sisters (2) cavort on a high vertical bar for spins on trapezes held in each other's jaws for a good filler.

Bela Kremo is an adroit, fast juggler with hats, cigar boxes and balls. Pierre Etaix is a clown with breakway chairs and instrument for a smooth filler. But he is wasted in the opening spot for his work is much to subtle for that. User in the right slot, he is a good act. Mosk.

Apollo, N. Y.

Idlewild Revue, with Roy Hamilton, Harlem Bros. (3), Lil Greenwood, Four Tops, George Kirby, Lon Fontaine Trio, chorus line (10), Choker Campbell band (12); "The Tingler" (Col).

Wailing, belti sighing Roy Hamilton topbills a revue package in a return to the Harlem vaudery where he got his start on an Amateur Night sesh a few years back. He climaxes the spread with a solid set of his old disk faves, and and upbeat medley of "I Love You," "All of Me" and "Around the World in 80 Days" that swings the customers for a begoff.

What goes before is a generally fast-paced, brightly costumed revue in traditional format. Only lull comes in George Kirby's extended clowning with r&r quartet, the Four Tops, which is strained comedy indeed. He bails out, however, with his impressions, particularly the standard Louis Armstrong trumpet and voice takeoff ("Jack the Knife").

Four Tops themselves, are class for the r&r league. Group's turn includes some surprisingly disciplined harmonizing on the standards "September in the Rain" and "I Only Have Eyes for You." Their terping is the studied precision stuff that's the going cliche with r&r ensembles.

Lil Greenwood pipes a trio of tunes with religioso overtones and pleasing verve. The three Harlem brothers open with some frantic acroterping that punches across via sheer exerti

A couple of zesty production numbers by the chorus line are highlighted by the sexy interpretive dancing of the Lon Fontaine Trio (two guys and a girl). Bill.

Olympia, Paris

Paris, Nov. 7.

Petula Clark, Bob Azzam Orch (7), Charlie Cairoli & Co. (3), Jean-Claude Darnal, Limbos (4), Shaller Bros. (2), Balcombes (2), Tags Bros. (3), Del Rey & Winnie, Philippe Parmentier; $2 top.

Petula Clark is a pert, bouncy British singer who has learned to sing in French. She acquits herself well, but offers nothing but a batch of pop tunes sans an overall individuality. She's more suited for boites than headlining houses.

But she has rhythm, sings true and gets mitts here. She displays more style than the average pop French singer and has appeal here accordingly.

Bob Azzam orch does a flock of fluffy, saccharine ballads of Arabic, Yank and Italo origin. Feed-back mikes give the smooth orchestra an echo effect. Azzam, who's written the popular "Mustapha," an Arabic chant, has an okay sweet voice and syrupy arrangements to match his outfit. This crew fits Continental tastes but appears too mannered for U. S. chances.

Charlie Cairoli & Co. is a clown trio with solid tomfoolery built around a series of musical instruments. The circusy slapstick is well ordered, inventive and fits snugly in this house. It gets solid mitts.

Jean-Claude Darnal is a tousled young singer with catchy offbeat songs which he delivers in an effortless manner. His self-cleffed tunes get knowing delivery, but a certain ingenuousness and archness peg him more effective in intimate boites than the demanding houses where greater projection is needed.

Limbos (4) are a dynamic Trinidad terp group with a gimmick of passing under constantly lowered horizontal sticks that makes this a racy, catching entry with good U. S. tv and boite possibilities.

Shaller Bros. do a zesty trampoline filler and prowess is leavened with good comedics. Balcombes use a revolving ladder on a bar on which they cavort and seesaw with good teamwork for risible as well as expertly timed shenanigans. It is a standout filler.

Tags Bros. do a record mime act with the inevitable Spike Jones "Tea For Two" backing. They show better timing than invention and remain a local bet, at best. Del Rey & Winnie have the former doing smart, rapid juggling while the latter supplies some eye appeal and passable terping. Philippe Parmentier intros with snap and can hold his own with patter for stage waits.

Though sans much headline pull, this is a well balanced show and could have an okay two week biz career in store. Mosk.

New Acts

BILL DANA

Comedy
40 Mins.
hungry i, San Francisco

Bill Dana is a real pro, rocking his audience with 40 minutes of rich, dialect humor in an act which is neither sick nor broad but still has lots of bite.

He comes on softly—indeed, all his comedy seems gentle—with a series of small gags which, in his skilled hands, assume blockbuster proportions.

Then he goes into his first big set piece, saying "now I'd like to introduce someone to you who really needs an introduction" — Jose Jiminez, of course. The first Jiminez characterization is uproarious, after which he steps out of character, makes a brief (if needless) apology for dialect humor, and follows with a masterful piece about a Middle European Jewish immigrant out prospecting in the Southwest in the 1850s.

Finally, he tops himself with a long Jiminez "interview" in which Jiminez, America's chief astronaut (writer Don Hinkley plays straight man for Dana-Jiminez and has a hard time keeping a straight face). Dana winds up with a quick audience Q and A, all light-hearted, unembarrassed and surprisingly polished.

Dana's "secrets" include:

1) He has his characters clearly in mind; 2) he has created his characters and lines himself, so that they fit his own personality without strain; 3) he evidently is well-rehearsed; 4) he has great stage poise, probably as result of having worked niteries—Dana & Wood—in the early 1950s; 5) he hews closely to the subtle line between tragedy and comedy, a la the best of Chaplin, without ever pushing beyond the realm of comedy, so that his audience feels great sympathy, i.e. empathy, with him; 6) he is utterly inoffensive to any sector of middle-class morality but because of his inborn wit retains a sharp needle of humor.

It should be noted that Dana is the third potentially important comedian "spun off" from Steve Allen's now-defunct tv show (the others which come to mind immediately are Tom Poston and Louis Nye) into the rugged arena of live entertainment. Allen's ability to spot and nurture such rare talent has to share a bit of the glory of Dana's audience success. Stef.

JACQUIE CHAN

Songs
18 Mins.
Society, London

At least Jacquie Chan has no false ideas about her own talents. Before she starts her second number she explains that she only has "a small voice," and sets out to prove herself right with devastating ease. It is one of those strange circumstances in which a new recruit to the nitery scene has some interesting material, but not the ability to deliver.

Nevertheless, Miss Chan generates curiosity appeal which will doubtless spell business during her three weeks at this intime late night restaurant. It is doubtful, however, whether she could repeat as a draw in subsequent engagements, unless she undergoes rigorous training and learns how to use her pipes to less limited effect. She was, it will be recalled, the "favorite model" of Antony Armstrong-Jones while he was still a professional photographer before his marriage to Princess Margaret. Her name has since appeared regularly in the gossip columns, and she did a standin stint recently

Dramatists-League Talks Dawdle; Guild Advises Members on Toll TV

The Dramatists Guild, which appears to be taking its time in presenting proposals for a new basic contract with the League of N.Y. Theatres, has been making progress in another area. The Guild has been exploring toll television in relation to its potential use of dramatic and musical legit properties and has concluded that at present authors should receive a minimum of 10% of the total gross expended by viewers against a guarantee approximate to the amount now being paid for a free commercial tv performance.

As for the League agreement covering legit, which expires next Jan. 20, there's been only one meeting thus far between representatives of both organizations. It took place several weeks ago. The current contract is an extension of a five-year pact which was to have expired last May 20. The extension was agreed upon by both organizations because of the pressure of the League's other contract negotiations, first with Actors Equity and then with Local 802, American Federation of Musicians.

At the solo League-Guild meeting held to date, it was agreed by both sides not to discuss what took place at the session until the situation was more developed and consequently the memberships of both organizations are in the dark as to what's going on. The meeting, it's understood, involved a discussion of existing managerial problems, with the League presenting data support of its claims. The Guild has presumably been giving the matter further study and, as yet,

Chi Tunetent Outfit Plans Similar Venture In Suburban Milwaukee

Milwaukee, Nov. 15.

The fir of Rach, Bidwill & McCarthy, whose Chicago Melody Top tune tent went into the black in its first season last summer, has selected a site in suburban Brookfield here for a similar operati When the Milwaukee operation gets under way, probably not before 1962, the two musical summer theatres will be able to swap productions, thereby reducing rehearsal costs.

William Rach, prexy of the Chicago firm, believes it is too late to plan for a 1961 opening of the Milwaukee Melody Top, since the money has to be raised and the land has not been acquired. The project was held up this fall by Brookfield residents, who protested the proposed use of the land for a summer theatre, although it is zoned commercial, because they feared it would create traffic problems and bring dow residential land values. After considering the matter, the Brookfield Common Council last week okayed the legit venture.

Brookfield is a relatively new suburb about 10 miles west of Milwaukee, with good highway access from the city. It is about two miles from the largest suburban shopping centre in the area.

Rach is proposing a 2,100-seat theatre and hopes to raise the bulk of the capital from Wisconsin investors, although many of the stockholders in Chicago Melody Top Corp. will presumably buy shares. The Chi tune tent, a 2,113-seater situated in suburban Hillside, paid off its entire $180,000 nut in a 12-week opening season last summer. Rach is contemplating a 15-week season in 1961.

'La Plume' de Ma Strips For Date in Las Vegas

The long-run Broadway musical, "La Plume de Ma Tante," will be spiced up a bit for its scheduled engagement in Las Vegas, opening Dec. 23. Michael Shurtleff, casting director for producer David Merrick, is seeking two strippers for the cast for th gambling resort date.

The French revue, currently in its 100th week at the Royale Theatre, N. Y., will end its Broadway run Dec. 17. Following the Las Vegas stand, it will tour the regular key cities, but without the dancer-strippers in the show.

Nat'l Theatre Conf. Has Lunch-Confab on Crix

The National Theatr Conference will hold its 1960 meeting in New York beginning next Friday (25) with a luncheon in the Oxford Room of the Hotel Piccadilly, N.Y. legit critics and drama editors have been invited to attend the luncheon and to spend the afternoon participating in various panel discussions on reviewing.

Paul Baker is president of the NTC and John Gassner is chairman of this year's meeting.

Coast 'Best Man' Had $35,700 Loss

The Coast edition of "The Best Man," which folded last Oct. 15 at the Alcazar Theatre, San Francisco, lost $35,700 on a $40,000 investment. That's revealed by Randolph Hale, who co-produced the offering with the Playwrights Co., sole sponsor of the original Broadway edition, now in its 33d week at the Morosco Theatre, N. Y.

Hale, in correcting a recent report in VARIETY that the Coast production had lost around $55,000 on an $80,000 investment, notes that the production cost $36,200 to open in Santa Barbara, where it dropped $2,800 on a two-day breakstand. The production then earned an operating profit of $13,500 on a five-week Los Angeles run, but its subsequent five-week Frisco engagement represented an operating loss of $10,200.

Therefore, the show, which played only th Santa Barbara, L. A., and Frisco bookings, earned total operating profit of $500 on its run of 10 weeks and two days. That amount, deducted from the production cost of $36,200, counts for the $35,700 loss.

The financing of the Coast venture was shared equally by the Playwrights Co., and Hale, who also operates the Alcazar. The Coast production costarred Leon Ames, William Gargan and Gene Raymond in the respective parts played on Broadway by Melvyn Douglas, Lee Tracy and Frank Lovejoy.

Balcony Oracle

During the "Politics and Poker" number in the first act of the election night (Nov. 8) performance of "Fiorello" at the Broadhurst Theatre, N.Y., the line, "We've got to find some qualified Republican who's willing to lose" was sung as usual by Howard da Silva.

Taking that as a cue, a balcony patron shouted, "How about Nixon?"

Eye Kim Stanley In New 'Laurette' For Next Season

Roger L. Stevens, in an unusual move for a Broadway producer, plans a new presentation of a play which folded during its out-of-town tryout when done by another management. The property which Stevens has added to his already expansive future production schedule, "Laurette."

The Stanley Young adaptation of Margaret Courtney's biography of her actress-mother, the late Laurette Taylor, collapsed early last month in Philadelphia following the hospitalization of its star, Judy Holiday. Young is revising the script for the projected venture, with Kim Stanley a prospect for the title role.

The Philly casualty was produced by Alan Pakula, whose future production plans involve another member of Miss Taylor's family. Scheduled for Broadway presentation next season by Pakula is a musical comedy to be adapted from "Blood and Thunder," a forthcoming novel by Miss Taylor's son, Dwight Taylor. The book will be published by Putnam.

Fallen Angel's Lament

By Tom Weatherly

The roasted chestnut back,
So does the pumpkin pie;
But the shows I make investments in—
Go to New Haven and die.
Here's to the good old tryout tours,
They never change at all;
They always start with love in bloom—
And end with a riot call.

'Golden' 109½G Loss, Twice Original; May Get Revenue From Film, Stock

"Golden Fleecing," which was unsuccessfully reactivated last season after closing in rehearsal the previous semester, represented a $109,666 loss at the end of its 11-week run at the Henry Miller's Theatre, N. Y. That's revealed in an audit covering the show's last four weeks at the house.

Subsidiary income from the sale of the film rights is reflected in the statement, and it's figured additional income will be forthcoming from the stock and amateur market. The property was a frequent entry on the strawhat circuit this year. There's also a possibility of additional revenue from the picture deal.

The film rights were sold to Metro for $50,000 down, plus a sliding arrangement up to a maximum of $275,000. The production got $18,000 as its 40% share, less 10% commissions, of the down payment and another $8,100 as its share of the revenue from the sliding setup.

The deal with Metro also calls for a 10% participation in the film. The legit production's share of that will be 40%, less the usual commission. Therefore, a picture version of the play may bring the production with additional income.

When the Lorenzo Semple Jr. comedy closed in rehearsal during the '58-'59 season, it was being co-produced by Courtney Burr and Elliot Nugent. The latter subsequently relinquished his managerial spot to Gilbert Miller, who was partnered with Burr in the actual Broadway presentation of the play. In addition to the venture's original $100,000 capitalization, another $20,000 was advanced by Miller.

MacLiammoir as 'Oscar' Due for London Repeat

London, Nov. 15.

Michael MacLiammoir's two-week engagement in "The Importance of Being Oscar," which closed at the Apollo Theatre last Saturday (12), is due for a repeat in the West End after Christmas.

The show, presented by Michael Redgrave and Fred Sadoff, is due for a prior provincial tour and then, after the return London stand, will go to New York, South Africa, Australia and the Continent. It will probably be under the Sol Hurok banner in the U. S., although the deal hasn't been closed.

Set Jap 'Holiday' For Legit Dates

Cleveland, Nov. 15.

An expanded edition of "Holiday in Japan," originally a Tokyo-produced package revue that toured niteries for nearly two years, began a new career at the Hanna Theatre here last night (Mon.) for a one week stand. This is its first booking on the legit basis.

Remodeled by director Paul Godkin, the show now has 30 production numbers with about 400 costumes, running two hours. Troup of 75 carries three trucks of settings and 55 Japanese entertainers, headed by Izumi Yukimura.

In its previous one-hour version, "Holiday" played a year at the New Frontier, Las Vagas, followed by month's run at the Latin Quarter, N. Y., and three weeks at Philadelphia's new Latin Casino. Several days of dress rehearsals of the king-sized edition were held here by Godkin, Alan Lee and Ted Dale as pit conductor of an 18-piece band. According to company manager Nate Armstrong, the added production costs, and restaging expense run to about $120,000.

After the Cleveland stand, "Holiday" goes to the Cass, Detroit, for two weeks; the O'Keefe Center, Toronto, for a week and then the Shubert, Boston, for two weeks, Dec. 12-19.

Japan's Nichigeki Troupe Set for 6-Month Tour Of Great Britain, Continent

Tokyo, Nov. 15.

The largest Japanese show ever to play the British Isles will leave Dec. 7 for six months of performances in Scotland, England and possibly on the Continent. About 70 performers, 47 of them members of the Nichigeki Dance Team, plus a staff of 10 will make up the Toho package to be presented by S. A. Gorlinsky, in association with Moss Empires Stoll Corp.

Slated to headline the troupe are 18-year-old singer Mitsuko Sawamura, baritone Yoshiake Takai and vocalist Misao Kamijo. The tap-dancing Nakano Brothers will be featured, along with jugglers and an acrobat. The show, to be titled "Tokyo 1961," will open Dec. 17 at the King's Theatre, Glasgow, then moves to London for an indefinite run, probably at the 2,500-seat Coliseum.

The two-part program will comprise 23 numbers, mainly from the Nichigeki's summer and autumn dance revues. Japanese-steeped routines will predominate. Expected to score heavily is the ghost sequence against the backdrop of a castle which succumbs to the ravages of an earthquake and then a fire. Borrowed from other cultures will be a modernized "Swan

'Tevya' a Hit at Bandbox Spot in Pitt Playhouse

Arnold Perl's adaptation of Sholom Aleichem's "Tevya and His Daughters," which had an unsuccessful stand at the Carnegie Hall Playhouse, N. Y., a couple of seasons ago, is doing okay in Pittsburgh. It's set a run record for the Pittsburgh Playhouse's 68-seat Upstairs Theatre.

The Upstairs is one of three theatres in the Playhouse. The other are the 342-seat Hamlet St. Theatre and the 550-seat Craft Ave. Theatre. "Tevya," which opened at the Upstairs last Feb. 13 ran 114 performances prior to closing for the summer. It reopened Oct. 3 and, following its last performance Saturday (29), moved to the larger Hamlet St. Theatre.

A total of 137 performances were played at the Upstairs to a paid attendance of 9,385.

Shows Out of Town

Critic's Choice

Wilmington, Nov. 9.

Otto Preminger presentation of comedy in three acts, by Ira Levin. Staged by Preminger; setting, George Jenkins; costumes, Oleg Cassini. Stars Henry Fonda; features Mildred Natwick, Virginia Gilmore, Georgann Johnson. Opened Nov. 9, '60, at the Playhouse, Wilmington; $5.50 top.

Angela Ballantine ..... Georgann Johnson
John Ballantine ..... Eddie Hodges
Parker Ballentin ..... Henry Fonda
Dion Kapakos ..... Lou Antonio
Esie ..... Billie Allen
Charlotte Orr ..... ildred Natwick
Ivy London ..... Virginia Gilmore

Ira Levin, venturing where angels fear to tread, has written a play about a drama critic, and the result is a laugh-laden show. It should be even funnier by the time it reaches Broadway, assuming that the overlong first act and slow second act are properly doctored. The third act is already a dilly.

Levin can write witty dialog, and the laughs are almost continuous when the show hits its stride. The author, who got his plot idea from N.Y. Herald Tribune drama critic Walter Kerr's book, "How Not to Write a Play," is dealing with the difficulties, that ensue when the wife of a top Broadway reviewer decides to write a play.

With the show ready for the opening there's a clash as the hubby decides he will review it, while his spouse holds out for a substitute critic, on the theory someone not biased should judge her work. Of course, it all ends happily for everyone except the wife's ad rer and the critic's still amorous first wife.

The cast is excellent. In the meaty leading role, Henry Fonda underplays expertly, culminating in a very funny drunk episode.

As his wife and would-be playwright, Georgann Johnson is charming and effective, especially in her emotional scenes. As the moppet son, Eddie Hodges handles himself with assurance. Mildred Natwick provides welcome comedy as a breezy mother-in-law, Lou Antonio is effective as the director who mixes romance and business, and Vigiria Gilmore is a visual addition as the actress ex-wife who couldn't take it when the critic panned her plays.

Preminger has provided smooth comedy staging. The George Jenkins living room-den setting is outstanding and Oleg Cassini's clothes get plenty of attention. Klep.

All the Way Home

New Haven, Nov. 11.

Fred Coe (in association with Arthur Cantor) presentation of three-act drama by Tad Mosel, based on James Agee's novel, "A Death in the Family." Staged by Arthur Penn; settings and lighting, David Hays; costumes, Raymond Sovey. Features Colleen Dewhurst, Arthur Hill, Aline MacMahon, Lilliam Gish, Clifton James, Thomas Chalmers, John Megna, Tom Wheatley, Lenka Peterson, Dorrit Kelly, Edwin Wolfe, Georgia Simmons. Opened Nov. 11, '60, at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven; $4.80 top.

Rufus ..... John Megna
Boys ..... hrry Provost, Jeff Conaway, ry Morgan, Robert Ader
Jay Follet ..... Arthur Hill
Mary Follet ..... Colleen Dewhurst
Ralph Follet ..... Clifton James
Sally Follet ..... Lenka Peterson
John Henry Follet ..... Edwin Wolfe
Jessie Follet ..... Georgia Simmons

Aunt Hannah Lync ... Aline MacMahon
Joel Lynch ..... Thomas Chalmers
Andrew Lynch ..... Tom Wheatley
Father Jackson ..... Art Smith

As a play, "All the Way Home" leaves something to be desired, as it never resolves much of anything specific As a theatrical production, ho ever, exemplifies what can be accomplished through a combinati of quality writing, talented and outstanding direction.

The Tad Mosel dramatization of James Agee's novel, "A Death in the Family," is a sober, austere work, but if it can withstand the resistance of playgoers who insist on froth rather than substance it should do at the boxoffice. The play relies on a series of vignettes to convey its somewhat spare story line which, per se, could be detailed in a paragraph. It is the tale of a woman who has married a "reformed" drinker, and her reaction to his death in a driving accident. Hers is a mixed marriage and there is some frank in-law dialog on the subject.

Paced in keeping with the 1915 period in Knoxville, the action unfolds as a succession of warm, emotion-packed scenes, suberbly staged in the homely tempo of their day. Many of these scenes have cameo effect as uninvolved characters remain motionless while specific roles are being emphasized in other areas of a skeletonized setting. The scenery, incidentally, is a marvel of imaginative simplicity.

Standout are Colleen Dewhurst as the pregnant wife who is widowed by the car crash, and mopped John Megna, who exhibits remarkable understanding of his role as a five-year-old. Miss Dewhurst gives a sturdy preformance in variety of emotional keys.

Other excellent acting is provided by Arthur Hill as the wavering husband, Aline MacMahon as a comforting aunt, Lillian Gish as an elderly in-law, and Clifton James in an unpleasant role. Bone.

Send Me No Flowers

Baltimore, Nov. 10.

Courtney Burr & Edward Specter Productions Inc. presentation of three-act (four scene) comedy by Norman Barasch and Carroll Moore. Staging, James Dyas; setting and lighting, Frederick Fox; incidental music, Will Lorin and George Weiss. Stars David Wayne; features Nancy Olson. Opened Nov. 9, '60, at Ford's Theatre, Baltimore; $4.88 top.

Judy Kimball ..... Nancy Olson
George Kimball ..... David Wayne
Delivery Boy ....Michael Miguel O'Brien
Dr. Morrissey ..... Frank Marlin
Bert ..... ichard McMurray
Arnold ..... Peter Turgeon
Passersby ..... righton, Joe Ponazecki, Helen-Jean Arthur Heywood Hale Broun ..... Carolyn Olsen ..... Judy Carrol

"Send Me No Flowers," by Norman Barasch and Carroll Moore, is an unpretentious and slim farce, a one-joke in a three-act spread that just might make it if the authors hypo the laughs in the first two acts to the level of the third. As it stands, the new play is a reasonably amusing comedy.

Even with its present faults, the show compares favorably with other suburban farces that have had comfortable runs on Broadway. The plot concerns a hypochondriacal Westchesterite, played by David Wayne, who overhears the end of a conversation and erroneously assumes he has only a short while to live.

He buys a burial plot and arranges for his wife's romantic and financial future. The wife, played by Nancy Olson, mistakenly assumes that her husband is dallying and there are the requisite complication until the happy ending. The humor may be a little hard for some playgoers to take, since much of it is of a coronary-mortuary nature.

The targets of the authors in this spoof of suburbia are not the usual mortgage, home repair, commuter woes and kiddies, but such health faddist items as cholesterol, chest pains and sympatomatic jargon. The staging is effective and the action is sparked by upstage bits of business spotted as the principals daydream, in somewhat similar manner as was used in "Seven Year Itch."

Wayne, an expert comic, is fine as the synptom-happy husband, and Miss Olson keeps pace with him. Both were tripping over lines opening night, but this disappeared toward close of the breakin engagement. Others who make nice impressions are Frank Merlin as a family doctor, Peter Turgeon as a neighbor, Richard McMurray as an oil-rich family friend, Heywood Hale Broun as a funeral plot salesman and Judy Carroll as a call girl in one of the daydream sequences.

It's a Free Country, Ain't It?

The N. Y. Journal-American had another one of those which-side-of-the-page-do-you-read situations last Friday (11). And, as has happened before, the matter involved conflicting opinions of drama critic John McClain and syndicated Broadway columnist Dorothy Kilgallen.

The right hand side of the amusement page was topped by McClain's review of Tennessee Williams' "Period of Adjustment," which opened the previous evening at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N. Y. The aisle sitter's rave notice of the play was headlined "Tennessee at His Best." On the opposite side of the page, Miss Kilgallen led off her column, headlined "Williams Comedy Isn't," with a lengthy pan of the comedy.

In a similar instance several years ago, McClain wrote a column about it, but the piece was yanked after appearing in several editions. Miss Kilgallen replied in print and the management apparently upheld her stand.

Period of Adjustment

Cheryl Crawford presentation of comedy in three acts, by Tennessee Williams. Staged by George Roy Hill; setting and lighting, Jo Mielziner; costumes, Patricia Zipprodt. Stars James Daly, Barbara Baxley, Robert Webber; features Rosemary Murphy, Nancy R. Pollock, Lester Mack. Opened Nov. 10, '60, at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N.Y.; $7.50 top Friday and Saturday nights, $6.90 weeknights.

Although the tone is different, "Period of Adjustment," which opened at the Helen Hayes Theatre last Thursday night (10), is recognizably Tennessee Williams. The approach this time is comic, but if the new play demonstrates the author's ability to write laugh lines, it's still preoccupied with sexual maladjustment and has the customary assortment of explicit dialog to shock the prudish or embarrass the sensitive.

The fantasy world of Tennessee Williams is obviously a gruesome place, but if the author has occasionally created vividly poetic passages, or revealed emotional depth or character insight, the new play seems a juvenile treatment of a threadbare subject. The laughs are present, although not everyone will be amused, but the play is shallow and somewhat forced. As a boxoffice prospect, it should do fairly well, and it's a prospect for films, but by no means representative Williams.

Most comic stories about wedding nights are on the school-boyish side, and "Period of Adjustment" is no exception. As usual with Williams, some of the ideas are sordid and the conclusions palpably batty—or perhaps a better word would be "special." Also typically, some of the characters are acutely unattractive and the best roles are feminine.

The period of adjustment, the playwright is saying, is perennial in any marriage. Thus, when a newlywed couple drops in on the groom's old Korean War buddy the second evening after the ceremony, it turns out that the host's wife has left him a few hours before, taking their three-year-old son with her to her parents' home.

To complicate matters, the groom doesn't enter for a while, but drives away, leaving his bride and her luggage on the friend's doorstep. Explaining that her husband is nervous case with a record as an institutional inmate, she assumes that he's deserted her and, in understandable hysteria, reveals that their wedding night was a disillusioning, humiliating fiasco.

It's the author's thesis, explicitly stated, that the missing bridegroom is a psychological shambles, being subject to the shakes and having to get boozed up at the prospect of sex. In fact, as the bride says in so many words at the final curtain, the whole world is a neurological ward, in which the men are terrified of sex and the women must be the nurses who look after them. Which is to say that abnormality is normal.

Even aside from his emotional maladjustment, the bridegroom is plainly an overgrown infant and recurrently an outright boor. His wartime friend is apparently about the same age, but clearly a bit more adult, if still something of a day-dreamer, a weakling and, at times, a bit of a heel. Still, he does have a streak of decency and humor.

The two women are more adult, realistic, understanding, generously loving and, naturally, more sympathetic than the men. In consequence, of course, the two leading feminine roles are, if not actually larger in both cases, at least much more dimensional and rewarding than the male leads.

As the distraught bride, a high-voiced, deep Texas-accent, chatterbox who gradually subsides into a recognizable human being, Barbara Baxley has the sort of part that an actress is lucky to get once in a lifeti She gives a virtuoso performance of impressive range of mood, with fire and conviction, and fine shading.

As the absent wife who returns for an excellent third-act scene, Rosemary Murphy has a role that patently offers embarrassing moments, since the script has dwelled on the woman's homeliness and the uninhibited sexual ardor. Without violating the sense of the lines or even offending audience sensibilities, however, the actress makes the character an appealing and even an attractive person.

James Daly gives a expertly modulated and convincing performance as the husband whose long-suffering pride has been further wounded by his wife's desertion. He handles the one-sided scene with his oddball friend's bride with admirable firmness and finesse, gets through the inferior second act adroitly and is quietly plausible in th subtle third act.

Robert Webber gives a believable portrayal as the quaking but arrogant bridegroom, Lester Mack and Nancy R. Pollock are persuasive as the errant wife's insufferable parents and Helen Martin is credible in the bit role of a maid whose obedient manner doesn't hide her feelings. There is also a perfectly trained cocker spaniel for several laughs.

George Roy Hill's staging is well worked out, making the best of a basically uncomfortable script, and Jo Mielziner has designed a brilliantly commonplace apartment interior. But all the artistry of the assembled professionals cannot hide the fact that "Period of Adjustment" is a tasteless play with an absurd theme. Hobe.

Winnipeg Ballet $6,912 In 4 Showings, Toronto

Toronto, Nov. 15.

The Royal Winnipeg Ballet grossed a slim $6,912 in four performances last Thursday-Saturday (10-12) at the 1,525-seat Royal Alexandra Theatre here. The potential gross capacity for the stand at a $3.50 top was $13,000.

It was the troupe's first visit here in seven seasons.

John Rosenfield Wins Southwest Drama Award

Dallas, Nov. 15.

John Rosenfield, amusement critic and former amusement editor of the Dallas Morning News, has received the annual Southwest Theatre Award for distinguished drama in the southwest. Rosenfield, who won the same honor in 1955, was presented the award Oct. 27 in Baton Rouge, La., at the opening of the annual Southwest Theatre Conference. He is the first person to get the award twice in the 13-year history of the conference.

Rosenfield, in his acceptance speech, paid tribute to the development of community and campus theatres since 1920. "Colleges are building most of the theatres today," he said. "Along with community projects, they dominate the theatrical scene away from New York."

Chicago, Nov. 15.

The booking of th Metropolitan Opera into the McCormick Place, Chi's new lakefront exposition centre, indicates that the arena may have an important part the presentation of local shows. Local impresario Harry Zelzer set the Met booking.

The Met will be here for four days in May. It is the only firm theatrical booking thus far reported by Edward Lee, the centre's managing director. However, he says that various impresarios have discussed "hold" dates with him.

Although the McCormick probably won't be ready for stage presentations until February. The center itself is to be dedicated Nov. 18, with a home and flower show opening next day as first customer.

Among those understood interested in renting the theatre for ballet and such presentations as pageants, forums and band concerts are Zelzer and Byron Belt, formerly with the Lyric Opera and this season becoming a longhair impressario in competition to Zelzer.

Statistically, the McCormick is expected to be a fine house, with a hydraulic orchestra pit for 100 musicians, a five-channel stereo sound system, a 90-foot proscenium opening (with 60-foot depth and 175 feet of working stage) and two side stages, each with its own curtains and apron.

Its most likely local rival is likely to be the antique though acoustically good Auditorium, although the projected restoration of the latter remote, despite intensive agitation.

Because the new $35,000,000 centre is primarily an exhibition hall, it's assumed that most of the bookings will be for industrial shows. Many of the bigger ones in the past have occupied the Kemper Opera House, Medinah Temple, or the International Amphitheatre in the stockyards district. The latter may be the chief competition to the McCormick for convention business.

In the McCormick's favor is its lakefront location and proximity to the Loop. Ample auto parking has been provided, and shuttle bus service from the central district is also planned.

According to Lee, he has had inquiries from television networks, who see it as a site for touring audience shows. Web representatives have also looked it over as a possible spot for the 1964 presidential conventions.

43d 'Best Plays,' Still OK

"The Best Plays of 1959-60," edited by Louis Kronenberger (Dodd, Mead; $6), is 43d volume in the series established by the late drama critic, Burns Mantle. Selection of top productions for this issue are "The Tenth Man," by Paddy Chayefsky; "Five Finger Exercise," by Peter Shaffer; "The Andersonville Trial," by Saul Levitt; "The Deadly Game," by Friedrich Duerrenmatt; "Caligula," by Albert Camus; "Toys in the Attic," by Lillian Hellman; "The Best Man," by Gore Vidal; "Duel of Angels," by Jean Giraudoux; "A Thurber Carnival," by James Thurber, and "Fiorello," by Jerome Weidman and George Abbott. Synopses and excerpts from these shows are in the book.

Other features include standard departments such as a statistical summary of the season drawn from VARIETY's tabulation of hits and flops, awards lists, data on celebrated actors, a list of plays produced on Broadway, with vital information concerning the productions.

Off-Broadway gets greater attention this year by inclusion of a list of its entries, plus excerpts from "The Connection," by Jack Gelber, chosen for publication by Henry Hewes. As usual, Claudia Cassidy reports on the Chicago season, and Harold Hobson covers the London stage. The book is embellished with many drawings by Al Hirschfeld, and carries photos of costume designs, set designs and scenes from various shows.

The format is familiar, but the book has the freshness of new conversation from an old friend of distinction. Rodo.

Ad-Lib Shows, Booze At Greenwich Village Spot

Theodore Flicker, David Carter and Alan Mankoff will introduce "The Premise," described as an evening of improvised scenes based on ideas suggested by the audience, at a Greenwich Village cafe theatre Nov. 22. The presentation has been financed for $15,000 and admission will be by ticket, although refreshments will be available, as in the no-admission cabarets.

The producers have tested their entertainment theory at the Compass Theatre, Chicago, where Flicker directed, and at the Crystal Palace, St. Louis, where Mankoff was assistant producer and press-agent. The cast of five will include and be directed by Flicker.

Over One-Sixth Academy Seats Rated 'Blurred'

Philadelphia, Nov. 15.

More than one-sixth of the seats in the Academy of Music are in the "obstructed" vision class, according to a check made by the Philadelphia Inquirer. The 104-year-old concert hall, now in the process of a $1,500,000 renovation was built in the days when pillars to support the various balconies and galleries were par for the course.

The Academy, which has 2,988 seats when the orchestra pit is not in use, has a total of 559 seat locations in the "partly obstructed" category, the newspaper check disclosed. This means seats behind the posts 132 of which are in the parquet circle, 109 in the balcony, 132 in the family circle and 186 in the amphitheatre.

The Inquirer's investigation resulted from complaints made by ticket purchasers to its own programs. The Philadelphia Inquirer Charities Inc. sponsors two separate series, under the management of Emma Feldman—the Philadelphia Forum concerts and the All Star Concert Series.

Henceforth any tickets sold for Inquirer programs that lie behind the posts will be stamped "Partly Obstructed." The practice will begin with the fourth event in the All Star lineup, violinist Isaac Stern, Dec. 8, and the Forum sponsored performance of the New York City Opera, in "The Mikado," Feb. 14.

Effect of newspaper's announcement about undesirable locations should prove running headache to Academy boxoffice and also the management engaged in its costly refurbishing drive.

TO START D.C. CENTER CONSTRUCTION IN '63

Washington, Nov. 15.

Trustees of the proposed National Cultural Center here have decided to undertake construction of the $75,000,000 showplace in sections, starting with the outershell, opera house, underground garage and foundation as soon as $30,000,000 is in hand or in sight.

The trustees set 1963 as the date for starting construction. Financial consultants have indicated that it will be possible to find $30,000,000 by that time, but not the entire $75,000,000. Under the Federal law authorizing the center and donating the necessary land (with a spectacular view of the Potomac River), the building must be begun by 1964.

Plans call for one building linking an opera house, symphony hall and theatre, with a huge common hall extending over the edge of the river. The hall will be used for high Government functions, such as welcoming ceremonies for visiting foreign dignitaries, the Inaugural Ball and like events.

Trustees had considered building only the symphony hall or the opera house first, but the architect, Edward Durrell Stone, of New York, persuaded them to construct the entire outer shell.

Canadian Players Send Out 2 Touring Troupes

Ottawa, Nov. 15.

The Canadian Players opened its American tour Oct. 19 in Orilla, Ont., but after a few other Canadian dates, it hits the U. S. The troupe's repertory comprises "Julius Caesar" and Shaw's "St. Joan," both directed by Douglas Campbell. Brian Jackson has done the sets and costumes.

Canadian Players' other company, doing all Canadian dates, opened Oct. 24 in Brockville, Ont. It's offering "The Tempest" and Bertold Brecht's "Caucasian Chalk Circle."

Japanese Soldier	en Kutsukake

This Willis Hall play, which had six-month run in London last season, involves a British military patrol in the Malayan jungle during World War II. Trying to fight their way back through the Japlines, the men capture an enemy soldier and have to decide what to do with him.

After an act and a half to establish the situation, characters and backgrounds of the British troops, the play becomes tensely dramatic with the controversy over the disposition of the captive and the decision, under the leadership of a tough sergeant, for his execution by bayonet, because a shot would be overheard by the enemy.

Outstanding in the cast are James Douglas as a boastful enlisted man from the London slums and Bill Glover as the non-com who makes the fateful decision. Also notable are Bill Brydon as a brutish Corporal, William Fredric as a Scotsman whose brother was killed by the Japs, Geoffrey Alexander as a man who evades moral responsibility by merely taking orders, James Bagg as a naive Welshman and William Job as a shrill-voiced radio operator. Ken Kutsukake is eloquently mute as the terrified prisoner.

As co-directors, Murray Davis and Alan Nunn have respectively handled the physical staging and the dialects, and Michael Johnston has designed a suitably spare setting representing the interior of a deserted hut. Proceeding from laughs to horror, "The Long and the Short and the Tall" is gripping theatre. Incidentally, the title is from the barracks and smoker ditty, "Bless 'em All." McStay.

The Grass Eater

Old Man	Richard Villard

On the basis of "The Grass Eater," playwright William Morton appears to have emotional intensity and a possible talent for writing dialog. But the play itself is like an unedited second act of a script the author himself might someday write.

There are awkward, callow and meaningless lines, and gratuitous obscenity, but occasionally the gabby hero expresses himself with conviction and insight, and his nihilistic views have impact. Paul Leder, who has also produced and staged the piece, gives the interminable leading role a good reading. Bea Silvern shines briefly, but the other actors haven't a chance.

The plot, which could be but isn't fiendish comedy, involves an agi , unemployed beatnik who wins back his girl after exposing the folly of a bourgeois couple by sleeping with the wife and making the husband ridiculous. The play is scheduled for five weekends, with two performances Saturdays. Glen.

The professional finish and bite that are all too rare off-Broadway are stunningly evident in "Rosemary" and "The Alligators," a double-bill of one-act dramas by Molly Kazan, which opened Monday night (14) at the York Playhouse as a presentation of Broadway producer Roger L. Stevens. There's no occasion for the critics to make allowances for this show —it's one of the best in tow including the Broadway big-time.

A key factor in the quality of the two plays is undoubtedly their previous presentation as an experimental show last year at the Actors Studio, N.Y. The fact that Gerald Freedman, former assistant to Jerome Robbi staged the test showing and used at least two of the same players has probably also contributed to the cohesion and drive of the off-Broadway venture.

Presumably with the advantage of having lived with the workshop presentation, Mrs. Kazan has turned out two impressively spare, sinewy and enthralling playlets, and Freedman's direction is a marvel of expressively varied tempo and emphasis. In both the opening "Rosemary" and the more direct and powerful "The Alligators" there are moments when the hush of the utterly rapt audience is eloquent tribute to the quality of the script and performance.

The two one-acters are of about equal length, and the show as a whole runs something under two-and-a-half hours, with a single intermission. Both playlets are primarily character studies with provocative situations, but "Rosemary" is somewhat lighter, with less story but perhaps more subtlety.

"Rosemary" is about a young vaudeville couple during a day at the New Jersey seashore to take publicity pictures. The piece takes its title from their newly-born daughter, and it's evidence of Mrs. Kazan's skill as a dramatist that this tiny offstage character seems a vital element in the shifting psychological pattern. Although "Rosemary" captures the 1910 period admirably, its characters and their characters and emotions are timeless.

The piece is beautifully presented, with Freedman's direction providing uncannily effective timing, not only in the scenes in which the two young vaudevillians, donning children's clothes, instinctively adopt child characterizations, but also in the superbly measured tempo of the quiet final scene. Piper Laurie and William Daniels, repeating their original Actors Studio roles, are lifelike, amusing and touching as the leads, with Jo Van Fleet and Paul E. Richards believable as a confused "civilian" couple.

"The Alligators," originally titled "Paradise Hotel" when done at the Actors Studio, is a potent character sketch with a surprise-twist ending. It involves a tragic, proud, indomitably honest Italian-American widow of a brutal gangster, and the plausible but obtusely naive and somewhat pompous film-tv producer who visits her Florida resort hotel to purchase the rights to her late husband's lurid life story.

Miss Van Fleet gives a brilliantly bravura portrayal as the widow who knows enough to be frightened of gang vengeance but remembers too much too bitterly to be diverted. The actress, whose playing has occasionally seemed over-contrived in the past, is unquestionably employing every available artifice this time, but the effect is inescapably compelling and moving. It's a full-scale emotional characterization, taut, gri ping and tri mphantly realized.

In attractive, interesting changes of pace, Richards is convincing as the Madison Ave. minion who proves to be a neophyte at negotiation, Daniels is acceptable as an Italian-accent waiter, Miss Piper is diverting as a gnat-brained young actress who prattles Stanislavsky-Freudian jargon but has decent instincts, and Dom Angelo is passable in a bit role.

Fred Voelpel's settings are simple, properly atmospheric and provide ample playing room, and Theoni V. Aldredge's costumes are appropriate. "Rosemary" and "The Alligators" is far above par for off-Broadway — and, for that matter, for Broadway. It should be a substantial off-Broadway hit, but doesn't seem suitable for transfer to Broadway. There are probably film possibilities in either or both of the playlets. Hobe.

As one of the classic Restoration comedies, "She Stoops to Conquer" should be a standard item of repertory and seems an excellent choic when and if the Phoenix Theatr actually gets its proposed repertory policy into operation. For the purposes of a regular run, however, the Oliver Goldsmith spoof seems questionable boxoffice prospect.

Restoration plays, being a special kind of fare, need not only skillfully mannered presentation but also an audience seeking, or at least willing to accept, an artificial form of theatre. In addition, the performance should have style, preferably with a star-bolstered cast.

The present Phoenix Theatre revival is a tasteful, competent production that should be an asset to a permanent repertory company. But lacking even the semblance of a star or brilliant performance, it seems a dubious bet for general draw. The Phoenix subscribers will presumably be satisfied, but it's inconceivable that the general public will be greatly interested.

Stuart Vaughan has staged the show imaginatively within the engeniously simple settings of Peter Wingate, and the latter's costumes are appropriate. The playing is acceptable and occasionally diverting without approaching distinction.

The romantic leads are commendable. Donald Madden looks the part and gives a plausible performance as the dutiful heir who's tongue-tied by ladies of his class but relaxed in the presence of servant girls. And although Gerry Jedd hasn't the picture-book daintiness that might make the heroine's dissembling more amusing, her ploying has agreeable directness and variation.

Patricia Falkenhain gets broad fun out of the absurd character of the snobbish Mrs Hardcastle, John Heffernan is comic if occasionally

Toys In the Attic

London, Nov. 11.

Linnit & Dunfee Ltd. presentation of a three-act drama by Lillian Hellman. Stars Wendy Hiller, Diana Wynyard, Ian Bannen, Coral Browne; features Judith Stott. Staged by John Dexter; settings, Howard Bay; costumes, Motley; lighting, John Wyckham. Opened Nov. 10, '60, at the Piccadilly Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

Carrie Berniers ..... Wendy Hiller
Anna Berniers ..... Diana Wynyard
Gus ..... George Webb
Albertine Prine ..... Coral Browne
Henry Simpson ..... William Marshall
Julian Berniers ..... Ian Bannen
Lily Berniers ..... Judith Stott
Taxi Driver ..... Desmond Jordan
Moving Men ..... Richard Kessell, Tommy Eytle, Michael Sharpe

There is always a danger that something may get lost in transition when a play that is perculiarly American in style and content, transfers from Broadway to the West End with an all-British cast. Apparently Lillian Hellman's "Toys In The Aattic" is example, and in consequence may not repeat its New York success. Its powerful cast should help to sustain it for a profitable engagement, however, despite the generally adverse reviews.

In terms of British theatre it would be difficult to assemble a more polished or more expert team of players. Wendy Hiller, Diana Wynyard, Ian Bannen, Coral Browne and Judith Stott are in the top league as performers, yet their combined talents rarely recreate the decaying Southern atmosphere ich Miss Hellman has painted.

One obvious though minor blunder is the fact that only Miss Hiller attempts a Southern accent and this is rarely convincing, though her performance as the frustrated sister who idolizes her no-good brother, almost to the point of incestuous relationship, is penetrating and deeply emotional. Diana Wynyard's charcterization of the other sister has the stamp of sincerity. It is a far duller role, but she fills it with skill and authority.

The outstanding performance is given by Ian Bannen as the brash brother who returns home as a rich man and hoping, by his lavish generosity, to repay the kindnesses his sisters have bestowed upon him since childhood. It is a forceful and confident interpretation, and the contrast after he has been slashed, beaten up and robbed of his money is done with telling effect.

Judith Stott plays the child bride on a fascinating babydoll level. She is delightful to watch and rarely misses a trick. As her mother, Coral Browne has a more subdued part and plays it with her customary finesse. William Marshall is restrained and dignified as her Nego lover.

Miss Hellman's stature as a dramatist is admirably maintained in "Toys In The Attic," even though its suitability for London audiences may be in question.

Chin-Chin

London, Nov. 4.

Peter Daubeny (in association with Anthony Quayle) presentation of a comedy-drama in four-acts (11 scenes). Staged by Howard Sackler; designer, Sean Kenny; lighting, Mick Orr. Stars Anthony Quayle, Celia Johnson. Opened Nov. 3, '60, at Wyndham's Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

Cesareo Grimaldi ..... Anthony Quayle
Pamela Puffy-Picq ..... Celia Johnson

Waiter ..... George Little

Virtually a two-character play, "Chin-Chin," a new French piece adapted for the English theatre by Willis Hall, is an unusual offering which will have to depend on the marquee strength of the two stars. There are long, tedious passages, though frequent changes of scene provide a varied background. The show seems an unlikely proposition, though its obviously small operating nut may give it a chance.

Anthony Quayle presumably saw in "Chin-Chin" a fine stellar role, and as he has a presentation credit with Peter Daubeny, it would appear that he has also backed his own choice. He is teamed with Celia Johnson, a legit star of considerable stature, and the two dominate the entire four acts. The other two roles, one limited to a brief appearance in the opening scene and the other a negative characterization of a boy, could easily be written out without hurting the production.

Apart from the inadequacies of Francois Billetdoux's writing, a weakness of the presentation is the casual and leisurely staging by Howard Sackler. It lacks pace and vitality. Nor has the director established the relationship between the two leading characters, though this could equally be a fault in the construction.

Quayle plays a naturalized French-Italian and Miss Johnson a prim English woman who meet for the first time in a shabby cafe to see what they can do about their lives. Their respective spouses are having an affair, and they hope to find a way to resolve the situation. The strange attraction that develops between these two opposite characters is the continuing theme, but apart from the woman's conversion to liquor, it is all rather inconclusive.

The performances of the two principals is on a high level, but all their skill and sincerity cannot conceal the inherent faults of the play. Brian Smith and George Little complete the cast. Easily the best feature is Sean Kenny's decor which is often bold, vigorous and imaginative.

Though a four-acter, "Chin-Chin" is a short play, with a running time of about two hours including one intermission. Myro.

(The basic plot of the couple who meet because their respective mates are having an affair, and who fall in love themselves, is fairly standard, particularly in the Continental theatre. A notable example in recent years was Noel Coward's "Quadrille," in which Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne costarred.—Ed.)

O'Keefe, Toronto, Gets Met Opera

Previously Played Maple Leaf Garden—Met Spring Tour Only Seven Cities

Toronto, Nov. 15.

O'Keefe's Centre will house next spring's engagement of the Metropolitan Opera Co. instead of Maple Leaf Gardens which has had the lyric drama troupe for the past eight seasons under a guarantee by the Rotary Club of Toronto, the latter donating its Met Opera take to charity.

The O'Keefe Centre will increase its top evening prices to $12.50 as compared with Maple Leaf Gardens previous $10. O'Keefe's will have a top of $6.50 for its Wednesday matinee; $10 top for its Saturday mat. Six operas will be presented for the Toronto date next May 29 to June 3, with O'Keefe's guaranteeing a 20% minimum profit to the Rotary Club of Toronto over last year's apathetic take at Maple Leaf Gardens.

(Because of b.o. slump, Rotary last spring threatened not to bring back the Met on last season's 69% ticket sale at the Gardens. Too-little known operas, based Rotary with a $25,000 loss, although donating over $180,000 in the past of its profits from the opera sponsorship).

No Profit Due

O'Keefe will not make money on the Met deal but will be satisfied, on prestige, to break even on a sellout. Met itself has restricted its 1961 tour to seven cities—of which Toronto is the only Canadian centre—with the cost on a sliding weekly scale of $170,000 to $194,000, for which O'Keefe's will pay the lowest guarantee of $170,000.

Meanwhile, Maple Leaf Gardens has gone out of the "cultural" field until a week before the Met engagement here when the Gardens will bring in the Moiseyev Dance Co. via Sol Hurok for three performances, one a matinee.

O'Keefe management has also given assurance that there will be no use of an amplifying system, plus present unsightly battery and ten mikes along the footlights and four loud speakers flanking the stage of the O'Keefe Centre.

Sung in English, von Flotow's "Martha" will be first Met opera here, with Victoria de Los Angeles making her first appearance with Richard Tucker, Rosalind Elias, Giorgio Tozzi, Lorenzo Alvery. Second new-to-Toronto production is "Turandot," Puccini's last opera, which will introduce Birgit Nilsson in the title-role, with Franco Corelli, Rosalind Elias and Frank Guarrera.

The Met's Wednesday matinee will be Verdi's "La Traviata," this also closing Saturday night's performance. Anna Moffo will sing Violetta in a cast that includes Eugenio Fernandi and Cornel MacNeil. Verdi's "Aida" has Leonie Rysanek and will be repeated at the Saturday matinee.

Puccini's "La Boheme" will have Dorothy Kirsten, Richard Tucker, William Wildermann; Verdi's "Rigoletto" Laurel Hurley, Barry Morell, Cornell MacNeil and Tozzi.

N. Y. City Opera to Give Spring Season of G&S

The New York City Opera, which ended its fall season at the City Center last week, will devote its entire three-week spring session next Jan. 17-Feb. 5 to a Gilbert & Sullivan series. Four G & S light operas will be presented by the company, which included two Savoy standards in its recently-ended repertory season.

Dorothy Raedler, whose American Savoyards Co., presented a G & S repertory for 125 performances at the Jan Hus Auditorium, N. Y., last spring and summer, may direct one of the spring offerings. Her Savoyards troupe, however, will not appear at the Center as erroneously reported in last week's issue.

History Can Be Fun

The excellent "America's Taste," edited by Marjorie Longley, Lou... Silverstein and Samuel ... Tower (Simon & Schuster; $12.50), ...roves that news and current history can be fun. Especially ... these N. Y. Times staffers have culled and presented this kingsized reprise of ... century of cultural eve..ts, reported by ...ntemporary observers in the pages of the Times, from 1851-1959.

It is replete with offset reproductions of original reviews (plays, film, books, opera, etc.), original illustrations, first-hand reports of major news events, that are arresting no matter which ... arrests the eye. From a critique of Koster & Bial's to Tony Pastor's, from a news report of Valentino's funeral to the opening of the Roxy, from Mencken & Nathan to Ernie Pyle and the Federal Theatre, and so on down through the years as this century grows older the "good gray Times" brings history-in-the-making into retrospect and for... It is to the credit of perhaps the greatest daily newspaper that its experts, reporters or reviewers, pundits or critics, were amazingly sagacious in the prophecy and ...nificance of all they covered.

"America's Taste" will not only be a fun book to read for retrospection but will prove of value for research. It is fully indexed. Abel.

Lee Mortimer's Latest

N. Y. ... columnist Lee Mortimer's newest in the series, "Women Confidential" (Messner; $3.95), is not dull reading. How could it be with that title? It's a blend of shrewd observation with Mortimer's o.. n variations on the Kinsey and Krafft-Ebing theses. Accen... by no means on the femmes' ...rtue or virtues; in fact it's vice versa and you can eliminate the "versa" for the most part.

With the late editor Jack Lait, Mortimer coauthored four "confidential" books on behaviorism in New York, Chi, D. C. and U. S. A. Alone he turned out "Around The World Confidential" and "New York Behind The Scenes."

Author's material is sordid but astute and revealing. It also calls for not a little personal courage in light of the underworld characters he attacks by name. He also cites cage society and other names in no flattering manner. Book is replete with such synonyms for the allegedly gentle sex as bims, broads, gunmolls, prosties, he-shes, dames, b-girls, madames, call-girls. There also regional, national and global breakdowns and observations on the subject, interlarded with aphorisms ...nd one-liners, many ...f them culled from Mortime's pas... columns. Abel.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs, Nov. 15.

Last winter when I had my face to the wall at the Houston Methodist Hospital, looking for ... number that matched mine, a book was published in London by Cassell's entitled "Frank Harris" by Vincent Brome.

I wa.. sent a review from the London Times becaus.. it had mentioned me and not unfavorably. (Hell, I gave one of their ... two columns. ... why should I tumble out of bed over a good noti... Besides I was too bushed to be interested even in obits.)

Then last June Helen Field sent me a New York Times' review of an American edition of th... ame book, brought out by Thomas Yoseloff. Charles Poore gave it a mixed notice, figuring that the story ran downhill—good in the beginning, n.s.g. in the end.

Dames and Dollars, Harris Theme-Song

But not until the other day when Norman Stuckey dispatched a copy from Beverly Hills did I see the book. Golly, I'm all over the thing! I open it and just about close it. It's a full-length portrait of the bad boy of modern literature whose theme song seemed to be sex from the Sextet of Lucre. Though Brome bears down pretty hard on the Old ...oar, it's a very readable contribution to the mystery of the Irish kid who made dough as an American cowboy and became the blackmailing, damechasing literary lion of London from the end of the Victorian e... through the Edwardian interlude.

Unlike Will Rogers, who never met a man he didn't like, modern biographers seem to do better picking all sorts of flaws in their heroes. I thought Frank Harris was buried and forgotten, but the way Brom... flays this dead horse seems to bring him back to life.

As it is an old edict never fool with a hit I suppose it would be no point to Br..me maki..g a few corrections at this late date.

On the very first page he gives a fairly accurate description of my elaborating with Harris in Harris' apartment in Nice, except I didn't ... "day after day." One look at that setup, and a second check that it would continue, and we deserted Harris and took to the hills to write the Sh..w biography without benefit of the lord and master.

On page 211, after doing a pretty thorough job of telescoping Harris' life, desultory loves and passionate addiction to literature Brome writes:

"It was at this point that the American journalist Frank Scully came into Harris' life. The precise nature of their meeting is not recorded, but Harris had become an habituee of the Palais de la Mediterranee, where Scully frequently went, ...nd it was inevitable that two me... ...ssionally concerned with writing, should want to know each other. ... they were meeting frequently. They would sit at the table of the Palais de la Mediterranee talking about life and literature, exchanging every kind of reminiscence, discussing the books they would write and the schemes which would one day make them rich. Within a few weeks these speculations took a more serious turn. It was a book they finally concentrated upon."

It isn't terribly important, but if Brome wanted to know what brought us together, and he apparently did, he should have written and asked as h... did for permission to quote freely from my "Rogues Gallery."

England & Germany Bri..g Them Together

What brought us together w... not any schemes which would make us rich. It was simply that I thought I might help two people. I was convalescing from a steenth operation at Villa Paulette in Nice when John Maxwell and E. A. Dupont came to visit me. Maxwell was presiden..t of British International Pictures and Dupont had moved over from Germany, where he had made "Variety," to direct pictur... for B.I.P.

They were wondering whether I had run into anything that could ...ike a good picture for them. At that time B.I.P.'s ...ictures weren't even interurban complex that loomed larger than Big Ben.

These men admitted it and wanted to know what they could do to remedy it. I told them they could use Shakes... ...shield and move in behind him.

They couldn't see how. Certainly Shakespeare's plays, at least to these men at that time, seemed like no picture mate... ...all. But they did admit that the name had world magic.

"Okay," I said, "do a picture called the 'Loves of Shakespeare.'"

This baffled them a bit.

"Why, in this town," I said, "there is an old man who has put more bone and tissue and heart into Shakespeare in three volumes than you could use in as ma... pictures."

I told them about Harris' "The Man Shakespeare," his "The Women of Shakespeare" ...nd his play. The play was called "Shakespeare and His Lov...," which I told them could certainly be used as a starter. They wanted to know if they could get hold of the play. I told them I thought they could for a few thousand bucks and with this ...roperty they could build.

Public Chump Number One

All my life I've been the chump who suggests things and then becomes a committee of one thousand to carry them out. On my cuff.

I didn't want to meet Harris. I knew enough of his rep... ot to want it to rub off on me. But I had promised these men I would. So I phoned Harris.

The cha... of Harris selling anything i... those days brought him to me on the run.

And that's how I met Frank Harris. I was not a habituee of the Palais de la Mediterranee, nor did Harris and I sit at tables discussing life and literature and discussing the books we would write, or the money we would make. I was either too damned busy or too damned sick to be indulging in that sort of ...illetantic hogwash.

The only time we sat at a sidewalk cafe with Harris was in acceding to his wife Nellie's request that ...(she) we could get him to work by doing it his way. All I remember it contributed to the Shaw biography was that Harris carried a silver flask and when the waiter brought a drink Harris took his flask out of his hip pocket and spiked the drink. To the biography of a teetotaler like Shaw this would hardly be eve... a footnote.

'Variety' Gets Into The Act

On page 227 (this is the Cassell edition) Br... tells the ... of a VARIETY (Maxime de Beix) correspondent hinting that my part in the Shaw biography had been mu... ...ore important th... ...nyone knew, and how Nellie Harris rushed to Paris and London begging me to deny this. We make our quota of errors on VARIETY but we don't deny the truth. So Nellie didn't get her denial, despite the fact th... she feared "the publishers would suffer va..t losses" and Harris' "reputation would be ruined." Well, the publishers made a lot of money on the book and Harris' reputation, which w... already ruined, enjoyed small measure of rehabilit...tion.

Page 227 also contains a footnote that is in the vein of the current vogue to conceal informers. "It remains to add," ...rites Brome, "that at least two persons in the United States who knew Harris well, ...rd Scully's account as seriously exaggerated, hold firmly to the belief that Harris wrote the greater part of the biography himself, and point to the style of the book, as in their eyes, conclusive evidence."

What two persons? The only one I can think of who is in the United States, and who was in Nice at the time and therefore who knew at all what was being done, was Alan Dowling, at that time a poet, but mor... recently a Hollywood picture producer. He had read my draft manuscript, and being an old admirer of Harris' as well as ...enerous contributor to the old rogue's maintenance, I asked him to weed out any obvious Scullyisms in the script. This he did.

Now let's have your witnesses, Mr. Brome. Don't let them hide behind that cloak of anonymity. Shaw had his say, Harris his, I ...ine, and you yours.

Make these others come out, come out, wherever they are.

but as outright farce. That may be justifiable, but farce requires severe discipline, and in this case the performance frequently verges on caricature, with various styles that sometimes fail to blend.

Oliver Goldsmith's comedy comes over as a rollicking romp, however, to the taste of an audience that may be at least partly drawn by curiosity to see rock 'n' roll singer Tommy Steele making his first stab at legit acting. The vocalist star is an engaging Tony Lumpkin, but though his exuberance carries him through, he lacks the range to make the role more than a cheery city slicker, instead of the country lout.

Peggy Mount, formidable in size and attack, also brings pantomime technique to the part of Mrs. Hardcastle, getting yocks, but occasionally throwing the play out of balance. There are excellent performances, however, by Judi Dench as a pert, attractive Kate, John Humphrey and Michael Meacham convincingly in period as the young men.

Nicholas Meredith is delightful as Hardcastle, even though he plays the character with more dignity and less irritation than usual. Osbert Lancaster's decor and costumes are among the satisfactory features of an offbeat but entertaining production. Rick.

Hedda Gabler

David Ross presentation of three-act lay, by Henrik Ibsen, translated from the Norwegian by Michael Meyer. Staged by Ross; costumes, Theoni V. Aldredge. Stars Anne Meacham, features Lois Holmes, Mark Lenard, Lori March, Lester Rawlins, Frederick Rolf. Opened Nov. 9, '60, at the Fourth Street Theatre, N.Y.; $3.95 top Producer-director David Ross has launched his projected cycle of Ibsen plays with a nearly impeccable production of "Hedda Gabler," skillfully acted and neatly staged. That the evening eventually winds up as a cold puzzler must be the fault of Ibsen, since Michael Meyer's new translation from the Norwegian is about as clean and uncluttered as anyone could wish—that is, anyone who was ever spoonfed on William Archer's musty 19th century version.

The problem remains Hedda herself. For just about two acts, she is a well realized character, the kind of bitter, frustrated and bored queen bee who may be found buzzing around almost any suburban community today. Suddenly, however, Hedda goes wildly irrational. The neurotic becomes a psychotic and sympathy and compassion go trailing into the wings. By the time she retires to the next room to put a bullet to her breast the impression is merely that expediency has triumphed, for how else could the curtain be brought down?

The difficulty seems to lie in the fact that in the opening scenes Ibsen has drawn a vivid but small woman who is later required to behave in a grand and tragic manner. In the title role, Anne Meacham is fine, a handsome woman of blue steel and a sharp sense of irony. In fact, she almost succeeds in bridging the neurotic-psychotic gap in the script.

Whether making caustic comments about her aunt's new hat or taking a pot shot at a potential lover, the actress manages to suggest the sort of inner fury and crazy passion which Ibsen's prosaic dialog never suggests. Says Hedda at a crucial point, "How is all this going to end?" She also turns on her husband with, "I only did it for your sake, George." This is tune-in-tomorrow talk.

Miss Meacham's performance, fine as it is, represents a genuine triumph considering what must have seemed insurmountable difficulties. She was called on only two days' notice, after Swedish-born British star Mai Zeterling had collapsed from exhaustion, and not only got up in the part in time to go on without a postponement, but is giving a fully-realized portrayal. Anby.

The Mousetrap

Robert D. Feldstein, in association with Spice World Enterprises, presentation of two-act (three scenes) drama by Agatha Christie. Staged by Adrian Hall; designer, Paul Morrison. Features Angela Thornton, John Irving, Barry Newman, John Wynne-Evans, Margaretta Warwick, Barbara Stanton, John Scanlon, Allen Joseph. Opened Nov. 5, '60, at the Maidman Playhouse, N.Y.; $4.90 top Friday and Saturday nights; $4.50 weeknights ($7.50 opening)

Mollie Ralston	Angela Thornton

Mr. Paravicini	Allen Joseph
Det. Sgt. Trotter	Barry Newman

British author-playwright Agatha Christie, an expert whodunit trickster, has stacked the deck in "The Mousetrap." The play, which has been a landmark at the Ambassadors Theatre, London, since Nov. 25, 1952, became the world's largest runner last August. Despite its West End success, it has never been duplicated for Broadway. That apparently has not been an oversight, as indicated by the basic weakness of this current off-Broadway presentation.

Miss Christie in this eight-character, one-set murder mystery, has overplayed her hand. Everybody is suspect and because of the author's record as a plot twister, even the non-suspect figures as the possible murderer. This could be great for suspense except that Miss Christie's efforts to cast suspicion on all involved are too contrived and after a while the mechanical maneuvering of the plot is more annoying than interesting.

In addition, certain elements of the story are confusing. In fact, the situation on which the yarn is threaded isn't convincing. From what's divulged at the end of the play, it seems that one murder could have been avoided by a police representative. The delayed attempt of another murder is rigged plotting, since there's no indication the murderer has to establish the identity of the would-be victim.

If that is an erroneous impression there's no apparent reason for the delay in the attempted murder, except to keep the play running for two acts. Also, unconvincing is the involvement of the individual, who escapes from the clutches of the murderer.

The overall performance is uneven. Angela Thornton is good as a young wife, who runs a guest house with her husband. John Wynne-Evans is diverting as an insecure, flighty young guest and Margaretta Warwick, John Scanlon and Barbara Stanton are okay as other roomers. Not registering too strongly, however, are John Irving as the husband, Allen Joseph as an unexpected guest and Barry Newman as a detective sergeant.

Paul Morrison's living room set is excellent. Adrian Hall directed. Although "Mousetrap" has its flaws it obviously has popular appeal, as evidenced by its record London run. The Ambassadors, incidentally, is a 450-seater. The Maidman Playhouse, where the show is berthed off-Broadway is a 199-seater. Considering its cast and set requirements, the play should be a good bet for the stock and amateur market. Jess.

Behind the Wall

Amnon Kabatchnik (in association with Robert Jordan) presentation of a new drama by Kenneth Green. Staged by Kabatchnik, designed by Richard Bianchi; lighting by Robert L. Benson. Opened Oct. 31, '60, at the Jan Hus Playhouse, N.Y.

Moshe	Ronnie Tours
Bernie	Charles Saari
Yussel	Alan Scharf
Avram	Claude Gersene
Essie	Bennye Gitteys

If it were as easy to dramatize as it is to sympathize, there would be a lot of good playwrights, and Kenneth Green might well be one of the best. It takes mor than good will to hold the attention of a paying audience, however.

"Behind the Wall" tells too much and demonstrates too little. Very little action occurs onstage. The five children who make up the cast mostly talk about their lives in th Warsaw ghetto. A girl is killed by the Nazis, the final decision is made to allow the four remaining children to escape before the final futile, heroic battle begins, but the events occur offstage.

Amnon Kabatchnik' direction doesn't overcome this difficulty. Although the staging is sensitive enough to the nuances of the play, it doesn't allow for the physical limitations of the Jan Hus. Much of the action occurs "low" on the stage— with the children seated, kneeling, or crouched down in one corner of the stage, and as there are no platforms or levels, the audience tends to have difficulty seeing what's going on.

The young actors are generally professional, and as usual, their attractiveness is in inverse proportion to their size. But despite its several mer the play is static and unwieldy. Ster.

lectual th his immediate forebear and possibly more introspective. The summary of the date diggers is that he is a listener rather than a doer. The more physical aspects are left for other forms of campus life.

The newer one-niter has an extremely wide range of entertainment. Campus committees have been sold anything from chamber music to individual singers, complete operas, song groups, jazz outfits and with dance bands in the minority. The activity also ranges from events with the official school imprimatur to smaller soirees sponsored by fraternities.

One of the leading grossers on the campus is of course, the Kingston Trio with individuals such as the new wave comics also at the top. The fees for a package have gone as high as $5,000. One of the more successful packages on the campus has been the Mort Sahl-Limeliters setup, which has scored heavily with collegians off the campus as well.

The appeal to college groups has become a criterion upon which a concert impresario will cast a package. The collegian will just as lief go away from the ivied halls to attend a concert in which he is interested. Thus, it has become th prevailing belief that some of the bigger packages, such as the Shelley Berman and Sahl concerts, have made big indentations in college grosses even when playing the larger auditoriums within easy reach of collegiates.

The agencies are especially happy with the huge increase in this kind of revenue inasmuch as both the rules of the American Federation of Musicians and the American Guild of Variety Artists recognize the special problems of booking many one-niters and permit commissions up to 20% instead of the 10% ial in m st kinds of bookings.

This aspect of the business is expected to grow further. The agencies point out that many of the new entertainment trends are itiated at the colleges and therefor the growth potential is still huge. The campus can support many forms of entertainment and at the same time give its support to events held in the larger spots. The trick is, say the percenters, find a formula or package that appeals the students, and then book it within their reach.

ANTA

roved by the ANTA board, of which Robert W. Dowling is chairman.

Stevens is treasurer of the organization and Whitehead is its vice-president. The theatre, according to an ANTA representative, has considerably greater mortgage value than covered by the existing bonded obligation. The first mortage on the property is held by the Shuberts, and the second by Dowling.

All in me from the Broadway un of "The Conquering Hero" will go t) ANTA. Out of that revenue, the organization will pay the operating costs of the show and the . The show's deal for the house is on a "four walls" basis. All subsidiary rights to the property are owned by the Whitehead-Stevens corporation, but ANTA under certain circumstances, will be entitled to share in subsidiary revenues.

Although a registration atement was filed by Producers Theatre several months ago with the Securities & Exchange Commission for a limited partnership offering of $300,000 (with provisi for 20% overcall) to finance the production of "The Conquering Hero," it's understood the presentation has since been independently capitalized by the Whitehead-Stevens cor tion.

Whitehead and Stevens ar nered in Producers Theatre with Dowling, president of City Investing Co., the realty firm which owns theatres in New York. A report a few months ago on City Investing's activities disclosed the cor pany is also a producer of plays and films and that, at the time, its interests included "The Conquering Hero." It hasn't been disclosed whether Dowling's participation in Producers Theatre is personal or as a representative of City Investing, in which he reportedly holds 25% stock ownership.

"The Conquering Hero" has been adapted by Laurence Gelbart (book) and Moose Charlop and Norman Gimbel (music and lyrics), from the 1944 Paramount film, "Hail The Conquering Hero." Tom Poston will star in the production, which is expected to cost about $225,000-$250,000 to open out-of-town. The billing on the pre-Broadway tour will list the project as a Whitehead and Stevens presentation, with another line designating it as an ANTA production. The situation will probably be reversed on Broadway, with billing listing it as an ANTA presentation of a Whitehead-Stevens production.

Oscar Olesen, general manager for the Producers Theatre, will continue in that capacity when ANTA takes over the production. Willard Swire, executive director of ANTA, will work with Olesen on the venture when it hits Broadway. Dramatists-League second meeting between the two groups has not been set.

The toll tv payment to authors among certain firm policies governing the leasing of material" to that field reported by the Guild in a recent letter to its membership. The policies were reached following a study of the situation by a sub-committee, consisting of Russel Crouse, chairman, and Sidney Kingsley and Richard Lewine. In informing the membership of the policies, the Guild emphasized the dearth of informa'on on certai aspects of the new medium, such as the system to be used, frequency of broadcast and method of audience payment.

Besides the payment setup, tw other points in the Guild letter were (1) that "properties should be licensed for specific and limited se only and should under no circumstances be leased for more than a very restricted period" and (2) "At this exploratory stage dramatists should agree to only a regional use of their properties, and refuse provisions for reuse, syndication, or delayed broadcasts in other geographic areas.

An aspect of toll tv which the Guild feels requires considerable study is that when it's potential is fully realized it can, under our present tax laws, impose considerable hardship on authors. In support of this the Guild letter states, "Income from a Broadway roduction of a play, and its subsequent productions and film sale, may be derived over a period of a great many years. Pay tv income will of necessity be paid for a single, and perhaps all-inclusive performance, income that might well be taxed in one calendar year."

In relation to its toll tv study, the Guild letter observed, "Present pay tv operators have already announced that as much as one-third of their programming will b devoted to existing, or new, dr. matic and musical properties. It is vital, therefore, that a basic concept in our dealings with pay television producers be firmly established."

Noting th certain offers have already been received by dramatists, the dispatch warned (1) "That the licensing of a play at this early stage may produce but a fraction of its ultimate royalty potential" and (2) "Based on the history of commercial network television, roperties licensed and produced in the pioneering days were then considered second hand, ith serious impairment to their future marketability.

'Golden' Deficit

$14,755 on the final fortnight of its New York run. During that time the management continued to get a $250 weekly producers' fee and $300 weekly office expense. The total outlay, after closing expenses, was $136,509. However, film income of $26,100 and the sale of the physical property for $743 reduced that amount to $109,666.

Thus, of the $120,000 investment (including Miller's $20,000 advance), $10,334 had been recouped for repayment to Miller. The standard legit practice is that money advanced above the actual investment is repaid first, which means Miller still has $9,666 coming to him before any repayment can be made to the backers.

An interim audit, following the show's closing in rehearsal and prior to its reactivation, listed a $54,451 deficit on the at-that-time $100,000 investment, so the backer would have recouped $45,549 if the venture had been abandoned then.

Coast ASCAP

All they want, is more performance recognition. BMI seems to offer this to these individuals at this time.

The meeting as a whole was informative but redundant since it repeated to the membership all that had already been said via mail. As Adams put it, "we did not ask for the Consent Decree." But as some of the members after the conclave put it, "neither did we."

But even so, the general feeling is that much has still to be ironed out before the organization can truly work in unison. While the ASCAP officials held the dais and spoke of "faith in ASCAP," the undercurrent was felt by the dissidents that were still dissatisfied by the proceedings. Why they didn't speak up at the meeting was answered at the post-meeting brunch by several members.

"The ones who we expected to do the talking didn't show up," was the common reply. As to why the dissident members weren't in full strength, no one knew. Excepting that possibly the early 3 p.m. meeting call caught the working membership off-balance.

Wayne Shanklin, of the ASCAPers who didn't seem too happy with the explanations coming forth from th dais stepped forward with; "I want to know wheth the ASCAP Awards were setup as a true intent to recognize merit or whether it is just a bone to keep the membership quiet."

Adams immediately took th mike and replied with, "It's no bone. The wards were set up as a financial recognition for those members who because of their field are limited to performance fees."

Longest and probably the most dramatic as well as effective speech of the session was handed down by Jack Yellen, board member who delivered substantially the same remarks he ade at the New York meeting a couple of weeks ago.

L. Wolfe Gilbert, oast board member, also made his de it on the turnout by reiterating some of th remarks expressed earlier and adding that the Justice Dept., in spite of all previous talk, was not out to wreck ASCAP.

Sitting on the dais with Adams, were board members Jimmy McHugh, Ned Washington, Gilbert and attorney Paul Millman. Ballots for new board of directors will be mailed to the membership Nov. 25 with the final count taking place sometime in December. Incumbents, including prexy Adams, are in the race.

SARITA MONTIEL
Songs
Tropicoro Club, San Juan, P.R.

Sarita Montiel is just about the biggest singi actress in Latin films, a rep based on solid success of "El Ultimo Cuple," and London soundtrack LP, but she announces that this is her first cabaret appearance. She is looker, with bronze hair, peaches and cream ski , pearl teeth and the rounded decolletage so generously displayed on the LP cover. She wear a white lace mantilla and sparklers that look real, and walks like she's balancing books on her head. She has a voice that is a notch above Marlene Dietrich's and a delivery that's several notches below, and her songs, mostly from her flicks, are warm in the Latin manner, but often in the old style.

But penetrating the negative, at least equivocal, factors comes a kind of demure charm that melts down both male and female customers into little happy puddles. Pitch is directed at locals, but her Spanish is slow and distinct and she tries enough English to get her patter—mostly about her pix ("I don't die at the end of the new one; I get married")—across. She is making a solid success here, and looks like a winner for class Stateside clubs. Harm.

Bogus Bob Newhart Escapes After Bilking Pitt Hilton, Priest, Comedy Act

By LENNY LITMAN

Pittsburgh, Nov. 22.

Somewhere in this broad land of ours there roams a man with no heart. He also has no hit album, no tv or nitery success but living the life of a great star because he calls himself "Bob Newhart." It wasn't the money that he bilked the Pittsburgh Hilton out of or the money he stole from the Jaye Bros., a comedy act, that made his acts so callous but his faith-disturbing treatment of a humble Pittsburgh priest.

During the course of his week's swindling here that started Monday (14), he wept as he told the priest of his mother's death in Philadelphia. The priest consoled him and, as the Jaye brothers looked on "Newhart" pulled out a check for $500 and gave it to the priest.

The next morning the priest said mass for the man's mother and then sent flowers to the funeral parlor in Philadelphia. He received a return wire saying there was no such wake and no such funeral.

"Newhart" had already left the Hilton, leaving the hotel holding the bag for $750 and $250 in bad checks. On his way out of town to "his mother's funeral" he stopped off at the Holiday House and stayed with Phil and Jerry Jaye who are headlining there and in the morning said he had no money. They then cashed a check for $125.

"It was cheap," Phil Jaye told the VARIETY rep. "It was like sleep-

Fiscal Facts About Fabian: Earned $137,000 in 1959, Paid 38G in Manager Fees

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.

Fabian, film and disk personality, racked up a gross income of $136,926 in 1959, according to an accounting filed in Orphans Court here. Net income after taxes for the young rock 'n' roll singer amounted to $36,578.

The accounting was revealed by Judge Harold D. Saylor, who awarded the sum of $1,828 to the singer's guardian, John J. Palmieri. The fee amounted to 1½% of the star's earnings during 1959. Normal guardian fee is 5%. Palmieri, however, agreed to the smaller sum.

Fabian received $62,236 in salary from films, singing dates, personal appearances and $74,690 from recordings. Taxes amounted to $33,594; expenses ran to $28,070, and managerial commissions and fees, $38,702. Palmieri is the operator of dry cleaning shop and is also employed as a physical instructor by the Board of Education.

Film Publicity Brings Out Japanese Candor on War

Berlin, Nov. 22.

Theatrical publicity sometimes extracts arresting political commentary. It did here when a Japanese officer, Mitsuo Fuchida, was set up for interviews to help the French documentary film, "Kamikaze," now running at the Studio Theatre here.

Fuchida said he was 58 and only survivor of the 70 Japanese fliers who hit Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941. Asked about the atomic bomb, Japanese said it was fully justified and probably saved a million American lives which an orthodox invasion would have entailed. Moreover had the Japanese possessed the bomb they would certainly have dropped it.

Catholic Legion 'Alarmed' by Slide In Pic Standards

Washington, Nov. 22.

Catholic Legion of Decency yesterday (Mon.) assailed this year's film production "an alarming departure from previously accepted and respected standards."

Films rated objectionable by the Legion climbed from 14.59% of Hollywood's output in 1959 to the "astounding" figure of 24.33% this year, Legion said.

Bishop James A. McNulty, chairman of the Episcopal Committee of Motion Pictures, Radio & Television, reported on the Legion's 1960 film classification work to the Catholic bishops of the U. S. at their annual meeting here. McNulty's committee supervises the work of the Legion.

Legion reviewed 275 films this year, 222 domestic and 53 foreign.

DISSENSIONS HIT A FEVER PITCH

By GEORGE ROSEN

Antagonisms and intramural dissensions vis-a-vis the three television networks are at a feverish pitch, perhaps unprecedented in broadcast annals. So much so that last week they spilled over onto the front page of the N. Y. Times. What has generally been confined to "within the trade" bickering has become public domain, with the headlines and the headaches precipitating a wide open industry breach. That it may ultimately have an effect on vital matters requiring a united industry front is a source of grievous concern to many.

Apparently no one's immune from existing problems—and there are many—as the tv networks gear themselves for a "period of adjustment." As the competitive three-network race for supremacy triggers wave of charges and counter-charges, one network's (ABC) triumphant heralding of a 24-market Nielsen superiority is matched by another's (CBS) "hey, look at us" trumpeting of the National Nielsens, while the third (NBC) makes hay with its newfound prestige in news with a "plague on all your ratings."

NBC board chairman Robert W. Sarnoff's blast at ABC (before the network affiliates' ...eet in New York last week) as the "narrow gauge network" opposed to "a tradition of broad service, creativeness and responsibility" which he attributed to both NBC and CBS, is probably without precedent in bringing network antagonisms into

Gable's Last Pic Paid Him $800,000

Clark Gable, 59, who withstood a long succession of inferior pix to stage a brilliant comeback which skyrocketed him to an $800,000-plus salary for his final film, died unexpectedly of a second heart attack in Hollywood Nov. 16, 10 days after suffering a coronary thrombosis at his Encino home.

Actor's passing, only few months before he would have become a father for the first time, again points up the age-old Hollywood superstition of death among the film's top figures coming in cycles of three. Mack Sennett and Ward Bond preceded him by only 11 days.

Gable completed his last picture, "The Misfits," only two days before he was first stricken, for which he reportedly was paid $750,000 and a bonus of $48,000 weekly for three weeks for over-

N.Y. Bonifaces Claim Police Squeeze; Int'l Argues for Injunction Today

A "reign of terror" for New York bonifaces has started. The N.Y. As result of a citywide check over the weekend, the International Casino's cabaret license was suspended for four days, including the Thanksgiving Day holidays.

Boniface Jack Silverman through his attorney, William S. Miller, has sued to enjoin Police Comm. Stephen S. Kennedy from acting in an "arbitrary and capricious manner" in suspending activity at the nitery. Justice Francis X. Conlon issued a temporary stay returnable today (Wed.) at 10 a.m. at which time a hearing will be held. The temporary stay, however, was expected as of yesterday to enable the International to open with its new show tonight (Wed.), with Joey Adams & Al Kelly and Tina Robin, on schedule. Silverman's attorney argued that it was not the duty of the nitery owner but of the police to see that all those requiring permits obtain the necessary documents.

The charge against the International is that it permitted Sophie Tucker to work with an expired identification card, and failed to notify Bea Kalmus, who conducts a deejay show at the cafe's lounge,

Mary Pickford's Credo About 'Growing Old'

Washington, Nov. 22.

Mary Pickford was in town to increase interest in the White House Conference on Aging, due to convene here in January when 2,800 delegates will weigh the problems of elderly people.

Miss Pickford gave this advance personal opinion; "Growing old is a terrible waste of time."

Spending 8G For Rebuttal Ads To Needle Taubman

The management of "Advise and Consent," obviously miffed at N.Y. Times drama critic Howard Taubman's pan of the play, is indirectly emphasizing his freshman status as a legit reviewer in an ad campaign in the Times this week. Favorable notices by the critics of five other N.Y. dailies are being reproduced in Times display ads on a one-a-day basis, with special reference to the length or time the individual reviewers have been covering legit for their respective papers.

Taubman, former music critic for the Times, took over as legit reviewer, succeeding Brooks Atkinson, who stepped down last summer to write a twice-weekly general column for the paper. The Robert Fryer-Lawrence Carr production of "Advise," adapted by Loring Mandel from Allen Drury's Pulitzer Prize novel, opened last Thursday (17) at the Cort Theatre, N.Y. Of the seven daily newspaper reviewers, only Taubman and Richard Watts Jr., of the Post, wrote disapproving notices.

The display ads, which make no direct reference to Taubman's being new at the job, are headed, "So that New York Times readers

Beverly Never 'Arrested,' So N.Y. Police OK'd Her

One of the more curious aspects of the current investigation of police cards for preformers is the fact that Beverly Aadland has been issued her cabaret card by the N.Y. Police Dept. Her managers say there was no problem involved; "we just walked in and got one."

Miss Aadland, juvenile inamorata of the late Errol Flynn, together with her mother was held in California Courts on morals charges. However, according to California law, a juvenile is never

Nothing Like Cafes As A Proving Ground, Sez Comic Shelley Berman

"I may gripe about playing night clubs, but when the time comes, like a soldier, I take up my gun and go," says Shelley Berman, who believes that niteries remain a comedian's best proving ground and any comic that thinks otherwise is making a grave error.

Berman has been known to haul off and blast nitery patrons for talking and heckling during his turn. But he feels that it remains the major sounding board for getting reactions and developing material. While he may prefer the comparative peace and quiet of hallowed concert halls and the extreme focus of attention on stage, Berman believes in the necessity of going out in the cafes. He has pointed out that all his material has been perfected while playing the niteries. "You just can't try out a new bit of material on the concert stage."

Berman also believes Bob Newhart to be wrong in eschewing cafes for the reason that it leaves

Dub 'Suzie Wong' a Bawdy Cinderella; Video More Adult With 'Iceman'

Two events last week pointed up the ill-defined position of the motion picture industry in the course of the "adult" entertainment evolution:

1) The smash first week's business done at Radio City Music Hall by Paramount's "The World of Suzie Wong."

2) The telecasting over WNTA of the Play of The Week's uncut, uncensored production of Eugene O'Neill's monumental four-hour) legit play, "The Iceman Cometh."

Interest lies in fact that "Suzie Wong," though a charming and delightful romantic comedy, has as its principal locale a Hong Kong brothel and, as its heroine, a prostitute who finds that the wages of sin is happiness even after.

Despite the "Particular Applications" section of the Production Code Section III, paragraph four, which states that "methods and techniques" (?) of prostitution shall never be presented in detail and that brothels "in any clear identification as such may not be shown," "Suzie Wong" not only has a Code seal, but also is playing the "number one family theatre" in the nation, Mecca for Aunt Minnie from Missoula and haven for the kiddies when school's out. And, apparently, nobody is objecting.

Is this a sign that the film industry or its audience is coming of age, and that the Production Code Administration can now bestow a seal upon a picture in "good taste" even though it breaks a couple of Code rules?

According to one industry topper this might seem to be the case at first but then he suggested that "Suzie" really isn't "adult" entertainment in the true sense of the phrase, but rather another Cinderella, albeit a bawdy one. Last week, he said, tv's "Iceman Cometh" stole the rug out from under the theatrical industry despite fact that film execs like to say that the small screen has been abandoned

Mastin Trio Chi Mgrs.' 20% Bite; Sue Star for 91G

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

Sammy Davis Jr. has been named defendant in a suit which charges that the Will Mastin Trio agreed to pay 20% of their earnings for 15 years to a Chicago syndicate. Unpaid balance as of November last year, complaint contends, is $91,000.

The breach of contract action was filed Tues. (15) in L. A. Superior Court by Lou Cook, of the Jerome B. Rosenthal law firm, in behalf of Jay J. G. Schatz and Donald Medlevine of Chicago.

It's asserted that an agreement was signed on Oct. 1, 1957, under which Schatz and Medlevine would loan up to $100,000 to Davis' trio, and the trio would hire them as business managers at 20% for 15 years. Davis is said to have guaranteed the agreement.

Schatz and Medlevine also ask for an accounting of earnings of the trio since November, 1959.

Canada Crime Up, Censors Nervous

St. John, N.B., Nov. 22.

Biennial conference of Canadian Film Censors here called upon the Motion Picture Assn. of America to implement enforcement of the Production Code "to the end that obvious excesses and offenses will disappear," and expressed concern over the ndue proportion" of films depicting "immoral and abnormal sex behavior."

In another resolution, censors noted the increase in crime throughout Canada and asked producers to reduce the volume of films depicting the lives of gangsters and hoodlums, saying that a medium as powerful as films "must shape to an emphatic degree the behavior patterns, in particular, of the immature."

This year's conference broke a long-standing tradition by meeting

New Censor Cloud Over Parisian Political Ribs; Could Bring a Strike

Paris, Nov. 22.

The chansonniers, who recently won a tilt against attempts to censor their television and radio program, are now again having problem on this score. It came about when Prime Minister Michel Debre was ribbed on a tv program "Salt Shaker" and some National Assembly men took umbrage. Information Minister Louis Terrenoire decided he would henceforth demand looks at and listening to all tapes and scripts before programs went on.

Chansonniers are political comedians whose shafts and digs at all public figures have usually been sacrosanct. But Algerian tensions and rising censorship here are slowly taking away these supposedly inalienable rights they got by law and custom under the Second Empire.

Chansonniers have seven theatres and also appear in films, legit, tv, radio and boites. A recent attempt by a governmental radio of-

Hollywood's Ceremonial Night Now in Santa Monica, Another Part Of the Forest

By ABEL GREEN

Hollywood, which has been complaining about the flight of producti , seems to have goofed—at least according to the eastern viewpoint—in permitting the flight of its No. 1 annual event—the Oscars—to Santa Monica. Hollywood and the Academy are as indigenous as ham 'n' eggs, and the shift of its prime yearly professional-social-national event to a nearby community has already stirred prosts on both coasts.

Apart from point that the Academy's new three-year hookup with ABC-TV entails some gross commercial hookups, the major objection is that Oscar has been permitted to escape from the natural aura and flora of Hollywood. Oscar-by-th sea at Santa Monica somehow isn't as secure, in the viewpoint of Gotham show ien, as in his former and more native Hollywood, even though S.M. is, in truth, suburb of Los Angeles of which, turn, Hollywood is merely a self-contained community, never having ven reached the status of an incorporated village, say, like Beverly Hills. Be that as it may, if Santa Monica Auditorium's 2,500 capacity is the keynote, the RKO Pantages, while stripped to 1,550 seats for its current "Spartacus" two-a-day run, could easily have reinstated 200 to 500 additional seats. The Pan originally was a 2,400-capacity auditorium.

RKO Theatres prexy Sol A. Schwartz blinded himself to part of the losses in the interests of the major event. Originally a Tuesday night telecast, it meant the loss of Monday-Tuesday which isn't as bad as recent years, the RKO Pantages had to go dark three days, on the cream Sat.-Sun. weekend and, of course, for the Monday night event. As Oscar achieved sponsorship the Pan got up to $8,000 for the three dark days, after having

Exhibs' Slow-Pay Habits Irksome

Tardiness on the part of some exhibitors in paying their bills is a continuing problem.

Twentieth-Fox branch managers are now being urged to do everything they can in last two months of current calendar year to step up collection of outstanding revenue. Situation is described as of "grave concern" to prexy Spyros P. Skouras and other company toppers since the gross debit accounts receiveable in October, the beginning of the final quarter of the fisc. year, were highest in company's history.

Although there was said to be a slight improvement in the number of days' business represented by the outstandings at the beginning of October, the lag was still "considerable" in excess of the average of the last few years. To get the number of days' business represented by the outstandings, average weekly business done by the individual branch is compared to the branch's total of utstanding collections. At the beginning of October, only four branches—Des Moines, St. John, Winnipeg and Vancouver—were in "good standing" re collections, in that the totals represented less than 10 days' business.

Dollarwis , 20th branch collections improved during October by 24.58% compared with September. However, since average weekly billings in October were 31% below the previous month, outstanding collections as of Oct. 29 represented 31.2 days' business, compared to 27.4 days as of Sept. 24.

Argue She Has No Further Commitment Under Involved Hitchcock Iffy Contract

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Vera Miles has notified Alfred J. Hitchcock Productions that she no longer considers herself under contract to the indie company and thus is not committed to the four remaining pix covered her seven-year pact.

She originally was signed by the Hitchcock company to an exclusive two-picture-a-year contract in 1955, with agent Milt Rosner renegotiating pact in 1958 to a one-picture-a-year deal with allowance for two outside pix annually.

According to Rosner and attorney Richard Kleinrock, Miss Miles fulfilled her 1959 commitment when Hitchcock, through MCA, loaned her for "A Touch of Larceny." Contract was accelerated later in the year so that actress would appear in Hitchcock's "Psycho," which rolled in November, as her 1960 film. At that time the contract ye was changed from January-January to November- vember with continuing provis that actress would be given 30-d advance notice on anual exerci options.

Acceleration, ording to Rosner, meant option notice had to be given by Oc and, when it passed seven weeks ago, the Hitchcock indie had not yet filed the notice. On Oct. 25 the firm notified Miss Miles that contract year w. being extended 13 weeks because of he tors' and writers' strikes earlie in the year. Company therefore contended option

20 REBELS DECRY 'BUDGET MYTHS'

By HY HOLLINGER

A group of young, do-it-yourself indie filmmakers, unaffiliated with the major companies, have banded together in New York to organize the "New American Cinema."

In a statement of principles, the group of some 20 avante-garde filmmakers, Yankee style, contends that "the official cinema all over the world running out of breath." The newcomers hope to remedy the situation by scrapping accepted techniques and subject matter and making pictures that are "indivisably a personal expression."

In downgrading the present-day general output of motion pictures, the members of the "New American Cinema" charge that the pix are "morally corrupt, esthetically obsolete, thematically superficial, temperamentally boring." Moreover, they y that even the "seemingly worthwhile films, those that lay claims to high moral and esthetic standards and have been accepted as such by critics and the public alike, reveal the decay of the product film. The very slickness of their execution has become a perversion covering the falsity of their themes, the lack of sensitivity, the lack of style."

Corrupt Old Ways

Acutely ware that their rebellion against the old, official, corrupt and pretentious" school of filmmaking hasn't a ghost of a chance of being accepted by the major bankrollers and distributors, the new film experimenters are seeking new methods of picture financing and distribution. In the coin department, they have their eye on the legitimate theatre an- ls whom they feel will participate in their undertakings on a limited partnership basis as has been customary in the financing of Broadway plays.

The non-conformist filmmakers are convinced they can abolish the "budget myth" and turn out "internationally marketable films" at a cost of $25,000 to $200,000. They maintain that the realistic budgets give them freedom from stars, studios and producers since the actual filmmaker will serve as his own producer. Lower budget pix, they stres give a higher return margin than big budget films. "The low budget is not a purely commercial considerati n," they state. "It goes with our ethical and ·letic beliefs, directly connected with the things we want to say d the way we want to say them."

Allen-Broccoli and Uys Film Set With Eros

London, Nov. 22.

Warwick Film's Irving Allen and A. R. (Cubby) Broccoli have made a deal with Jamie Uys Productions and Star Film Imports, to make "The Hellions," a Western, in South Africa. It will be lensed in Technirama and Technicolor for release through Eros.

At the same time, negotiations h ve been completed between Uys and Warwick for the world-wide distribution by Eros of "Rip Van Wyck," which was shown at the Commonwealth Film Week in London last Friday (11).

Levine-Lombardo: And Also Artistic

Joseph E. Levine's Embassy Pictures and Titanus of Italy have set a co-production agreement, covering three to four pictures annually. It's an extension of a current agreement on "The Thief of Bagdad," Steve Reeves starrer, and "Sodom and Gomorrah," which rolls in January with Stewart Granger.

Lombardo and Titanus v.p. Franco De Simone stated yesterday (Tues.), in N.Y. that although Titanus was making "pictures for all the people," it was not neglecting films for the more sophisticated audience. He pointed to the company's "Rocco and His Brothers," which ran into censorship difficulties in Milan, but ssed the U.S. Customs without a problem. The film has been delivered to Lee Steiner, Titanus' U attorney, to make a distribution deal.

Levine, too, stated he was not putting all his dough on spectacles. He quipped, "I hope to regain the standing with the critics which I never had." "Two Women," based on the Alberto Moravia novel, is hi prestige entry.

The so-called medium budget picture, confined to oblivion not so long ago by many industry pundits, is still an active entry in the industry's thinking. Judging from a look at the release schedules and pictures hitting the theatres presently, these pix are more numerous than the blockbusters and the under $100,000 offerings.

When the tv impact was at its peak and the only pictures that could score at the boxoffice were the star-studded multi-million productions based on expensive presold properties, it was fashionable to offer the view that the market could not absorb the in-between pix. These productions broadly fall in the $800,000 to $1,500,000 category. The purveyors of the swan song of the medium budget picture were usually the producers of the cheapies, who maintained that an inexpensively made gimmick film was the only type that could make money in today's uncertain market, or the makers of the king-sized pictures, who insisted that the public would turn out only for something special.

Although a lot of industryites agree with this theory, the fact is that many films in the neither-fish-nor-fowl category are being made and released. A large portion are made abroad, the contention being that the cost and values are a great deal more than the actual budget. However, almost as many are coming off Hollywood's considerably slowed down assembly line.

Payoff Variables

To be sure, the fate of these pictures vary. A few have broken into the charmed circle and have chalked up better than respect-

In Last Quarter Of 1960, Domestic Take Tops 50%

Due to boxoffice declines in certain key foreign markets in the last quarter and better business at home, the 50-50 rule of thumb ratio between domestic and foreign rentals may be off a little, with the domestic earnings ratio up and the foreign down, a Motion Picture Export Assn. exec estimated last week.

The most serious decline in recent months has been in Britain, but business for American product also has been offish in other important European countries and Australia. Business actually has gone up in some areas, but it has usually been in smaller markets like Switzerland and Austria.

The 50-50 ratio, of course, is general one, with the actual percentage varying with the individual companies. However, percentage of foreign rentals to the total has been climbing for all the MPEA companies last decade, and there's certain acceptance of the idea could continue to climb. The one exception to the ward foreign trend in last has been Allied Art overseas business has gone while its domestic rentals clined. At 20th-Fox, however, mestic business in last quarter off only two percent, while foreign business declined 19%.

An exec of another com, admitted that such a reverse trend has been in effe in recent months, but predicted it would only be temporary, explained that the pictures ich had been raising the domestic rental figures lately would soon be going into release abroad and situation would soon balance 50-50 again.

Production, Prints and Ballyhoo Costs Already Recovered By 'Ben-Hur'

In one year Metro's "Ben-Hur" has earned sufficient film rental revenue to recover $15,050,000 negative cost of the production as well as the advertising and print costs. It's figured that to achieve this goal M-G talled film rentals of approximately $20,000,000. This was achieved with 325 engagements throughout the world.

The total theatre gross for the one-year period was $40,000,000 with $30,000,000 from the U. S. and Canada and $10,000,000 from abroad. The take came from 270 theatres in the U. S. and Canada and 55 from Europe, the Philippines, Australia and the Orient.

Metro's deals with theatres are on a 90-10 basis, but house expenses are deducted before the rental calculations are made. The recovery of the negative cost as well as the advertising and print outlay sets to rest the generally accepted industry theory that double the negative cost in film rental is required before costs are recovered. This theory may apply to pictures in the $2,000,000 to $4,000,000 category, but it does not hold for the more expensive pictures. The slow payoff and the need for less prints because of special engagements tends to keep the distribution costs down on the more costly entries.

To be sure, the 78-week amortization system employed by Metro for its regular pictures is not being used for "Ben-Hur." No special timetable has been established for "Hur." Although in actuality M-G has recovered its costs on "Hur," it will not be shown as a full recovery on the company's books. Out of each dollar in film rental coming in from the picture, a portion goes into income, with the balance being applied to amortization. The percentage technique Metro is using is a closely guarded secret.

Pioneers' Nite For Boston Joe

Commercial elite of the film industry paid annual homage to an individual at Nev. York's Waldorf-Astoria Monday (21) night; wreathed as Pioneer of the Year was Joseph E. Levine, president of Embassy Pictures, who got the Motion Picture Pioneers' nod because he has infused the business with a new vitality.

A crowd of nearly 500 joined in the salute—and among them were many of the film company presidents and large circuit heads who have been similarly honored in the Pioneers' 22-year-old history.

In a large sense this testimonial was unique, for Levine is of recent vintage. Zukor, Balaban, Warner, et al., outdistance him by far on the calendar count. And corporately, he admits himself he's obviously no Culver City or Burbank operation.

Turnout at the Waldorf bash, however, made it clear that Levine is no commoner. He's an importer from Boston and bally-high specialist who has used the steam-roller approach for blockbuster grosses. Theatremen among the Waldorf mob said they like the way he's sold their tickets, and distribution execs, among them Metro, Warners and Paramount, have released his pictures, which is a nice acknowledgement in itself.

The "vitality" reading is part of the citation given newly-turned producer Levine. The testimonial clearly symbolized the atta-boy sentiment felt by the oldtimers who, themselves, were brought up on Barnum & Bailey, as also practiced by Mike Todd and perpetuated by the honor guest.

Levine's got the stature now even though of newcomer status. In saying thanks for the bouquets Monday, he commented that it was only 20 months ago that he tossed his first "international" meeting of press and industry in behalf of a picture. He didn't mention it by name who's needs a plug at this time?) but it was "Hercules," which grossed like $4,000,000 in the domestic market.

His main concern, he said, is the future. For a personal touch he said he saw his son Richard as

WORLD CHECK OF THEATRES

Omat Includes Mexican Imports

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Omat Corp., newly expanded indie producing-releasing organization, has acquired four Mexican films and a German-Italian co-production for American release, exec Howard Beck revealed here. Acquisitions are part of Omat's program outlined at the recent Allied States Assn. convention in Chicago.

Three of the Mexican features are still being readied for U. S. release, with one—"Hop O' My Thumb"—now in final stages. Omat is negotiating with a top American femme vocalist for eight minutes of narration and song to go with the live-action film story of Tom Thumb. Eastman Color pic, produced by Armando Orive Alba and directed by Rene Cardona, already is playing in Mexico under the title, "Pulgarcito," and reportedly has returned its negative cost in domestic playdates alone.

Omat previously disclosed acquisition of "Beyond All Limits," Jack Palance-Maria Felix-Pedro Armendariz starrer was also filmed in Mexico. All Mexican acquisitions apparently are part of a major importation program between U. S. companies and Mexican producers. Omat paid a $40,000 advance for "Hop," and, according to reports from Mexico, is interested in worldwide rights to another film titled "Macario." Booming trend of foreign distribution on Mexican pix is finding selected national films being dubbed and offered for worldwide release.

The German-Italian pic, as yet untitled stars Catrina Valente and Vittorio DeSica. It, as well as the Mexican films, join such foreign productions as "La Dolce Vita," "Gina" and "Never Take Candy From a Stranger" on Omat's release slate. Company, headed by Lester Braunstein, Ted Miller, Beck and A. W. Schwalberg, also is readying production start on its own "Brotherhood of Evil."

'Spartacus' Hard-Ducat Deal Upsets Product Outlet Habits in Frisco

San Francisco, Nov. 22.

Sherrill Corwin's 1,151-seat United Artists will open Universal's hard-ticket "Spartacus" Dec. 22, thereby leaving UA product without a "home" in dow wn Frisco.

One immediate result was that UA sold its previously booked Christmas picture, "Facts of Life," to a combination of eight Frisco nabes and drive-ins operated by the Nasser Brothers, Ben Levin, Ray Syufy, Irving M. Levin's San Francisco Theatres, Inc. (a division of Naify circuit) and Irving Ackerman and Herbert Rosener. This combination, whose deal was closed just last weekend, has once or twice before snagged first-runs, notably "A Crack in the Mirror," but has never come up previously ith such a potential blockbuster the Bob Hope-Lucille Ball vehicle.

Earlier, U. officials confirmed "Facts of Life" had been bumped from the recently refurbished Corwin theatre and it was known UA was "reviewing" the situation. No UA official, however, has said where UA product henceforth would play over the long haul, as ing a long "Spartacus"

UA Theatre has played UA product for many years, but in recent months a rift between Corwin and the distributor has developed. UA, for instance, was incensed at Cor i last winter for allowing "pop-corn break" intermission in "On the Beach."

"Spartacus" will be first 70m roadshow film to play downtown, though Corwin has been leasing his downtown Orpheum Cinerama for more than eight years.

One speculation was that UA product might wind up at the 2,643-seat RKO Golden Gate, now "home" of Universal product. But it was also heard that Corwin was trying hard to sell UA on his 900-seat downtown Esquire, now a roveover and second-run house, to retain his UA link. A third possibility relayed to a Frisco exhibitor by top UA exec in Los Angeles: w. that UA product would move right back into the UA Theatre following the "Spartacus" run.

Fact that "Spartacus" will open downtown may reverse trend of putting hard-ticket films into neighborhood houses — "Sunrise at Campobello" folded quickly at Hardy circuit' outlying Marina and "Alamo" having a tough time at Naify circuit's neighborhood Alexandria. On the other hand, "Ben Hur" still doing nicely at Naify circuit's nabe Coronet.

Buddy Breginan and commercial producer Paul Benton formed Aztec Productions to produ e "The Angels," slated to roll Jan. 3.

Fight Christmas Slump

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

All local dailies joined with Coast exhibs and film studios Friday (18) in a mass revival of oldtime showmanship to publicize upcoming releases between now and first of the year for purpose of attracting patrons to the boxoffice. Sheets gave full pages to stunt, which carried the overline, "It's Holiday-Time in Theatre-land."

Tieing with gimmick, local theatres over weekend started to decorate their lobbies with accessories, etc., to whoop up the idea. National Theatres is extending idea to all theatres in 19 states with a view to increasing biz.

Papers carried stills and production notes on all upcoming releases during the holidays.

Skouras' London Trip As Wanger Gives 250 Crewmen 'If' Notices

Twentieth-Fox prexy Spyros P. Skouras planed from New York back to London Sunday (20) and the problems besetting "Cleopatra."

Homeoffice execs Monday (21) were confident that picture would roll now that Elizabeth Taylor is on road to recovery following her second bout in a London clinic. On Friday (18) producer Walter Wanger in London issued "protective notices" to 250 members of the "Cleo" crew, pending final assurances that Miss Taylor would be able to work soon.

So far the "Cleo" unit has completed 83 scenes without Miss Taylor out of a total of 500. Investment to date is estimated at beyond $1,000,000 on sets at Pinewood and Shepperton, as well as costumes and preparatory work. One of Skouras' main problems in London is said to be assure the insurance company that the pic will definitely get underway soon.

In New York prexy presided Saturday (19) over a series of product talks with homeoffice toppers and Bob Goldstein, chief studio exec, who flew in from Hollywood for one day of confabs. Production sked through the spring of 1962 was set, with company planning to have no less than four films simultaneously in production both here and abroad for the next 19 months.

20th also plans to release at least four, and sometimes five, films each month during the period. In addition to this sked will be the Todd-AO roadshow "specials" such as "Cleo," "The Greatest Story Ever Told" and "State Fair."

Technicolor Pair Move

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Courtland C. Morelock is moving from sales and promotional operations to post of national sales manager of Technicolor's consumer photographic products division, after 23 years with the company.

Emmet E. Moody, who has been a member of Technicolor's accounting staff for 25 years, is transferring from New York to Hollywood as controller of the consumer division.

Cuts Clear 'Room'

Regina, Sask., Nov. 22.

A "revised" version of the British import "Room at the Top" has been cleared for showing in Saskatchewan theatres.

The film, rejected a year ago by the Saskatchewan censor and turned down a few weeks later by a five-member censorship appeal board, has now been passed by unanimous decision of the same board after elimination by the distributor of what is referred to, but undefined as "objectionable parts."

Wider Range For Burstyn Award; Include English

Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America are studying a proposal to broaden the scope of its annual Joseph Burstyn award, heretofore given to the best foreign language film, to include non-American English-speaking films.

Move is obviously intended to give a chance for the Burstyn award to those IFIDA members who exclusively import English product. Also eligible for the award, even under the present rules, are those foreign imports brought into this country by the major companies. Although the latter do not often handle such product, there has been a sharp increase this year, with Allied Artists' acquisition of the German-made "The Bridge" and "Serengeti Shall Not Die," plus those Russian films acquired and distributed by the majors under the U.S.-U.S.S.R. cultural exchange program.

IFIDA also has under consideration a plan for the setting up of an arbitration system to settle disputes between IFIDA members, some of whom are exhibs as well as distribs, and between IFIDA members and outside exhibs.

Meeting last week also named Felix Bilgrey, of Times Film Corp.,

154,852 UNSPOOL IN 130 COUNTRIES

By JAY LEWIS

Washington, Nov. 22.

A Commerce Dept. survey reports a healthy increase in the number of motion picture theatres throughout the world over the past five years. However, this expansion was coupled with a decline in the percentage of screen time devoted to U.S. films.

As of Jan. 1, 1960, there were 154,852 theatres operating in 130 countries and territories, including the U.S. and possessions, representing an increase of 34,870 or 29% over Jan. 1 1955. Seating capacity rose 13,963,463, or 23%, from 1955 to an estimated 73,826,349 this year.

Commerce estimated that 60% of screen time throughout the free world went to American films—an eight per cent drop from 1955. The decrease was attributed to growth of competing film industries abroad, particularly Italy, West Germany, United Kingdom, India, Japan and Hong Kong as well as the spread of television. U.S. film industry's earnings from the foreign market during 1959 totalled $215,000,000.

Europe—Number of theatres rose 39% from 4,539 in 1955 to 103,990 at the beginning of this year. Seating capacity increased from 31,727,453 to 42,864,551, a 35% gain. West Germany reported an increase of 1774 theatres, Spain 1,080, and Italy 965. United Kingdom suffered a decline of 1,065. Sweden, Ireland, Malta and Gibralta experienced smaller decreases. Percentage of screen time for U.S. films was pegged at 50% for those countries having a free choice of films. This represented a five per cent drop from 1955.

Latin America—An increase of only 538 theatres was reported for the area over the five-year period. In South America, the number rose from 6,611 in 1955 to 6,973 this year with an eghit per cent increase in seating capacity. Central America had 98 more theatres than in 1955, while the Caribbean area had 78 more. In Latin America as a whole, percentage of screen time devoted to U.S. films was estimated at 65%—the highest of any other region.

Far East—This area reported the biggest percentage gain in theatres, 61%. The total rose from 9,735 in 1955, to 15,697 this year, with an increase in seating capacity from 5540,835 to 7,918,969. Ja- ity from 5,540,835 to 7,918,969. Ja- —from 3,734 to 7,401. Taiwan, Burma and Korea also showed substantial gains. Screen time for U.S. films in the area was estimated at 45%.

Middle East—The total rose from 459 theatres with a seating capacity of 277,640 to 694 with a capacity of 451,000. Israel had the largest gain of any nation in the area—from 140 to 210. Lebanon, Iraq and Iran reported increases. Screen time for American films was 55%.

Africa—Number of theatres rose 29% to a total of 2,168 in 1960, seating capacity. Union of South Africa, Algeria, Nigeria and Ghan coupled with a 35% increase in all had substantial increases. Screen time for U.S. films was 60%.

South Pacific—This was the only area outside the U.S. and Canada where theatres declined. The total fell from 2,351 in 1955 to 2,311 this year with New Zealand accounting for most of the drop. In Australia, theatres increased from 1,730 to 1,761. Screen time for U.S. films was 60%.

United States—The total of hardtops fell 14%—from 14,301 in 1955 to 12,291 this year. Seating capacity declined from 9,000,000 to 8,000,000. Drive-in totals rose from 4,050 with a capacity of 2,800,000 to 4,700 with a capacity of 3,300,000.

Canada—Hard-tops declined from 1963 to 1,495, with a corresponding drop in seating capacity from 1,020,000 to 810,000. Canada reported 232 drive-ins an increase of only three during the five-year period.

Variation on the fairy tale, with Jerry Lewis as the male counterpart of the famous heroine. Should rake in enough kiddie coin to count.

Hollywood, Nov. 10.

Paramount release of Jerry Lewis production. Stars Lewis. Ed Wynn, Judith Anderson, Anna Maria Alberghetti; with Henry Silva, Count Basie, Robert Hutton. Directed and screenplay by Frank Tashlin; camera, Haskell Boggs; editor, Artie Schmidt; art directors, Hal Pereira, Henry Bumstead; music, Walter Scharf; sound, Gene Merritt; assistant director, C. C. "Buddy" Coleman. Reviewed at Academy Awards Theatre, Nov. 10, '60. Running time, 88 MINS.

Fella	Jerry Lewis
Fairy Godfather	Ed Wynn
Wicked Stepmother	Judith Anderson
Princess Charmein	Anna Maria Alberghetti
Maximilian	Henry Silva
Count Basie	Count Basie
Rupert	Robert Hutton

The "F" in "CinderFella" should stand for Fiscal and the "C" for Comfort, as far as Paramount is concerned. Although it isn't likely to break the Academy barrier against comedy, this sexual switch on the familiar fairy tale should do for the simple reason that the name Jerry Lewis on a marquee represents the kind of product parents aren't afraid to send their kiddies off to see. And for the oldsters, either one goes with Lewis all the way, or has reservations, which in this case could be considerable.

Lewis, who produced, stars as the male variation on Cinderella in Frank Tashlin's screenplay. Tashlin also directed the picture and, along with his star-producer, must share the rap for failure of the mirthful to materialize into consistent merriment.

There seems to have been a dearth of comic inspiration. Bits of funny business that do show instant promise are milked to extremes. Lewis, in fact, depends almost exclusively on the art of cumulative mugging, but often misjudges the breakoff point. The pace engineered by Tashlin is uncomfortably deliberate for a comedy. Breaks for song tend to labor the issue instead of brightening the tempo. This despite some artistic staging by Nick Castle and inventive camera angling by Tashlin and lensman Haskell Boggs on these numbers.

Lewis puts all he's got into the effort, which is considerable. The facial gyrations will keep the moppets amused but, with the exception of a couple of clever sequences and the star's adept hoofing and rubbery footwork, others aren't likely to find much to roar about.

Ed Wynn is whimsical as the fairy godfather. Judith Anderson plays the wicked stepmother, Henry Silva and Robert Hutton the mercenary stepbrothers. They are competent, but the roles are rather choppy, vague and incomplete. Anna Maria Alberghetti is dazzling as the princess.

Art directors Hal Pereira and Henry Bumstead have provided a number of lavish, elegant sets. Coupled with some interesting lighting effects and enhanced by Technicolor, the result is a visual feast. But editor Artie Schmidt seems to have had his problems coping with the fantasy aspects of the tale. Scenes such as that of a chauffeur turning back into a fish at the stroke of midnight are fuzzily handled, failing to come up with the intended fun.

Walter Scharf's score does a lot toward making the pace seem brighter than it is. There are three songs by Harry Warren and Jack Brooks. None of them comes off very well, but that seems to be a result of the manner in which they are delivered rather than a commentary on their intrinsic quality. The numbers, two of them warbled in uncertain fashion by Lewis (with some help by Wynn and Miss Alberghetti) are titled "Somebody," "Princess Waltz" and "Let Me Be A People." The big ball sequence at the climax is enlivened by the driving jazz music of Count Basie's band.

Credit Edith Head with some striking costumes, neatly matching the decor of the sets. Incidentally, director Tashlin seems to have a "thing" about backs. On several occasions, he zeroes in on his performers from the rear and maintains the vantage point. It's a unique approach. Tube.

Amazing real-life assumed-identity feats of F. W. Demara Jr. are basis for a funny, though superficial, biopic. Factual aspect will spur word-of-mouth. Despite flaws, favorable b.o. prospects.

The incredible story of Ferdinand Waldo Demara Jr., "The Great Impostor" whose masquerading exploits make Walter Mitty's imagination uninspired by comparison, has been turned into a sprightly comedy by Universal. Were it not for the foundation of fact, most people would dismiss the plot and the picture as utterly unbelievable. It is this factual basis that will make the difference in wicket window traffic. The Robert Arthur production will stimulate comment and should net a tidy profit.

Yet the film, for all of its merry moments, is a disappointment. There are two principal reasons for this. One is the fact that, in striving primarily for brisk, boisterous comedy, director Robert Mulligan has had to sacrifice penetration into the fascinating personality of his subject. Demara's curious drives and motives remain, for the most part, hidden and unexplored.

He emerges in Liam O'Brien's screenplay (from Robert Crichton's book) as a kind of jolly one-upman who's not truly content until he's two-up on the next fellow. The other major flaw is the casting of Tony Curtis, who's simply not the man for the part of Demara. It is a role that someone of Guinnessian versatility (like Guinness, for instance) could have made a classic. As delineated by Curtis, the character is merely pleasant, handsome and likeable.

Demara's story, as depicted here, is a career of assumed identities. He is seen as a schoolteacher, a novitiate in a Trappist monastery, an assistant to a prison warden and a surgeon lieutenant in the Canadian Navy, all without the benefit of formal education, prior experience or anything resembling proper qualifications. In the course of these varied pursuits, he indulges in three romantic affairs. Since Demara is still "at large" (although having been apprehended several times, as described in the film), there is no "end" to th yarn, and this fact is whimsically illustrated by Curtis' coy smile when that deathless legend, "The End," shows up on the screen.

Mulligan's otherwise slick direction, along with some stickout performing by several gifted veterans of the screen, is responsible for some memorably humorous passages. In accomplishing this, he has had to forsake credulity for the sake of a shock or a laugh. There is one truly hilarious scene in which Curtis, in the guise of naval medic, shoots so much novocaine into the jaw of ship skipper Edmond O'Brien prior to pulling his tooth that O'Brien's entire body is reduced to rigidity. O'Brien steals the picture in this sequence.

Going down the list of fine character performances, there is Karl Malden as Curtis' parish priest and confidante, Raymond Massey as a wise old Abbot, Gary Merrill in a small part as Curtis' father, Jeanette Nolan as his mother, Arthur O'Connell as a hapless prison warden, Mike Kellin as a grateful convict, Frank Gorshin as a perennial time-server, Doodles Weaver as a jug-guzzling farmer, Robert Middleton as a guard. Others who attract brief, but favorable attention are Larry Gates, Richard Sargent, Ward Ramsey, David White, Philip Ahn, Herbert Rudley, Jerry Paris, Harry Carey Jr. and Willard Sage.

The three lady-loves are enacted by Joan Blackman, Sue Ane Langdon and Cindi Wood. The striking Miss Blackman is stuck with some extremely syrupy, unrealistic lines. The exuberant Miss Langdon creates a strong comic impression the warden's uninhibited daughter. Miss Wood, a pretty miss, does well by the role of a WAC looie. Robert Crawford, a brown-eyed youth, plays the blue-eyed Curtis as a child. Crawford plays it with enthusiasm, but the part and the expository passage itself seem superfluous.

Robert Burks' camera work is skillful, making particularly valuable use of the zoom maneuver. Some adept editing touches by Frederic Knudtson, such as scene transition in the middle of a sentence, brighten the pace. Henry Mancini's music is light, romantic, melodic. Art directors Alexander Golitzen and Henry Bumstead, undaunted by Demara's occupational versatility, have kept pace beautifully with some authentic settings. Tube.

Wir Kellerkinder
(We Cellar Children)
(GERMAN)

Stella release of Hans Oppenheimer production. Directed by Jochen Wiedemann. Screenplay, Wolfgang Neuss. Camera, Warner Lenz; music, Peter Sandloff. With Wolfgang Neuss, Wolfgang Gruner, Jo Herbest, Willi Rose, Hilde Sessak, Ingrid van Bergen, Karin Baal, Achim Strietzel, Rudi Schmit, Paul Westermeier. At Atelier am Zoo, Berli Running time, 90 MINS.

This film is currently causing a real row in Germany in view of its boycott by West Germany's exhibitor associations. Latter hold to the principle that a film that has been shown on television must never be given a theatrical run. "Cellar Children" was originally planned as theatrical film. Wolfgang Neuss, the author, tried to find a producer but failed because of domestic filmites' reluctance towards his story material. Neuss finally interested SFB (Berlin) and NWRV (Hamburg) for whom Han Oppenheimer produced it as a joint telecast. "Cellar Children" was on the West German tele last June.

Film cost about a quarter of what a German pic normally does. Author Neuss, who also plays a principal role i "Children," is co-investor in the production. Pic comes off much better via wide-screen than tv. Foreign possibilities are a special guess.

It doesn't exactly belong to the easy-to-understand type of film. Most of it is narration, with much wordplay and political gags and jokes of strictly German calibre. A few German patrons will find a tough time understanding the film's meaning or message. "Children" is cleverly written and teems with amusing dialog sequences but requires a receptive audience. It'll probably be enjoyed mostly by the intellectual set.

Film has only to do with Germans and spans a period from the '30's up to the present time. It satirically shows how many Germans changed their political views under the different rulers. There's a former Nazi functionary who later manages to find an equally influential job in what became Communist Germany after 1945.

There's former notorious Commie who had it tough under the Nazis who later gets a topflight position in East Germany only to flee that regime because he realizes that this sort of communism is a far cry from what he expected. The swastika smearings in West Germany find substantial menti ditto the newly rich and those who "can't remember" what happened under Hitler.

In the main, this is a Neuss picture. His satirical writing talents as well as his cabaretist acting abilities come off to good advantage here. Cast includes members of Berlin's Porcupines, a local literary cabaret ensemble, with standout performances by Jo Herbst and Wolfgang Gruner, both pals of Neuss; and Achim Striezel, as a Commie. Fine support is supplied by Willi Rose, Hilde Sessak (parents of Neuss), Ingrid van Bergen and Karin Baal, among others. Technically, the film is okay. Production dress reveals the modest budget, but this is of little importance here. Hans.

Marcel Camus has gone back to Brazil for this film after his prize-winning "Black Orpheus," made there. This lacks the Orpheus myth basis which gave his former pic some dramatic structure as well as color and spirit of its Brazilian tempo and locale. It emerges mainly a romanticized documentary on the little-known hinterlands of Brazil, with a bare storyline used to make some points on vengeance, humanity and true happiness.

It has a tendency to meander in characterization, plot and story as it lovingly savors the bounty, simple zest and human wisdom of the natives. Most of the film's comments are made via homilies and well-meaning platitudes spoken by its characters. But it has a richness in incident and a sincere sentimentality which keep it beguiling and cohesive. It's also helped by an eye for landscapes, the people and the dances.

Film has are exploitation chances abroad on its offbeat looks at Brazil, but will be more chancey for general spotting. The renown "Orpheus" is also a selling point.

An adventurous Frenchman, mining diamonds, is shot down by a supposed friend and partner, but recovers to seek vengeance. This takes him on a trip into the more primitive parts of Brazil. Religious processions, fights and fiestas abound together with a series of interludes with women. The Frenchman picks up a German cabaret singer who knows his enemy's whereabouts. However, later he falls for a native girl, gives up his quest, and even saves the killer's life in a contrived ending.

Raymond Loyer is somewhat stiff but acceptable as the Frenchman. Elga Andersen is passable as the German girl. But it is the vital, dynamic and earthy Brazilian players who give the film its main tang and feeling. His visuals are excellent as usual but he lacks a good scripter to weld all into a more satisfying pic. This looks to do well here, but will need the hard sell abroad. It is in French and Portuguese. Mosk.

The "Waste-Land" consists of lots and half-demolished buildings around new housing projects where a young gang has its headquarters. From cabalistic youths they almost become delinquents because of the influence of a criminal type, but tragedy and love prevent it. This is a familiar tale. However, it is stolidly told here to make this of local interest but lacking the clarity, characterizations and depth for many arty chances abroad. Film looks to have more general exploitation possibilities via its theme.

A tomboyish girl leads a gang which steals lesser things. It meets in a broken-down factory. Into this setup comes a character escaped from a reform school who promises them big money. But one decides against the move as love grows between him and the now feminine tomboy. It leads to a knockdown fight and the death of a young boy.

Oldtime director Marcel Carne has directed this with a heavy hand. He has made a romantic tale of something which needed revelation and compassion. Flight from the neighborhood seems the only solution and parents are again vaguely guilty figures in the background. Playing is mainly stiff and technical credits glossy. Mosk.

Esther And The King
(C'SCOPE—COLOR)

Heap of sex and spectacle in a muddled melter loosely based on the biblical tale. Commercial approach may redeem the formula despite the casting and production flaws.

That the tale of Esther is one of the more aesthetic and narratively skillful passages of the Bible is never apparent in the Raoul Walsh production of "Esther and the King." The absorbing incidents that occur in the biblical story have been exaggerated and expanded into a crude melodramatic hodgepodge, its believable characters twisted into stereotyped shapes to fit the formulese of the film's dramatic pattern. And yet the presence of that double-barrelled box-office standby, sex-and-spectacle, may justify the project commercially. The 20th-Fox release, filmed in Italy by Americans and Italians, should have an impact here similar in nature to that of the many other Italian-made historical and biblical epics that have been flooding the U.S. cinemarketplace with increasing regularity.

Joan Collins stars as Esther in the Walsh-Michael Elkins screenplay. To the biblical tale about her persuasive influence upon King Ahasuerus in combatting the Jew-baiting tactics of his wicked minister, Haman, has been added, among other things, a side love interest that only serves to cloud the central issue and use up valuable time that might better have been spent focusing attention on the principals.

The screenplay is written in an extremely archaic style that rings inical to the modern ear and intellect. Walsh's direction is responsible for some pretty candid sexmanship and smatterings of military spectacle, but he has breathed no life and hardly any visual sense into the personal drama. The ori in of the Jewish Feast of Purim is little more than an afterthought in the film.

Miss Collins brings physical beauty to the role, but is not convincing as Esther. Richard Egan hasn't much life as the King. As Haman, Ser ie Fantoni wears a perpetual smile. Perhaps fortunately he has no mustache to twist as he leers. Daniella Rocca makes quite a display of her chest measurements as the evil Queen Vashti. Others prominent but no mor histrionically successful are Denis O'Dea, Rick Battaglia, Renato Baldini and Robert Buchanan.

There are some fairly diverting shots of old ruins and flashy palaces whipped up by art director Giulio Giovannini and lensed competently by Mario Bava. Jerry Webb's editing is workmanlike, Tito De Luc's choreography attractively naughty, and the Francesco Lavagnino-Roberto Nicolosi score routinely biblical in tone. Tube.

Essaness circuit, which operates three drive-ins in this territory, decided to help itself lick the head-count problem, and has installed a staff-designed admission control system in each ozoner. Circuit is so pleased with system's performance that it's now marketing same under its own aegis, having displayed the unit at recent Allied States exhibs meeting here.

Berated, Unappreciated & Unrecruited

But Film Industry May Yet Value Its Ad-Pub And Promotion Talent When It Evaporates, Says Gerard

Philip Gerard, Universal's east-ub-ad director, envisions a "critical shortage" of film publicity, advertising and promotion men in the years ahead unless the industry embarks on a recruiting program. He issued his warning last week at the annual sh wmanship conference of Walter Reade Inc. theatre managers at the circuit's Oakhurst, N.J. headquarters.

Gerard, the principal speaker, said there is sure to be a talent vaccum in these fields unless an industry-wide apprentice training program is launched. He noted that the ideal training ground for new ballymen was at the theatre level "where the roduct has to be sold to the audience." He stressed that over the years the greatest merchandisers of the industry have come from theatre operation.

The U exec said that promotion today takes its place as an equal partner with equal status along side of production and distribution. "The major film companies and th independent producers have seen the necessity for accelerated promotion selling," he said. "They have multiplied their efforts and their budgets, but the most vital contribution for successful merchandising still must take place at the theatre level and no matter how much the distributor puts forth in dollars, manpower and enthusiasm, unless this is matched with an equal effort by exhibition, the full potential of the sh can never be realized."

Gerard said he would like to 100 additional theatre press agents to go back to work on the theatre level before the end of the year and "when this happens, I am confident we will once again see broad smiles around theatres and long lines around boxoffices."

Confidence-in-Biz

Albany, Nov. 22.

Nowadays no theatre is remodeled or purchased without the angle of "confidence in the future of films" being underscored. So again this is being said of George Thornton of Saugerties acquiring his fourth smalltown situation, the Community at Catskill. It's a 1,000-seater built 40 years ago and long run by late William W. Farley of Albany, more recently by a new company under Farley's son.

Thornton, too, is second generation exhibitor, the family having been in film theatres over half a century.

'Classification' More Likely To Pass in Albany

Albany, Nov. 22.

All here indicate that there's a good chance the 1961 state legislature will pass a film classification bill of the type which died in committee when the 1960 legislature adjourned earlier this year. Dissatisfaction with current "adult" theme pix among such influential groups as the legislative committee of the State Council of Protestant Churches, the Catholic War Veterans, etc. has not abated in recent months, and has, in fact, increased.

Last year's Younglove-Duffy bill, which would have endorsed certain films for patronage by children, was approved by the Assembly, but a technical mistake, requiring a second printing, held up action on the measure in the Senate.

Assemblyman Joseph R. Younglove, Johnstown Republican, who was recently reelected, has promised to introduce a similar measure in the next legislature "early in 1961."

Sid Cooper to Cinerama After 16 Years at UA; New U.S. Sales Manager

Sid Cooper, Central and Southern division manager for United Artists, is exiting the company to become domestic sales manager of Cinerama Inc.

Cooper, with UA for 16 years, will assume his new post on Dec. 12. B. G. Kranze, Cinerama, v.p., expressed his appreciation to UA for granting Cooper a release to accept the new job. Cooper will headquarter at Cinerama's N. Y. homeoffice.

His appointment, according to Kranze, is in keeping with the expansion of Cinerama's activities in the U.S. and overseas.

SHERRILL, SHABASON ACQUIRE METRO BRAID

Sherrill was a salesman in Chicago prior to his new appointment and has been with the company for 21 years. Shabason moved up to his new post after 10 years as assistant branch manager in Pittsburgh. He joined Metro in 1928, serving in Pittsburgh continuously.

COOPER FOUNDATION PAIR GOING CINERAMA

Cooper Foundation Theatres has closed a deal with Cinerama Inc. to exhibit Cinerama pictures at Cooper Theatre, Omaha, and the Cooper Theatre, Oklahoma City.

The Omaha house, equipped with 70m since 1958, is currently showing "Ben-Hur," and will install the Cinerama equipment at the conclusion of the engagement. The five existing Cinerama pix, starting with "This Is Cinerama," will be shown.

The 70m equipment at the Cooper will be moved to the Foundation's Dundee Theatre in Omaha. The 70m at the State, Omaha, will remain, and both theatres will be available for 70m roadshows.

The Cooper Theatre in Oklahoma City is also showing "Ben-Hur" and will install Cinerama equipment at the end of the run. The 70m equipment at the Cooper will be shifted to the Criterion Theatre in Oklahoma City. Cooper Foundation Theatres will also i stall Cinerama in Denver at a new theatre presently being built.

'HOME-LOVING' IA PRODUCER PETS

The labor press is being wooed by the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees as part of the current campaign of the Hollywood AFL-CIO Council to fight runaway film production.

The first effort is a positive one in that the labor newspapers are being asked to give their all-out support to a picture made in Hollywood. Benefactor of the campaign is Universal's "Spartacus," hailed by the film company as the most expensive picture ever made in Hollywood. Actually one battle sequence, said to have cost more than $250,000, was filmed in Spain.

The made-in-America plea was made last week by Tom Loy, editor of the IATSE Bulletin, at the Detroit convention of the International Labor Press Assn. Appearing before 200 delegates representing some 500 union newspapers, Loy asked their support in the campaign by publicizing "Spartacus" in their productions.

Loy told the delegates that they will receive a story from the IA on "Spartacus" as well as publicity material. The IA has also promised to follow up with additional pleas to the labor press in cities where "Spartacus" currently playing.

The IA story notes that "Hollywood craftsmen, most of whom belong to the IATSE, feel they have much at stake in the 'Spartacus' experiment. They believe the success of this film released by Universal-International, might well prove the turning point in their drive against runaway production. That is why they want to bring the picture and its fair-minded producers and distributors to the attention of union members throughout America."

George Sherman's Pair For 20th; Following Films Already on Indie Slate

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Shergari Corp.'s George Sherman has launched two new properties—"Lady From Colorado" and "Desperate Men"—for filming on indie's 20th-Fox schedule. "Lady," based on the novel by Homer Croy, currently is being prepared for submission to the studio, with 20th already okaying "Men."

Projects join "Blood and Guts," Gen. George Patton biog by Jack Pearl, on Shergari's slate. "Lady" is a romantic adventure story of a woman from pioneer Colorado who goes to England. "Men" is an adventure trek story scripted by Louis L'Amour, Jack Nattleford and Manny O'Brine from L'Amour's original story.

Shergari toppers Sherman and Frank H. Ricketson Jr. recently filmed "For the Love of Mike" for 20th. Sherman, in a separate deal with studio, has directed "The Wizard of Baghdad" and has produced and directed "The Fiercest Heart." He revealed yesterday his next studio picture likely would be James Michener's "The Jungle," a property planned for some time on 20th producer David Weisbart's slate. On all new properties, Sherman will produce and direct.

Marcus Plan Pittsburgh Launching For United Artists' 'Facts of Life'

Takes Over a Party

Detroit, Nov. 22.

Detroit Free Press hosted 1,667 persons, who are being helped by 20 social agencies, at a special showing of Metro's "Ben-Hur" at the United Artists Theatre, anaged by Dillon Krepps.

The party first was planned by The Detroit Times, but when that paper was bought and closed by The Detroit News, the Free Press stepped into the gap and acted as sponsor.

United Artists has entered a deal with exhibitors of the Pittsburgh territory for the showing of "Facts of Life" within the format of the so-called Marcus Plan. In effect, this will be a saturation booking with the distributor and the theatremen sharing in extra promotional costs Idea was tried out in the area with Walt Disney's "Jungle Cat" and, according to the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, with success. COMPO has been championing the Marcus project.

UA's "Life" will open in the territory Dec. 28.

That the Marcus Plan is thus being continued would seem inconsistent with recent developments. Exhibs in the Pittsburgh area had complained that the distribs were balking at the idea. Certain distrib sources said the marketing involved nothing more than saturation showcasing of the traditional sort—but unrealistically expensive. Film company spokesmen also beefed that a showmanly theatreman, such as Ben Marcus, originator of the plan, was needed in all areas but was not to be found.

So it is that despite all this professed opposition the Marcus Plan is staying alive.

New 20th 'Cabinet' Shuffles Salesmen In Eleven Offices

Twentieth-Fox's establishment of a "sales cabinet" to work with general sales manager Glenn Norris, which took four branch managers out of the field, plus two retirements, has sparked a reshuffling and series of promotions in the field involving 63 employees in 11 branches in the U.S. and Canada.

In addition to the promotions announced earlier, the following men are going onwards and upwards in the 20th organization:

Victor J. Beattie, former Toronto branch manager, named Canadian sales manager with headqurters in Toronto.

Gordon W. Lightstone, formerly St. John branch manager, to branch manager in Montreal, succeeding Gerald L. Chernoff, retired.

Philip Geller, formerly Winnipeg manager, to head the Toronto branch. Stuart C. McQuay, formerly special sales rep in Vancouver, takes over in Winnipeg.

Robert S. Pacey, 20th rep in Newfoundland, succeeds Lightstone in St. John, with Gerald F. Hogan, formerly on the Toronto booking staff, taking over for Pacey.

Lloyd Edwards, former sales manager at Dallas, becomes assistant branch manager there. Alex Strulson, formerly a salesman at Philadelphia, fills newly created post of assistant branch manager in Philadelphia.

AB-PT STALWARTS TO KIAMESHA LAKE

Field affiliates of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres along with the homeoffice brass will meet in Kiamesha Lake, N. Y., Dec. 15-16 to plot a theatre boxoffice drive for the April-May-June period. This quarter usually is a slow one and the exhibition end of AB-PT is on the prowl for bolstering influences.

Edward L. Hyman, v.p., will provide the meeting with a list of releases due from all distributors for the first six months of 1961 and will stress the ad-pub promotion values in the campaigns, particularly for the April-June pictures.

As is his custom, Hyman will make available to all exhibs in the United States and Canada copies of his roundup of scheduled releases.

Morey Sparks CSS Push

Community Service Society o. New York has appointed Allied Artists veep Ed Morey chairman of the motion picture division for this year's Family Fund drive.

Overall goal of CBS for the city-wide driva is $2,000,000.

Tom McKean, senior salesman for Paramount in Oklahoma City, transferred to the Dallas Paramount exchange.

Pittsburgh's Ernie Stern And Tel Aviv Enterpriser Plan Israeli Drive-In

Pittsburgh, Nov. 22.

A vacation trip to Israel by Ernest Stern, head of Associated Theatres here, may result in the building of a drive-in theatre in that country. Stern, whose firm controls 13 drive-ins and eight hardtops in this area, has entered into an agreement with Danny Angel, a businessman in Tel Aviv, to construct an ozoner near that city.

Angel is now acquiring property and Stern has supplied with plans of a conventional American drive-in. Construction will begin as soon as all plans are completed and land is purchased.

There are no ozoners in the country although there are many flourishing conventional houses.

MARTON TO COMMAND SPEC SCENES FOR 'CLEO'

Director Andrew Marton, who wrote, devised and directed the chariot race sequence for Metro's "Ben-Hur," will perform in comparable capacity for 20th-Fox's "Cleopatra," he said in New York yesterday (Tues.) en route back to Hollywood from London and Athens where he just completed shooting "It Happened In Athens" for 20th.

Director says he'll probably shoot "Cleo" naval battle in London and then do a climactic army battle on Egyptian location. Starting date for his part of the "Cleo" project is still unset, depending on how rest of production progresses under director Rouben Mamoulian and working out battle script details with producer Walter Wanger. In meantime, he is returning to Hollywood to cut "Athens" and await call from Wanger in London.

Transport Strike Bops L.A. Albeit 'Lace' Sockeroo $21,000, 'Blues' Hot 26G; 'Spartacus' Snappy 25G, 5th

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

First-runs continue spotty here this stanza, with the five-day transportation strike taking a heavy toll, particularly in downtown area. Two newcomers, however, are proving blockbusters. "Midnight Lace" is heading for smash $21,000 in three theatres while "GI Blues" looks hotsy $26,000 in four spots. Both pix are racking up tremendous grosses on multiple dates in this area.

"Legion of Nile" shapes thin in a trio of situations for initial stanza. "Please Turn Over," in contrast, looms lusty $8,500 at Music Hall.

Regular holdovers are paced by "Butterfield 8," which is in for a rich $18,000 or near in third frame at Hollywood Paramount.

All hard-ticket pix are showing well. "Spartacus" is rated solid $25.000 or better in fifth Pantages week. "Ben-Hur" looks stout in 52d round at Egyptian. "The Alamo" shapes slick $23,000 in fourth round at Carthay.

Minneapolis Nov. 22.

Exhibitors here have three sock holdovers for which to be thankful this holiday week. Heftiest blockbuster is "Butterfield 8," smash in second chapter after establishing a record take in opener at the tiny World. Another powerful grosser is "Midnight Lace," great in second round at Gopher.

It's the strongest showing for holdovers in weeks with only two newcomers squeezing into the scene. "North to Alaska" shapes mighty at State while "Breath of Scandal" is drab in first and only canto at Orpheum. Also winding up after second chilly week is "Where Hot Wind Blows" at Pan.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.75-$2.65)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (39th wk). Little variance from week to week. Healthy $9,000 this chapter, same as last.

Century (Cinerama, Inc.) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"This Is Cinerama" (Cinerama) (reissue) (13th wk). Starting fourth month here after 66-week run six years ago. Should hit strong $10,000 this stanza on basis of two extra holiday showings. Last week, $8,500.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.50) —"Midnight Lace" (U) (2d wk). Great $9.000. Last week, $12,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.25) — "Girl of Night" (WB) (2d wk). Newspaper ads point up book's title, "Call Girl." Lusty $5,000. Last week, $10,000.

Orpheum (Mann) (2,800; $1-$1.25) —"Breath of Scandal" (Par). Drab $4.500. Last week, "Desire in Dust" (20th) $5,000.

Pan (Mann) (1,800; $1-$1.25) — "Where Hot Wind Blows" (M-G) (2d wk). Bows out with cold $3,000. Last week, $5,500.

London Film Biz Solid; 'Blues' Great $20,000; 'Moon' Bright 14G, 'Portrait' Neat 9G, 2d; 'Sunday' Boff 23G, 3d

London, Nov. 15.

"GI Blues" led the field among the newcomers last week and was heading for a great $20,000 in its first Plaza week. Another staunch grosser is "Man in Moon" which held at fine $14,000 or better i second stanza at the Odeon, Leicester Square. Well below hopes was the Italian spectacular, "Carthage in Flames," which looked to finish its first frame at the Odeon, Marble Arch, at a light $5,500 or near. "Portrait in Black" in second Leicester Square round held steady at neat $9,000.

The longrun films are collaring most of the business. "Ben-Hur" was over great $27.000 in 47th Empire week. "South Pacific" fancy $18,200 or near in 135th week at the Dominion while "South Seas Adventure" was still big $15,000 i 54th Casino week.

Chicago, Nov. 22.

With some notable exceptions, Chi firstruns are still trying to round the corner away from the doldrums. Adding to the routine competition this round is the debut of McCormick Place, city's new lakefront expo arena offering a home-and-flower show. It obviously is hurting the deluxers.

Some new product is helping. On preem sesh, Oriental's "Esther and King" looks like a fine $25,000. "World of Apu" at sometime arty Carnegie looks for an okay $3,000 initialer. Third week of "Inherit Wind" was okay $10,000 at Roosevelt.

Still tops "Butterfield 8," soaring to big third Chicago stanza. Second week of "Sunrise at Campobello" looks dull at the State-Lake. "Girl of Night" supplants today (Tues.).

"Midnight Lace" looks boff in fourth week at the United Artists. Esquire's "Breath of Scandal" looms nice in first holdover session. "10 Who Dared" is hep in ditto term at Loop.

"Hiroshima Mon Amour" looks solid again in fourth week at the World. "Battle of Sexes" is rated good in same round at Surf.

On the hard-ticket front, "Alamo" is heading for a nice fourth Palace stand. "Spartacus" is hailing a bright sixth frame at McVickers while "Ben-Hur" shapes exciting again in 48th round at Todd Theatre.

Estimates for This Week

Fresh Pix Boost N.Y.; 'Butterfield' Wow 90G, 'King' Tall 30G, 'Alaska' Lively 27G, 'Wong' Big $150,000, 2d

Continued strength by some recently opened pictures and launching of a couple of new films will keep Broadway first-run trade on an even keel this session. Outstanding is "Butterfield 8," which is soaring to a wow $90,000 or close opening round at the Capitol, to give this house its best initial week coin in months. "Esther and King," too, is doing well with a big $30,000 likely for first week at the Palace.

"World of Suzie Wong" with stageshow is holding with big $150,000 or close in second session at the Music Hall, insuring a third week. "North To Alaska" is heading for fine $27,000 in first holdover round at the Paramount.

"Let No Man Write Epitaph" looks like nice $21,000, day-dating the Forum and Trans-Lux 52d Street in second rounds. "Girl of Night" shapes good $20,000 or close in second stanza at the Criterion.

"Inherit the Wind" wound its sixth session at the Astor with an okay $12,000 and a good $5,800 at the arty Trans-Lux 85th Street. "GI Blues is heading for a good $18,000 in current (3d) stanza at the Victoria.

"The Alamo" held with socko $30,000 in fourth round finished last night (Tues.) at the Rivoli. "Spartacus" looks smash $31,000 in present (7th) round at the DeMille. "Ben-Hur" continued its great gait with a wow $32,000 or near likely in 52d session at the State.

Most encouraging news among newcomers at arty theatres is the great $17,000 racked up by "Virgin Spring" on initial week at the Beekman, representing the best take for any foreign-language pic at this house.

Estimates for This Week

German Cartel Office Probes Alleged Exhib Boycott of 'Kellerkinder'

Frankfurt, Nov. 15.

The West German government's Federal Cartel Office is now undertaking an official investigation of whether the German exhibitors, through its Central Assn. of German Theatres, actually illegally boycotted the Wolfgang Neuss pic, "Wir Kellerkinder" (We Cellar Children).

The film, which has caused considerable argument in film circles, first played on West German television screens on June 25. And for the first time in German history, it subsequently was offered to film houses for showing.

The full-length satire on how some Germans managed to keep their morals and politics changing under the various regimes is being distributed to the film houses by Paul M. Buenger's Stella Distributors of Frankfurt. The pic opened in October with just five bookings, in Hannover, Hildesheim, Kassel, Bielefeld and Augsburg. Not a single key city or major theatre took the film, even though the tv showing had met with exceptional reviews.

Cabaret star and actor Wolfgang Neuss went on a one-man campaign titled, "Open the Theatres," when he rented the important Theatre am Zoo in Berlin and had a special showing for high-ranking invited guests, members of the press and the ministry. The 550-seat theatre was filled. Neuss claimed that his film was being slighted by the West German theatres because of its previous tele showing.

The film, which cost about 275,000 marks (under $70,000) was brought in at about one-quarter the cost of a regular German film. Neuss first planned the project for the film theatres, but could not find a producer to put up the money. Finally he got the financing from German art dealer Hans Oppenheimer, plus some allegedly but with without any official credit, from German producer Kurt Ulrich. The film appeared on the German television net from Berlin, and German cinema owners feared that showing it subsequently in their houses might start a trend of "second-runs" from television.

However, Neuss and Buenger claim that the showing on television has not hurt the cinema attendance and that all five theatres where it has run have done good business.

In Augsburg, theatre owner H. Reichel queried the people who bought tickets at his Tivoli. About three out of 10 had seen the film previously on television, but they explained variously why they bought tickets to the second time around: "There are so many people at home I wanted to see the film again in peace"; "I liked it so much that I'd gladly pay to see it again"; and "I really don't care what film is playing, so long as my girl friend and I can be there together."

Buenger has set releases for the film outside of Germany in Switzerland, Austria and Holland, and also has had a request for the film, which deals with the Nazi era, to be played in Israel. Stella Films took ads in German papers claiming the pic drew 4,500 during the first four days in one city. Also that it is being held over for the second week on one booking.

Pax Films Formed Via Joining 2 British Cos., Turning Out Lavish Pix

London, Nov. 22.

Pax Films is the name of the new company which represents the joining of forces between Britannia and Bryanston Films. Steven Pallos, head of the former, and Max Setton, the Bryanston boss, will be joint managing directors of the new company.

As exclusively reported in VARIETY, the new company will concentrate on more lavish productions than either Britanni Bryanston. Though the new outfit will maintain the production-distribution pattern of B. and B., the pictures that it will make will have physical distribution in the U.K. through British Lion.

Assoc. British to Open 2d Bowling Centre

London, Nov. 15.

Associated British Cinemas is to open the second tenpin bowling centre in which it's interested. The Princess Bowl at Dagenham, Essex, on Dec. 3. The first centre over here to be built on two floors, it will also be the biggest yet, with 24 lanes in all and accommodations for 189 spectators.

The Princess Bowl is being equipped by American Machine & Foundry, which was responsible for the first British tenpin alley at Stamford Hill, north London, in the converted ABC Super Cinema. Assoiated British took over management of this operation after a few months.

No Action in '60; Mexicans Divide On New Pic Law

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

As insiders close to official film circles dope it out, the long awaited new Mexican Film Law will not be ready for ratification by the Chamber of Deputies and Senate this year.

But few weeks remain before legislative sessions shut down next month, prior to the holidays. The project is still having last minute touching up by the Legislative Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, according to Deputy Macrina Rabadan, a member of this body.

Then, measure has to be discussed and approved by the Chamber of Deputies, passed on to the Senate for similar action. Concensus is that time is short to achieve all this.

If new law is not acted upon by the Mexican Congress before close of 1960, then probabilities is that the film industry will have at least a 12 month "breathing spell," and a hold off in federal regulations. Some eye this "holiday" with elation; others with concern, feeling that matter should be gotten over with once and for all so industry can know for certain where it stands instead of wildly speculating about its future.

But all indications point to fact that speculation and rumor will be rife about the provisions of new law until the next Congressional sessions late in 1961.

$5,000,000 U.S. Loan To Mex Film Bank Looms

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

The Film Bank is on verge of accepting a $5,000,000 American loan despite recent denials. It is said that all details of the financial arrangement have been worked out. Instrumental in bringing the Film Bank together with an American institution, participating in initial preliminaries, was the new Arlington-Bueno firm set up for coproduction of four pictures a year.

The coproduction firm will not receive any of the new dollar credits, with these earmarked for fostering of additional Mexican-American coproductions in 1961. Funds will be used strictly for this purpose, and will not be available for purely Mexican pix.

Cantinflas Pulls Up His Pants

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

Mari "Cantinflas" Moreno is abandoning his traditional "gabardina" attire in his latest Mexican film, "The Illiterate One." Instead of the no-belt trousers, sweatshirt and kerchief, he sports natty pepper and salt formal suits, the uniform of a mailman, working overalls of a carpenter, etc.

There's no telling how public will react to seeing their idol and the symbol of the "average Mexican," going fashion plate. His classical "gabardina" dress was what skyrocketed him to international fame from lowly beginnings in the "carpa" or tent neighborhood theatre.

Jack Hawkins' Victory On Income Tax Appeal Viewed Vital by Brit.

London, Nov. 22.

Actor Jack Hawkins' victory last week over a Crown appeal against an Income Tax Commissioners' finding is described by financial experts here as "notable and important." The Commissioners' ruling was that dividends paid to Hawkins' three children from a company that was paid $70,000, were not his income but the children's, and that they were accordingly entitled to the usual personal reliefs.

The appeal concerned a $1,400 dividend declared by the company, Roehampton Productions, the Crown seeking to prove that Hawkins was a "settlor" liable to tax because he had provided the money indirectly. Under certain sections of the 1952 Income Tax Act, if a parent becomes a "settlor"—makes a capital settlement on his child or children—then any payment out of the settled income for the children's benefit during their minority is treated as part of the parent's income for tax purposes.

Mr. Justice Danckwerts, giving judgment, found that the Crown had not proved Hawkins to be a settlor. The deed of settlement in March, 1955, resulted from the gift of $280 from Hawkins' father-in-law, who was the settlor there, and the service agreement was entered into with Hawkins during the previous December. Under this agreement, Roehampton Productions paid the actor $2,520 for the 12 weeks he was employed making the film, "Fortune Is A Woman," while the company received $70,000 for his services.

275 Brit. Cinemas Close

Cinema closures in the U.K. in 1960, from Jan. 1 to the end of October, totalled 275.

Inside Stuff—International

Spanish and Italian film spokesmen are still mulling new clauses for the Spanish-Italian pic agreement which the Iberians recently walked out on. Principal Spanish beef still is the little playing time accorded Spanish product in Italy vs. the 25 or more Italo pix which mop up b.o.-wise on the Spanish market every year. If a new agreement is reached, as is held probable, the Spaniards may stage some sort of special show in Rome to spotlight Spanish product.

Moiseyev Dance Co. of Moscow was recently dated to play Geneva, Switzerland, following engagements in Germany but were refused permission by Swiss. Nothing was published. Details are lacking but it is known that the Swiss have been increasingly annoyed with Soviet espionage activity in their country, which casts a suspicion over those numbered checking accounts if there should come another war.

British Discovery: Reissues

London, Nov. 15.

Distributors in Britain are riding a new gravy train. They have discovered lucre in package reissues, with programs bringing in an average of $200,000 over and above original earnings.

One exception to the current practice was the reissue of "The King and I," which, because of its length, went out again as a solo release presentation. Its original release was ended after it had played all its major dates, including second and third runs, but not single Sunday engagements. It was put into cold storage and reissued earlier this year. It is now heading for a gross of at least $250,000 and will again be put on ice at the end of the year for a further reissue.

From the point of view of the British industry, one intriguing package will be "Island in the Sun" and "Heaven Knows Mr. Allison," both of which still qualify as quota. Not only will these two pix garner additional rentals, but will be entitled to a second share of Eady revenue.

Though 20th-Fox is being particularly active in the packaging business, they by no means have the field to themselves. Rank Distributors, for example, successfully reissued "The Glenn Miller Story" and "A Town Like Alice" as a package earlier in the year, while there are a number of distribs who rely on oldies acquired from the majors for a substantial part of their regular revenue.

Among current double bill reissues being packaged are "Carousel" and "Carmen Jones"; "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing" with "Seven Year Itch"; and "Peyton Place" with "Kiss of Death."

Mexico Film Fetes Get the Brush From Industry, Johnston Excepted

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Despite familiar urging from the Motion Picture Assn. of America that Hollywood must be well represented at all foreign film festivals, the American film industry thus far has turned a cold shoulder toward the forthcoming film festival events in Mexico City and Acapulco. Some 50 invitations went out to U.S. film personnel, mostly actors, and so far only three officially have accepted.

MPAA prexy Eric Johnston will attend, as will Nathan Golden, of the Dept. of Commerce. George Chandler, president of the Screen Actors Guild, will go there repping SAG at the events taking place Nov. 18 through Dec. 6.

It was reported in the Mexico City press that Rita Hayworth also would attend, but similar stories noted that certain other merican actors have accepted, and a check here revealed they would not attend.

Armando del Moral, who represents Mexico's screen actors guild here, was charged with the responsibility of inviting Americans for the all-expenses-paid trips to the festival. He said yesterday, "I don't think artists here understand their role in the world. Whether they like it or not, they represent the United States."

Del Moral referred specifically to the world struggle between East and West. "At last year's festival, the Communist countries sent their biggest stars. They held press conferences and big parties, and succeeded with a good deal of propaganda." Del Moral emphasized that the Communists' big push, even in the area of film festivals, should not go unchallenged, "especially in view of developments in Central America."

Name of the fest is Resena Mundial de Festivales Cinematograficos; it brings together the winners from festivals all over the world. Though not confirmed, it's understood four American film will be screened.

20 Mexican Films For Israel Market

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

Mexico has readied a total of 20 pictures for the Israel market, with Hebrew subtitles, according to Salvador Amelio, head of the official Cimex distributorship.

Part of these pictures are being released during the Mexian Film Week promotion now current in Tel Aviv and Haifa. Balance are to be exhibited afterwards, spaced out during the next half year or so. Amelio said that Mexico is opening up "a new and important market for our films in Israel."

Reorganized UFA Symptom of New Needs in Reich

By KARLFRIEDRICH SCHERER

Munich, Nov. 22.

Reorganization of UFA, which is expected to result in its merger with Deutsche Film Hansa, is seen here as being symptomatic of the general changes taking place in the entire German film industry. Stiff competition from television is forcing an overall rationalization, with the weak companies necessarily falling by the wayside.

Deutsche Film Hansa's Theo Osterwind is expected to become general director of the new UFA-DFH company, the name of which hasn't yet been set, but it will probably be UFA again. Osterwind and Heinz Zimmermann, a former member of the UFA board, were earlier appointed by Deutsche Bank AG to study UFA's difficulties and make appropriate recommendations.

Official headquarters of the new company will be in Berlin, but general operations will be guided from Hamburg. It's expected that the company will turn out about 32 films a year, two-thirds of which will be entirely German productions, and the balance coproductions with foreign interests.

One aspect of the merger causing some alarm here is fact that the new company will probably employ no more than 400 people, while the two companies now have a total of about 700.

British Send 6 Film Players to Mex Fest

London, Nov. 15.

In support of three British films to be screened at the Mexico Film Fest later this month, there will be a strong talent delegation which will include Ronald Neame, Bryan Forbes, Tony Richardson, John Osborne, Phyllis Calvert and Susannah Yorke. Andrew Filson will rep the Federation of British Film Makers, of which he's secretary.

The three films entered are "Tunes of Glory" (UA), "The League of Gentlemen" (Rank) and "The Entertainer" (Lion International).

One Major Considering Bldg. Circuit in Japan To Combat Toho's Grip

Tokyo, Nov. 15.

To combat the virtual Toho stranglehold on foreign film circuits in Japan, at least one rep of a U.S. major is mulling the possibility of building a chain of houses for his company's releases in the key cities.

Such a move would probably involve partnership with an existing Japanese company, perhaps with Tokyu, which already has three roadshow houses (although none are top ones) in Tokyo and seven general release theatres in the same city.

In the event of a circuit at least partially controlled by an American company, another U.S. major would probably be invited to share dates, thereby easing somewhat the present lineup of U.S. importer-distributors at Toho's one-sided bargaining counter.

One hurdle in such a project, however, would be the disposition of exhib earnings.

Mexico Pix Biz Hears Yank Prods. Eye Other Latino Areas for Filming

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

Film circles in Mexico hear reports that Hollywood interests are seriously eyeing other Latin American countries as possible production centers. Just how this will affect Hollywood production in Mexico is factor preoccupying unions and official film entities. These are more or less in accord to build up coproduction pacts with American producers. Program obviously would be hurt if Hollywood seeks diversification in other south-of-the-border areas.

One of the top reps for an American distribution company here, fully aware of the U. S. and Latin American situation, said it was too early to form any opinion at this time. It is widely known in the industry here, this source pointed out, that the flight of Americas film capital from Cuba, Africa and other troubled world centers, has these interests reconsidering their position. Tendency apparently is to seek suitable spots outside of the U. S. for picture making, either for 100% American films or coproductions.

Peru appears to be one of the most likely spots, the source said, and it is believed that certain producers and financial interests re currently undertaking a first hand assessment of possibilities. Aside from the fact that there are plenty of good location sites, studio and lab facilities might be set up.

This all ties in with alleged Hollywood plans to strengthen its competitive effort in the Latin American market. Low budget productions, made in areas below the Rio Grande, would not only be planned for English-speaking markets but the story slants would be especially selected for the Spanish and European markets.

There is a much unconfirmed rumor that Hollywood plans to compete with Argentine and Mexican production, possibly to produce in the Spanish idiom. But no confirmation of this could be obtained from available American distributor sources here.

Meanwhile, in Mexico itself, unions are readying commissions to visit Hollywood early next year to talk up impetus for more American activity in Mexico and build up of Mexican-American coproductions.

Mex Film Biz Still In Doubt on Nationalized Pix Industry, New Rules

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

The contradictory statements and reports as to federal intervention in the motion picture industry continue unabated here. Recent reports that the lone privately-owned San Angel Inn Studios had been bought by the government for a reputed $2,800,000 were categorically denied by Nacional Financiera, semi-official credit institution, allegedly the purchaser, and Jorge Stahl, studio head.

Stahl vigorously denied the sale, saying that "unfortunately there no truth in the stories at present." He admitted that Nacional Financiera had dickered with him some time ago. But these negotiations fell through, Stahl said.

Deputy and film producer Roberto Gavaldon stated that the government is not interested in acquiring theatre chains. He added that there have never been any talks in this direction.

While Gavaldon, who is a member of the commission formulating the Mexican Film Law, is in a position to know authoritatively about any federal film expansion, the fact remains that film circles still buzz with the nationalization of the industry talk.

Gavaldon also stated that the new law would not use any "big stick" to force exhibitors to show Mexican product instead of foreign. He explained that law would "suggest" that exhibs give preference to Mexican pictures, with chains also asked to cooperate in this matter, whatever the annual national production is—80 or 100 films.

Mex Film Bank Chief Denies Foreign Loans

Mexico City, Nov. 15.

Reports that the Film Bank has received foreign loans are absolutely unfounded, according to Federico Heuer, head of the insitution. There have been many diversified "propositions" in past months. Heuer admitted, but all of these have been turned down. This does not necessarily mean that the bank will reject all offers, he said. If a loan is offered with favorable conditions it probably will be snapped up.

Touching on credit arrangements of the recently formed Arlington-Bueno coproduction unit, Heuer said that financing of picture production details have not yet reached a definite stage.

Show Biz Daily Topic in French Nat'l Assembly

Paris, Nov. 22.

Show biz is becoming an almost daily topic of discussion in the governmental National Assembly in France these days. This is because the film industry is partly governmentally administered via Film Aid and rulings, there are two opera houses and three subsidized theatres in existence (plus national aid to first legit entries, prestige pix and plays), and the growing censorship problems in all forms of show biz. Also radio and tv are nationalized.

One assemblyman rapped the $8,000 handout given for the mounting of Francoise Sagan's first play, "Castle in Sweden," when important drama festivals get only $4,000. Minister of Culture Andre Malraux concurred. He said notoriety of Miss Sagan needs no handout but added it was primarily to bolster the theatre and director, Andre Barsacq, who had given much to French legit in his choice of plays and staging. Malraux added that for once the loan would be paid since "Castle" a smash hit.

Malraux pointed out that $2,000 has been handed Jacques Hebertot for a reprise of Jules Romain's "Knock," mainly to help the house and ditto to the Ambigu for its remounting of the oldtime "Madame Sans-Gene," of Victorien Sardou, to aid this theatre which lost money last year.

The need for film aid to exhibitors and a cracking down on licentious pix that gave a false idea of France were also brought up. Malraux said aid and detaxation for the pic industry were under discussion. So show biz has taken its place on the parliamentary agenda along with other affairs of state.

REAL DUBBING SETUP COMES TO HONG KONG

Hong Kong, Nov. 15.

In Hong Kong new industries are known to spring up overnight and the business of film dubbing is the latest to have been started by an American-owned controlled company, Soundtrax International. Company originally started as an outfit to record English language narration on foreign documentaries and feature pix before branching out into lip-sync dubbing. It has turned out Japanese pictures with English dubbing.

Shaw Brothers, one of two giants in the Hong Kong Chinese film industry, contracted three big pictures for the treatment. The films concerned were originally in Japanese, Spanish and Hindustani.

With labor and equipment cheaper than anywhere in the world and with the Chinese reputation for meticulous detail, low taxes, a vast reservoir of acting talent in many languages, Soundtrax believes it can lip-sync films at $300 per 10-minute reel.

French Exhibs Call Off Strike

Paris, Nov. 22.

Because of the hope held out to them for possible and near-future detaxation by Culture Minister Andre Malraux in a speech before the National Assembly, the Federation of French Film Exhibitors called off their proposed one-day strike set for Sunday (20) which would have shuttered all of France's cinemas on the biggest filmgoing day of the week. This would be to protest against the heavy taxes carried by the industry and the still istent aid for exhibs.

However, exhibs stated that the strike could be held at a future date if their tax burden was not ameliorated. The Malraux statement intimated that this fiscal move was imminent and said that the Ministry of Finance had already drawn up a plan.

Cutting down on the 30% tax bite would give exhibitors a greater take and also safeguard distribs and producers who were menaced by exhib threats to up percentages to make up for lost aid.

If the government comes through, things again may be balanced here for the time being.

Joseph Kaufman Forms 3 New Film Outfits To Turn Out 10 Pix

London, Nov. 22.

Joseph Kaufman has set up three new companies, including his own distribution outfit, with a plan to make 10 pictures in the next three years. W. J. Fulton is a fellow director of the companies and Jack Damont has been named as executive assistant and producer. Terence Young will be joining him later.

His distributing company is known as City Film Distributors, and his two production companies are Raydor Productions and Dorkay Productions (UK) Ltd. It is anticipated, however, that notwithstanding his own distribution, his films will be given physical release through a major British company, following a pattern already firmly established in the United Kingdom.

Tomorrow (Wed.) Kaufman planes to N.Y. to set a distribution deal for "Black Tights," the four-part ballet-musical starring Zizi Jeanmaire, Roland Petit, Cyd Charisse and Moira Shearer which was an out-of-competition pic at the recent Venice Film Fest under the title "Un, Deux, Trois, Quatre."

The picture, which was directed by Terence Young in Technicolor and Technirama 70, will go out on hard-ticket. It was filmed in Paris and took more than six months to complete. British Lion, which participated in the production, has U.K. distribution rights.

"Tights" has been cut by some 15 minutes since it was first shown at Venice. At that time, only an answer print was availabl.e

RANK'S 1ST FILLING STATION

London, Nov. 15.

The Rank Organization's plans to enter the gas filling station business are being thwarted by local planning regulations. When the idea was first mooted, it was hoped to have around 25 installations in various parts of the country, but as things are working out the total will probably be lopped to about six.

Approval for the first filling station has been received for the Gaumont, Worcester.

Drastic Moves in Italo Censorship Hassle Irk Native Film Producers; DeLaurentiis Sez He May Quit Italy

Rome, Nov. 22.

Drastic, unprecedented developments characterize the Italian censorship hassle this week, and they have local filmmakers fuming. On the heels of the censorship cuts imposed on "Rocco and His Brothers" and "L'Avventura" as well as the nix of a permit to shoot Columbia's "The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" in the Italian capital, have come several other moves by both the Italian censorship organs and the Milan judiciary authorities. All of these, it is felt, are seriously prejudicial to the continued freedom of expression on the screen.

"Il Gobbo" (The Hunchback), directed by Carlo Lizzani and starring Gerard Blain and Anna Mari Ferrero for Dino DeLaurentiis Productions, also has just been banned in its entirety before even hitting Italo screens. Charges are that it "condones crime" in telling the semi-true tale of a bandit who terrorized Rome in the late Italian 40's even though the killer is shot by cops at end.

Ironically, DeLaurentiis had stayed out of the previous uproar when other pix were banned, maintaining a neutral position vis a vis the situation. Now, he's up in arms, and is quoted locally as saying he'll move his productions to other countries if the situation is not cleared.

Another film, Mauro Bolognini's "Una Giornata Balorda" (A Crazy Day), likewise has been banned in toto, this time while already in release. Pic, produced by Paul Graetz, already had trouble at the start of production, when vital Italo nationality was denied the Franco-Italian co-production (meaning it could not get government aid rebates here).

Nix on 'Crazy Day' Rescinded

This nix was later rescinded, presumably after reconsideration by the appropriate authorities. Now, censorial action, in three distinct steps, has hit it, despite a release permit granted the film by the Italian Entertainment office. First, objections were raised by the Milan judiciary (which similarly had hit "Rocco" and "Avventura") over a scene in which the pic's hero graphically steals a ring from a corpse. Second, the pic was banned (after Government Entertainment office reportedly refused to rescind the permit) by Milanese authorities in its entirety with a strongly worded statement which reportedly called it, among other things "the little story of four carnal meetings." Third, the film's director Mauro Bolognini has just been denounced and charged with "obscene propaganda" for his direction of this vehicle.

Theoretically, both with "Il Gobbo" and "Giornata," if current official appeals for reconsideration are turned down, cases wou'd be closed and the pix never again allowed to be screened in public.

The Milan authorities also have expressed their official distaste for another pic, "Le Passage du Rhin" (The Rhine Crossing), in which an escaped PW disrobes a girl so that she won't report him to the authorities until he escapes. No further action on this pic, however, has been taken to date, reportedly because it is the winner of the Venice Grand Prize, and the official pic screened before Italian Prime Minister Amintore Fanfani and other authorities during a Gala affair recently held here honoring the European Common Market (and the pic's "European" spirit). Film's director, Andre' Cayatra, has in any case cabled a protest from Paris, and forbidden any cuts to be made.

Other pix recently involved in censorship considerations here are: "Il Vigile" (The Cop), a Royal Film production which suffered some cuts, and the release delayed until after the recent Italian elections (it was felt potentially offensive to the Italian police forces) and which is now also involved in a suit by parents of a policeman on whose headline-making case it is said to be based; "I Dolci Inganni" (Sweet Deceptions), Titanus pic originally banned in entirety but since "freed"; and

Bunuel to Direct Two Pix for Cuban Group

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

Luis Bunuel will direct two films, based on his own original scripts, for the Cuban Institute of Film Arts and Industry. Pictures are "The Failures of Providence Street" and "The Young Hero." Director expects to start shooting first of these the middle of next year.

Film making program of the Cuban Institute, according to Bunuel, is to make 12 pix. Among these will be films made from scripts written by Jean Paul Sartre and Francoise Sagan.

Japan Film Cos. Making Bid For Hong Kong Biz

Hong Kong, Nov. 15.

In less than two weeks, Japanese film producers and business interests have forced recognition in their determined bid for the Colony market for their films and merchandise. The recent five-day Toho Film Fest confirmed what was generally known; namely that Japanese film companies are anxious to consolidate themselves in the local market.

To bally the fest, Toho flew in three top stars, Yohko Tsukasa, Akemi Kita and Teruko Fujii, for special stage appearances at the Capitol Theatre, one of five houses used for the festieval showing of Toho product.

Daiei, one of the other Japan film producers, now is expected to hold a similar festival here. Japanese films are being shown in the Colony on a guarantee plus percentage deal with second-run theatres. Some 70 Japanese pictures will be shown annually.

Coinciding with the holding of the Toho Fest, was the staging of a Japanese fashion show for which five top Nipponese mannequins were flown from Tokyo.

JAPAN AND MEXICO'S FILMS MOVING CLOSER

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

There's growing buildup of Mexican-Japanese film industry collaboration. A reciprocal film pact, with idea for this broached earlier this year by Miguel Aleman Jr. during a visit to Tokyo, is now taking form. Producer Takashi Turu is currently in Mexico to discuss phases of this with Mexican officials.

Japan's "Submarine U-18" was screened privately here prior to commercial exhibition. Turu is also interested in acquiring a series of Mexican films for release in Japan and other Far Eastern areas. He said that former films "La Cucaracha," "Green Shadow" and "Cape Horn" have done well in the three exhibition chains controlling approximately 7,000 houses (Nikkatshi, Shochiku and Toho).

Scandal Hits German Film Classifying Board

Frankfurt, Nov. 15.

Hans Blank, general manager of the Film Classification Office, has been relieved of his post by the Hessian Culture Minister following a furore about his official activities. It has been charged that he assisted his friend, documentary film producer Herbert Lander, to obtain "outstanding" and "especially outstanding" film classifications for his shorts.

All nine films which Lander made about his lengthy journeys to Egypt were given the important classifications, which meant that exhibitors showing the shorts, along with their full-length movies, would be entitled to certain tax relief.

BEHOLD!

THE PERFECT HOLIDAY TREAT!

20th Puts Grind In 'Can-Can'; Set Two Xmas Dates In New York

CinemaScope version of 20th-Fox's "Can-Can," which ended a seven-month, hardticket run in Todd-AO at New York's Rivoli in October, opens Dec. 21 at the Palace on Broadway and the Albee, Brooklyn, on a continuous run, pop price policy. These first two pop price engagements on the pic will be for extended runs, with the film going into the company's general release sked in February.

Decision to launch grind release of "Can-Can" at the two RKO Theatres showcases was apparently made quite suddenly. 20th sales execs earlier had said the film would not play any such dates until February at the soonest. Following extended play-off of the Todd-AO version. 20th announced early last month that the CinemaScope version was being booked on a new policy of "limited engagement, hardticket runs" in smaller cities around the country, none of which, however, was to conflict with any Todd-AO dates which might still be playing, or scheduled.

A 20th sales exec said in New York Monday (21) that approximately 500 of these special CinemaScope bookings will have been played by the time "Can-Can" goes into general release.

Company's sales policy on the pic has been subject of considerable controversy among exhibs, particularly among members of New Jersey Allied. Latter have complained bitterly at what they call 20th's "short-sighted" policy in not making the film available in CinemaScope to Jersey houses while the Todd-AO version is still playing in Upper Montclair and Asbury Park.

A spokesman for the Jersey group reported Monday (21) that the Allied unit had wired 20th prexy Spyros P. Skouras last Tuesday (15) to make pic available for Christmas week dates. No answer, however, was received, spokesman said, despite fact that key neighborhood houses "are frantic for Christmas product."

Republic Sues Rooney For 4G on Pilot Film

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Republic Pictures has filed a civil suit against Mickey Rooney, asserting that some $4,000 is owed Republic's subsidiary, Consolidated Film Industries, as unpaid balance on a pilot film made by Rooney about eight years ago.

Red Doff, a partner of Rooney, said Republic has been collecting from revenues of Rooney's pix. Out-of-court settlement is probable.

Censors Vs. Showmen

"Adu and her Colleagues," a Venice contender which was slightly abridged.

Legit Shows Also Hit

Censors are also after the legit theatre. A new play by Giovanni Testori, "L'Arialda," has just been nixed by the censor despite voluntary cuts which had been made by authors. It was to have been staged by director Luchino Visconti, with Paolo Stoppa, Rina Morelli and others. The Stoppa-Morelli company has announced that as a result, it will not perform at all this season (thus adding to the already critical Italo legit picture).

Visconti, Testori and Stoppa also called on Italo president Giovanni Gronchi to protest the ban, but not received. Visconti has announced that he will not direct the Scala opener, "Poliuto," in protest of this "persecution."

Some local sources claim that there seems to be a certain personal persecution factor in the fact that certain people are being hit hardest: Visconti, for one, who directed "Rocco" and was to direct "L'Arialda"; Giovanni Testori, who wrote both "Rocco" and "Arialda"; and Pier Paolo Pasolini, who wrote "Giornata Balorda" and acted in "Il Gobbo," all pix affected in recent moves and edicts.

Others claim that, on the other hand, there has been a certain amount of speculation by certain artists involved, in the hopes that censoring would help boxoffice of items involved. This has inevitably been the case with most banned and then-released items. Also pointed out that only Italian pix and items had been hit, while "far worse" foreign items had gone through unscathed.

ADMIRED THE DRAPERIES

Now Frank McCarthy Has 'Em On His Chest

Detroit, Nov. 22.

Anyone seen Frank J. A. McCarthy's magenta vest with big brass buttons? It's the latest addition to his flashy vest collection and it came from the new drapery installed at the Madison Theatre.

McCarthy, as director of sales for Universal's "Spartacus" insisted on the new draperies before booking the pix into the theatre. According to the story told to Free Press Town Crier Mark Beltaire, United Detroit Theatre supervisor Gil Green decided that since he liked the material and color so much McCarthy should be given a vest made of the material. Dick Graff, Universal's branch manager, made the presentation. The brass buttons, incidentally, came from Green's old Paramount Publix usher uniform, vintage 1929.

will be all embracing—that is, covering both release prints and dailies.

O. W. Murray, president of Pathe, said it would be premature to talk about his outfit's future. Consolidated has no immediate plans and other labs seem to be adopting a wait-and-see attitude.

Techni's custom has been to negotiate each 70m project separately, though a typical Todd-AO release print would cost about $350 per reel (1,000 feet). Thus a print for a 200-minute (18,000-foot) pic would amount to about $6,300; one hundred such, for roadshowing, would thus constitute an investment of $630,000. Equal quantity of average-length 35m CinemaScope color prints would be approximately $230,000.

Figures [illegible] depending on who is supplying them, but number of 70m-equipped theatres is probably less than one per cent of the total number at present. At the same time, they're converting at the rate of one or two per month nation-wide and 70m product is becoming increasingly more important in terms of boxoffice.

Expensive to Fight Govt.—Trust Suit Costs Screen Gems $233,000

Columbia annual report, issued this week, discloses that the Screen Gems subsidiary was nicked for $233,000 in litigation costs in the course of defending itself against antitrust charges brought by the Government. Latter had sought to restrain SG from releasing Universal theatrical features to television.

Suit was dismissed and SG is free to market the features from U.

Also headed for tv via SG is a group of Col's own features, with money from this source to be used for new theatrical production. Point made by Col is that no backlog theatrical item will go to tv unless the theatrical reissue market has been exhausted.

Advice to Catholics: Praise When Warranted

Albany, Nov. 22.

Catholics should "congratulate theatres" when they show films of high moral tone and in all other ways support worthwhile screen fare, because filmmaking is a commercial operation and "artistic successes which are boxoffice failures will bankrupt a producer."

This was the opinion expressed by Rev. John E. Kelly at the third annual Institute of Public Relations held here. Kelly is director of the information bureau of the National Catholic Welfare Conference in Washington.

Kelly also called for the expansion of Catholic Film Study Clubs to include more adults. Membership of the clubs today is comprised chiefly of high school and college students.

notice could still be given in the future.

Attorney Kleinrock, on the other hand, contends the actress had completed her 1960 commitment ("Psycho") prior to the strikes, that no delay had occurred and that contract year could not therefore be extended.

Free of her contract, Miss Miles would be able to negotiate on the open market for picture properties she had always retained tv rights, without having to negotiate around the 30-day pre-emption notice in her pact with Hitchcock Productions.

Her initial pic for Hitchcock was "The Wrong Man." Company loaned her for "Beau James" as well as "Larceny," and, in her outside films, has starred in "The FBI Story," "Five Branded Women" and currently in "Back Street."

Budget was first brought down to $60,000 and then down to $40,000.

Another large saving was effected through careful preproduction rehearsal of the actors and fact that camera setups were always set the night before each day's shooting. Not much overtime was paid, director reported, because crew was young and eager and went out of its way to cooperate.

'Snow White' Title Vs. Disney First

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

While Chanford Productions veepee Charles Wick anticipated no title conflict problem caused by his registration of 10 "Snow White" titles for a projected sequel to his "Snow White and the Three Stooges," the problem has arisen. Walt Disney strenuously objects to the registrations and has filed protest with MPAA's Title Registration Bureau.

Disney protested Chanford's original registration of the "Snow White and the Three Stooges" tag, and, after 20th-Fox signed releasing deal on pic, the protest went to arbitration. Chanford won the title via the argument that the "Three Stooges" portion of title prevented any confusion with the Disney film, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." It was stated at the time that the "Three Stooges" portion of tag must be advertised in type size equal to the "Snow White" portion.

A Disney exec declared that the 10 new titles—such as "The Adventures of Snow White and Prince Charming," "The Further Adventures of Snow White," "The Return of Snow White," etc.—violate the principle by which Chanford won its original "Snow White" tag. "This is exactly what we were afraid of," the Disney rep said.

Spokesman declared Chanford heads are "unmindful of the basic premise by which we are able to protect titles" and declared the new 'Snow White' registrations bear on a title made famous and valuable by Walt Disney."

Pre-Thanksgiving Dulls Biz; 'Butterfield' Again No. 1, 'Lace' 2d, 'Ben-Hur' 3d, 'Alaska' 4th

This is pre-Thanksgiving week for many first-run theatres over the country, and trade generally is on the downbeat. However, the stamina displayed by some recently-launched newcomers hints that brighter times are ahead for exhibitors. Fairly mild weather is rated no great help, with exhibs admitting really cold temperatures would help biz.

"Butterfield 8" (M-G) again is finishing first, the same as last week. "Midnight Lace" (U), which was second a week ago, is winding up second again this session.

"Ben-Hur" (M-G), third last round, is holding in same third groove this week, with several key city first-runs closings in the offing.

"North To Alaska" (20th), out for first time to any extent this week is grabbing fourth place, with some unusually big showings in Minneapolis, Pittsburgh nd Denver. It is running ahead of the biz done by other big 20th-Fox grossers in both Pitt and Minneapolis.

"Spartacus" (U) is capturing fifth place although still playing in only six key cities covered by VARIETY. "Alamo" (UA) is taking sixth spot, me as a week ago.

"Inherit the Wind" (UA) is winding up in seventh sition while "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col) will be eighth.

"Sunrise at Campobello" (WB is finishing in ninth place. "Breath of Scandal" (Par) rounds out the Top 10 list although quite uneven.

"Carry On Nurse" (Gov), "I'm All Right, Jack" (Col), "Song Without End" (Col) and "Hiroshima Mon Amour" (Zenith) are the runner-up films in that order.

"Never On Sunday" (Lopert), one of the newcomers, is big in Balto and still great in N. Y. on longrun. "Esther and King" (20th), fast in Chi and fancy in N. Y., shapes fair in Philly. "Plunderers" (AA) looks mild dates this week.

"Fast and Sexy" (Col) looms dull in Balto. "Please Turn Over," from same company, is wow in Toronto, nice in Boston and lusty in L. A.

"GI Blues" (Par), hotsy in L. A., shapes okay in N. Y. in third week at Victoria. "Entertainer" (Cont), okay in Balto, looi big in N. Y.

"10 Who Dared" (BV) shapes solid in Chi. "School For Scoundrels" (Cont), okay in Washington, shapes fine in Minneapolis.

Made 12 Films in '60, Finland's T. J. Sarkka Turned 70 Nov. 20

Helsinki, Nov. 15.

T. J. Sarkka, president of the Motion Picture Producers Assn. in Finland, will observe his 70th birthday Nov. 20 and there's no stopping this remarkably active filmmaker. His current year's schedule consisted of 12 new productions and h readying plans for 1961.

All in all Sarkka has made over 200 features, 40 of which he also scripted and directed. This record has been achieved in a country of only 4,000,000 population and with a language ununderstandable beyond its own borders.

Majority of the veteran's pictures has been for the local market but there also have been some International successes, including "The Unknown Sodier," "Love Along a River," "The Milkmaid" and "The Doll Merchant." At home Sarkka has been honored frequently for his ci ematic work and in 1957 he was arded an honorary diploma by the Berlin Film Festival.

Shepard Traube's Film; Set to Shoot Overseas

Shepard Traube is resuming as filmmaker after several legit theatre ent prises with the acquisition of "The Widow Makers," Michael Blandfort novel, which he intends to lens in Hollywood, London, Paris, Rome and Munich. Filming is scheduled for next summer. Story concerns former Nazis who have assumed new identities in countries of their adoption.

Traube in recent years has been active on Broadway where he presented "Angel Street," "A Thousand Summers," "Monique" and other plays. Previous to this he was a film producer with RKO, Columbia and 20th-Fox.

Harry Weiss to Des Moines

Minneapolis, Nov. 22.

Now that Ted Mann has acquired the three Twin Cities RKO theatres, RKO Theatres division manager Harry H. Weiss will move his headquarters to Des Moines. Weiss presides over theatres at Des Moines, Muscatine and Cedar Rapids, Ia., Denver and New Orleans.

Mann is retaining Robert T. Whelan, George R. Stephens and Russell Beach who have been RKO Theatres house managers of the Minneapolis and St. Paul RKO Orpheum and local RKO Pan, spectively.

Peter Ustinov and Ronald Lubin are teamed in production of "Billy Budd" for Allied Artists release.

JUSTICE UNPERTURBED, BUT VINNICOFF IS

The antitrust division of the Dept. of Justice is not opposing the petition of the National Theatres & Television to build a new drive-in theatre in the Cypress-Los Alamitos area of Orange County, Calif.

The petition, presented to Judge Edmund L. Palmieri in N. Y. Federal Court, Friday (18), says the erection of the drive-in will not unduly restr competition in the area.

Mervin C. Pollack, representing the Vinnicoff Theatre Circuit of Los Angeles, appeared amicus curiae (friend of the court) opposing the NT&T application on the ground that the new ozoner would restrain competition.

18 Reserved Seat Dates For 'Spartacus' Over Xmas

Universal will have a total of 18 hardticket engagements of "Spartacus" running during the Christmas holidays. Five additional dates, all in 70m and 10 performances a week, were set this week for Miami, Montreal, Seattle, St. Petersburg, and San Francisco. All opening dates are Dec. 22 with the exception of Miami which is on Dec. 15.

In addition to the six current engagements, seven other bookings, all opening on Dec. 22, were previously set. These include Pittsburgh, Houston, Atlanta, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Toronto, and St. Louis. The picture is currently playing in New York, Los Angeles, Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, and Detroit.

Art Prize From Wald

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Jerry Wald has established a $2,000 graphic arts competition award at UCLA "to encourage fresher and more original approaches to motion picture advertising and background art."

Contest involves two-part award, with $1,000 to be given in January and other $1,000 in the spring. Wald additionally has presented $500 as a fund from which qualified entrants will buy art materials.

Known as the Wald Art Awards, the competition will be judged entirely by a faculty committee from the UCLA art department, with initial judging slated for Jan. 12. Scripts will be furnished, and entrants will be invited to view roughfootage on specific pic they'll use as basis for entry. Any purchase of student work by Wald or other producers will be negotiated for separately.

Entries must be based on films currently in production by Wald. Contestants' art work will be exhibited at 20th-Fox after judging.

theatres," the A m New Cinema-ites lament.

In order to bypass the established distribution system, the down-with-the-product boys hope to establish their own cooperative distribution Emile de Antonio, a former college prof wh organized a film distribution firm to handle the recent beatnik film, "Pull My Daisy," has been entrusted with the task of working out a method of distribution for the specialized films. Three theatres are said to have pledged to play their pix—The New Yorker and the Bleecker St. Cinema in New York and the Art Overbrook Theatre in Philadelphia.

The Con

Perhaps the most ambitious undertaking of the American "new wavers" is the currently-filming "The Connection," which is being made by Lewis Allen and Shirley Clarke. The picture has been completely financed privately, with the major portion of the $177,400 coming from Broadway theatre investors. Allen, one of the prime movers of the New American Cinem , is also active in legit as general manager for the Producers' Theatre. In addition to "The Connection," his company, Allen-Hogden Inc., has a number of other productions planned. Among them are "The Gold Ram," screenplay by Calder Willingham adapted from Bianca Van Orden's novel, "309 East;" "Lie Down int Darkness" by William Styron; an original screenplay with a N. Y. setting by Terry Southern; "The Loved One," adapted from the novel by Evelyn Waugh, to be done in association with Olmec Productions in Mexico. In addition Allen will be associated with Roger Stevens and Robert Whitehead who plan two film productions employing legit-style financing.

The new movement appears to be gaining momentum judging from the number of pictures currently in production or planned in the near future. Some 10 films are in various stages of production. Robert Frank wh made "Pull My Daisy" with Alfred Leslie has completed "The Sin of Jesus." Leslie, meanwhile, is preparing an untitled feature. Jonas Mekas, film critic and editor of Film Culture, is following the pattern of the French "new wavers" by turning filmmaker. His "Guns of the Trees" is now being edited. Also in the editing stage Gregory Markopoulos' "Serenity." Harold Humes is now shooting his first feature, —"Don Peyote." Preparing films are Peter Bogdanovich, Edouard De Laurot, Adolfas Mekas, Guy Thomajan and Lionel Rogosin.

Th Yank "new wave" is essentially a New York City movement. In addition to those already mentioned, the group includes Bert Stern ("Jazz on a Summer Day"), Terry and Denis Sanders ("Crime and Punishment, U.S.A."), Ben Carruthers and Argus Juilliard, and Wall Strecter Walter Gutman, who arranged th financing for "Pull My Daisy" and "Sin of Jesus."

The New America Cinema-ites point out that they understand the purposes and interests of unions, but they find it "unjust" that the demands made on a $25,000 production (most of which is deferred) are the same as those made for a $1,000,000 picture. They plan to meet with the film unions to gain concessions similar to those that exist for the off-Broadway legit theatre.

Fading Pride of the Press Agent

By GENE ARNEEL

The fun, and to some extent, the pride of pressagent's job has disappeared, in the view of Irving Rubine, v.p. of Carl Foreman's Highroad Productions. He's a vet in the bally field and looks back longingly on the salad days.

The p.a. of a bygone era was a "Park Row Pygmalion" who created stories and had the press in collaboration with him. Reporters and editors were cognizant of the "stunt" nature of the flack's work, but nonetheless went along with him because he indeed was causing a stir (and what if it were Barnum & Bailey commotion—it still made for good reading).

There was the time that A. Toxen Worm (stet the nomenclature) was fronting for Mrs. Pat Campbell, whose resting hours between legit shows were disturbed by the horses' hoofbeats on the outside pavement. Worm had the streets surrounding the theatre covered with tanbark to reduce the decibal count. The hip press, fully aware of what was going on, made with gleeful coverage. But gleeful or not, Mrs. Campbell got a very large spotlight.

It literally was a salad day when Dolores Del Rio was given advance billing as an actress whose specialty was gardenia salad. She consumed same for benefit of the skeptics.

Remember?

Harry Reichenbach, long ago free spacer, hired a man to take quarters at the McAlpin Hotel, N. Y., and order 15 pounds of raw beef daily from room service. Investigation, which the papers were, apprised of, proved that the man was registered as T. R. Zan, he had smuggled a lion in a truck into his room and, hardly by coincidence, Elmo Roper was currently playing in the first "Tarzan" picture.

Today, said Rubine, "the world is fraught with drama that makes its point in the most pungent fashion." It's with the real-life headlines that the pressagent must compete and "colossal" and "stupendous" have become dead words.

The fun is out of the job, too, because of the rise of "public relations," this being a term that came into prominence in World War II and the assignment entailed is that of maintaining decorum for the client.

Rubine's major chore of late, he states, was to have kept Foreman's "Guns of Navorone" in print over a period of two years. This covers pre-production to the present completion - and - awaiting - release period and he's convinced that now the task involves, publicity-wise, getting the most out of what is being done with a production, rather than trying to get across phoney angles.

His credo: "Don't do things for publicity, but publicity should get the most out of the things that are done for the production.

It was in January, 1959, that Tom Wiseman of London's Evening Standard, in giving out his accolades for the previous year's accomplishments, gave "Navorone" the kidding-on-the-square nod as "most publicized picture."

This would have been okay, except that the film wouldn't get to market short of two years hence. The campaign had to be sustained over that amount of time.

Among the items played up, and helping: a legitimate search for a femme lead in Stockholm, with the English press invited to observe tests; search for location, with a major angle here being that final selection would mean the production company, "a floating million dollars in terms of prestige for and dollars spent in the local area" was most desirable to have around; Cyprus, finally selected, came to use the mere presence of the "Navorone" unit as an important medium of propaganda; we, said Rubine, didn't walk in on a business basis only but established ourselves as an independent sovereignty, talked to the big people and got a big press."

The Gregory Pecks visited the location a week in advance of production along with their two children. Further it was a "family location," what with the wives and children of eight company men also present. Added up to good art work for the European press.

Olympic Airlines and the Greek government cooperated with Highroad in the press junketing oldie, a dark room and a wire room were set up for the fourth estate tourists. Translators savvy to various tongues were employed by Highroad. Royalty visited the set at the right publicity time.

And, so on. Not a matter of creating the publicity, states Rubine, but a matter of getting the most out of what happens with, and is done for, the production.

'Ben-Hur' in Philly Mark; Same Print After Year By Single-Reel Method

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.

Metro's "Ben-Hur" wound up its 52d week at the Boyd last night with an approximate $1,175,000 in the till for the first year's stand. The gross is far and away the largest ever tabulated in Philadelphia. The runner-up stands as Mike Todd's "Around the World in 80 Days," which spun out a fancy $780,000 business in its first-run visit.

Ray Mayer, manager of the Boyd, said house is selling tickets right through the holidays. Although the pic has unreeled 595 times, Mayer said they never had to change a print. "We have been operating on single reels," the manager said, "instead of the customary double reels — which mean twice as much handling for th boys in the projection room.

"It's a great tribute to the care and skill of our five projectionists that they've run the same print so many times without a break or interruption."

Boston Anni Events

Boston, Nov. 22.

Ben Sack host to an anniversary party for "Ben-Hur" tomorrow (Wed.) at the Saxon Theatre with film critics and other influentials being entertained on the mezzanine.

At same time 1,000 underprivileged and crippled children will see "Ben-Hur" at 2 p.m., plus free ice cream, cake, etc.

UNITED ARTISTS SETS EDELE AS DIXIE EXEC

D. J. Edele has been appointed Southern division manager for United Artists with supervision over Metropolitan New York. He succeeds Sid Cooper who resigned to become domestic sales manager of Cinerama Inc. Edele assumes his new post on Dec. 12.

The Southern division consists of the Charlotte, Jacksonville, Atlanta, New Orleans, and Dallas exchanges.

Edele has been UA's Metropolitan district manager since Jan., 1959. Prior to that time he served as branch manager of the company's St. Louis and Memphis offices.

Rackmil and Aboaf On European Sales Jaunt

Milton R. Rackmil, president of Universal, and Americo Aboaf, v.p. and foreign general manager, leave for Europe over the weekend for a series of sales conferences and meetings with European exhibitors.

During their trip the U execs will attend the London premiere of "Spartacus" on Dec. 7. The sales sessions start in Rome on Nov. 28 and shift to Frankfurt on Dec. 2 and Paris on Dec. 9. Rackmil and Aboaf will outline the plans for U's upcoming releases, which include 15 ready for distribution or currently shooting and 26 pix in preparation. Emphasis will be placed on "Spartacus," which has a number of December roadshow openings in Europe following the British premiere.

Tornado Levels Ozoner

Friona, Tex., Nov. 22.

Elk Drive-In was levelled by a late afternoon tornado, suffering damage estimated by owner W. E. McCloughlan at $65,000 and $70,000. McGloughlan said he had insurance up to $23,000 on the ozoner structure.

After striking the Elk Drive-In, the tornado swept across the road, lifting and passing over a second ozoner owned by McGloughlan.

Medium Budget Features

able grosses and profits. The majority, however, fail to cause any excitement and move through the distribution mill in a rather dull manner. In a number of cases, it's obvious that the distribution companies are just going through the motion—sending out these pictures with routine campaigns and lackluster enthusiasm. Some of the entries, judging from the critical reception, were better than average pictures and might have fared much better if the distributors showed more confidence in them. Paramount's British-made "Chance Meeting" is perhaps an example of a picture that skipped a Broadway date and received a nice reception from the critics.

Re 'Saturation'

As the situation now stands, more and more pix—the majority in the medium range—seem to be bypassing Main Stem runs in New York. The reasons are many. The cost of a Broadway opening, running from $25,000 to $100,000, is often considered foolhardy on the basis of the appraisal of the film's potential. In many instances, the distribs feel that saturation bookings are more appropriate for some pictures. These pix, to be sure, are backed with solid merchandising campaigns and seem to do better through the mass bookings than via the normal release pattern. For example, Metro is releasing Joe Levine's "Where the Hot Wind Blows" on a mass basis. Levine has proved on a number of occasions the value of this technique, especially when it is supported with a solid promotional campaign. United Artists is employing a similar pattern with "The Magnificent Seven." According to a U.A. spokesman, the picture, a western, lends itself to the mass releasing system. In addition, he noted that oaters usually make out poorly in Broadway.

Another circumstance mitigating frequently against the Broadway run is the unavailability of theatres. The increase in the number of hardticket entries plus the longer runs of grind pictures makes it difficult to find a convenient date for many of the in-between offerings. According to one company spokesman, it's not the picture per se but the "circumstances" which determine the release pattern.

In recent weeks, there have been large number of pictures which have skirted Broadway and have or will open in Brooklyn. After a run of a week or two at a key downtown Brooklyn house, these pix move out quickly to the neighborhood chains. Outside of New York, these pix, depending on the availability of theatres, may receive downtown dates at key houses.

A listing of recent pictures that have or will pass Broadway includes Paramount's "Chance Meeting," United Artists' "The Magnificent Seven," "Studs Lonigan," "The Night Fighters," and "The Boy and the Pirate"; Metro's "The Angel Wore Red," "Where the Hot Wind Blows," "Village of the Damned," and "Key Witness." Frequently these offerings are issued as a double feature package or take the second half of the bill with a picture that had a Broadway run.

arrested, explained Harry Steinman of the management firm of Berger, Ross & Steinman, even though they are held by police. Miss Aadland, therefore, says Steinman, is correct in stipulating that she was never arrested. However, mother wouldn't be eligible for work in N.Y. niteries.

There is another aspect of the Aadland situation which would permit her to work N.Y. niteries sans permit. Under the present law, an entertainer can work a maximum of three consecutive nights without a police card. She had a couple of weekend stands in New York. She worked the Club Illusion, Brooklyn, and the Club Sapphire, Jackson Heights. She is also set for the Clover Club, Miami, Dec. 22, follows with the Racquet Club, Dayton, Jan. 7, and the Tropicana, Southgate, Ky., Jan. 17.

may have a more complete knowledge of the enthusiastic reception given to our play, 'Advise and Consent,' we, the producers, will reproduce here in their entirety, the opinion of the theatre critics of other newspapers." That tipped off to readers who might have missed it, that Taubman's notice was a rap.

In the first of the series of reviews last Monday (21), that introduction was followed by the statement, "Today we reproduce the opinion of Walter Kerr, for nine years the theatre critic of the N.Y. Herald Tribune." Kerr's review of the play followed.

A reprint yesterday (Tues.) of John Chapman's review for the News was preceded by a statement that he has been critic for the paper for 17 years. Scheduled for today (Wed.) is John McClain's review for the Journal-American, with reference to his nine years as critic for the sheet.

Frank Aston will get credit for four years as fill-in critic for the World-Telegram & Sun in the ad reprint of his review scheduled for tomorrow (Thurs.) and Robert Coleman's 30-year tenure with the Mirror will be referred to in the reprint of his approving notice slated for publication Friday (25).

Watts, who's not getting the ad rebuttal treatment despite his rap of "Advise," could hardly be the subject of inferential barbs on the grounds of newness as a legit critic. Prior to joining the Post on his return from Government service overseas in World War II, he was the aisle-sitter for several years for the Herald Tribune, and before that was film reviewer for the same sheet.

The series of five review-reprint ads is costing "Advise" about $8,000. In effect, therefore, the Times is getting that much increased ad revenue from Taubman's pan.

preax, queried as to a possible reconciliation between 20th and the Motion Picture Assn. of America, replied tersely that there was "no change" in that situation. Skouras, who had come back to New York from Europe the preceding Saturday (12), returned to London Sunday (20).

In taking over the European production post, Rogell succeeds producer Walter Wanger, who was given the post temporarily following Bob Goldstein's appointment as production chief in Hollywood, succeeding the late Buddy Adler. Wanger now obviously has his hands full with the current "Cleopatra" production in London.

to the eight- and 10-year-old-minds.

Exec reported that producer Jerry Wald had once expressed an interest in doing a film version of "Iceman," but he couldn't get the O'Neill dialog (fullsome with such words as "bastard" and "bitch") past the Code office, and the O'Neill interests wouldn't let the property be "popularized" through prudish pruning.

Kiddie Stuff

It was the exec's idea that the film industry might have the right to consider a faithful adaptation of "Iceman" "adult" picture, but that "Suzie" is essentially child's play, significant, not as "adult" entertainment but rather as another example of how the Code can be made to look silly, if not hypocritical.

This film pundit emphasized that he himself was not a prude, but suggested, in passing, that a film which shows the lives of harlots in such a golden and glamorous way with handsome William Holden as payoff might be more damaging to impressionable minds than one in which such ladies are shown (more realistically) to be venal, often simple-minded neurotics as most of them are.

Exec, however, was not primarily concerned with the possible sociological effects of "Suzie." Instead, he found significance in fact that the Music Hall had booked the picture ("maybe they couldn't get anything else") as its Thanksgiving attraction, and in the smash business which it's doing, with the great majority of its patrons being those inhabitants of Keokuk, Boone, etc. whom exhibitors report are sick-and-tired of sexy themes.

Exec drew two conclusions re "Suzie" and "Iceman": (1) the majority of patrons around the country, as well as in New York, are a lot more sophisticated than exhibs give them credit for, and (2) the Production Code, to forestall criticism must either enforce its present rules more strictly, or be rewritten in less specific terms so that pictures may be judged in terms of good taste and intent.

"If we (the film companies) aren't careful," he said, "television's going to inherit the discriminating adult audience, along with the family audiences we handed over to tv 10 years ago."

in St. John. Previous conferences have usually been held in Ontario. Delegates decided to hold the next conference in 1961 in Regina, Sask., and possibly to continue on an annual basis thereafter.

Two other resolutions passed by the conference called upon parents to take seriously recommendations of censor boards regarding film classifications, and asked Provincial governments to consider the advisability of identifying film regulating bodies as "boards of film review." Latter resolution was prompted by desire of some of the delegates to get out from under the often unpopular term of "censor."

Par Promotes Pickman from Ad-Pub Post to Top Domestic Sales V.P.

Jerome Pickman, who has been Paramount veep and director of advertising, publicity and exploitation since 1951, has been named domestic general sales manager effective immediately. Upping had been predicted. In new post, Pickman will be in charge of film distribution in U.S. and Canada under George Weltner, veep in charge of worldwide sales. Under Weltner, James E. Perkins is in charge of overseas distribution.

According to president Barney Balaban, realignment has two fold purpose. "More intensive concentration and coordination between marketing and merchandising will result from Pickman's appointment," he said, adding that Weltner, while supervising domestic and foreign sales policies and operations, will be able "to effect closer liaison with Paramount's production activities in Hollywood and other parts of the world." Weltner will also be devoting more time to management of company's overall motion picture activities.

ALLENDORF, JOHNSON NEW KODAK EXECS

Rochester, Nov. 22.

Eastman-Kodak Co. board of directors elected two assistant vice-presidents here last week. They are Joseph R. Allendorf, director of sales promotion, and A. Dexter Johnson, ad manager.

Allendorf has been a sales executive with Kodak since 1926 and in charge of sales promotion at Eastman since 1959. Johnson, who has been with Kodak since 1934, was named ad manager in 1957.

Writer's Claim Upheld Heilman's Gotta Share

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

Superior Court Judge Bayard Rhone has handed down a decision favoring writer Les Crutchfield in his suit against producer Claude Heilman. As a result, Crutchfield receives $25,000 against 10% of Heilman's profits on the Universal 1959 release, "This Earth Is Mine."

Crutchfield, repped by attorney Mel Nimmer of the firm of Nimmer & Selvin, charged that Heilman in 1956 signed him to prepare a screen treatment on "The Cup and the Sword," Alice Tisdale Hobart novel which producer had optioned. According to Nimmer, it was on the basis of the treatment and the novel that a releasing deal was to be sought. Terms of the deal with Crutchfield involved not less than the $25,000 against the 10% participation, Nimmer said.

Heilman, with co-producer Casey Robinson, subsequently made deal with U and filmed book under the "This Earth Is Mine" title as a Rock Hudson-Jean Simmons starrer. Heilman thereafter contended his deal with Crutchfield involved payment only if the Crutchfield treatment were used; Crutchfield claimed deal was valid even though treatment was not used. Suit was filed last summer.

Film Reviews

Faust

Commercial prospects are somewhat in doubt. However, helped by the name of Gustaf Gruendgens, the top German stage personality, it may emerge as a surprise hit in this country. Film even may result in the making of more such filmizations of classical German stage works. Internationally, it recommends itself for many arty spots.

Gustaf Gruendgens, who also acted as artistical supervisor, aimed at finding exactly the middle between filmed theatre and conventional films. It was shot within 21 days using 480 camera shots at a cost of about $240,000.

It runs two hours and seven minutes as contracted with the original stage presentation which runs three hours and 10 minutes, the latter including the various intermissions. Minor dialog has been cut for the sake of the contents. The filmic possibilities (closeups, mass scenes, etc.) have been exploited to good advantage.

Of course, such an enterprise finds its opponents, especially on the part of those who opine that film and theatre will always be two things that cannot be put together. But even they would admit that this "Faust" filmization is a highly commendable document. It gives are followers everywhere an opportunity to see on the screen, one of the finest German stage ensembles in one of the most powerful presentations the domestic theatre ever has performed.

In the main, this is Gruendgens' film. Gruendgens, head of the Hamburg Schauspielhaus and theatre genius, is seen here as Mephistofel, his most famous stage role which he has portrayed hundreds of times. Cast includes Will Quadflieg, as Faust; Swiss-born Ella Buechi, as Gretchen; Elisabeth Flickenschildt, as Marthe, all talented stage players. Camerwork, color, costumes and settings contribute to make this an impressive offering. Hass.

Zazie Dans le Metro
(Zazie In the Subway)
(FRENCH-COLOR)

Paris, Nov.

Pathe release of Nouvelles Editions Fdes production. With Catherine Demongeot, Philippe Noiret, Jacques Dufilho, Hubert Deschamps, Annie Fratellini, Carla Marlier. Directed by Louis Malle. Screenplay, Jean Paul Rapp eneau. Malle from novel by Raymond Queneau; camera (Eastmancolor), Henri Raichi; editor, Kenout Peltier. At Mercury, Paris. Running time, [illegible] MINS.

After his stylized, sensual "The Lovers," which was quite a hit, youthful director Louis Malle essays his first comedy which a sort of intellectual slapstick entry. It has some risible bits but is, in all, somewhat diffuse. Film looms mainly as an arty theatre entry abroad.

Zazie (Catherine Demongeot) is a 12-year-old girl whose mother leaves her with an uncle when she comes into Paris from the country for a day with her latest lover. Zazie has never seen the subway and wants to ride in it but it's on strike. Next morning she is off on a round of adventures in a weird, colorful Paris. Zazie is shrewd, clever, innocent deadly and honest as a strange gallery of characters whirl past her.

There is a man who changes guise frequently and is either a policeman or a satyr. Her uncle is a pompous, self-indulgent type who dances in a nitery in travesty. Then there are assorted characters keep up this pic that has obviously been influenced in style by the better Yank animated pix and Mack Sennett comedies.

But instead of springing full blown from the inventiveness of the makers this has been reworked for the screen. Result is an uneven texture that runs from inspired scenes to repetitive bits and overstraining in the symbolism of the story.

It does take potshots at certain French penchants for not washing, making sex just a meaningless group of gestures and at hardheaded pettiness. It also warns of the dangers of fascism under the continuing French general mistrust of each other and foreigners. It also flays the so-called "Gay Paree" of tourism and ends with a free-for-all sauerkraut battle to replace pies.

Malle has shown a wealth of invention and has used color artfully. Traffic jams, a visit to the Eiffel Tower, and chase sequences are expertly manned.

Catherine Demongeot is a sassy, pert character. This vehicle moves at whirlwind pace and is a comedic offbeater that could be of art interest if well handled. Its satire, though national in format, is universal in meaning. Mosk.

Jazz Boat
(C'SCOPE)

Comedy-crime caper with jazz background. Sudden intrusions of song-and-dance passages result in chaos. Occasionally amusing. Acceptable lower-berther with drive-in biz value.

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Columbia Pictures release of Irving Allen-Albert R. Broccoli production. An odd assortment of romance, jazz, musical comedy and youthful crime is poured into "Jazz Boat," latest effort of England's Warwick Film firm to arrive on these shores. What comes out is largely chaos, though some of it is infectiously amusing. Mostly it's vague, disjointed and purposeless. Director Ken Hughes may have been making some sort of an attempt at parody of American crime pix. Although the Irving Allen-Albert R. Broccoli producti serves as an interesting glimpse into the lesser attitudes of English youth, the Columbia release lacks the cohesion, care or substance to fit properly into the U. S. art house scheme. It will double up acceptably in regular runs, and may cause a mild stir in the drive-in circuit, where it will be appreciated by the more rebellious youth.

The screenplay, by Ken Hughes and John Antrobus from an original story by Rex Rienits that isn't so very original, deals with a decent lad who is roped into a robbery caper by an amateurish band of young hoodlums when he brags he is a big-time crook. Sudden jarring, called-for bursts into song and tipsy terpsichore make it a kind of "Bloaks and Babes" version of "Guys and Dolls," utterly destroying the mood and pace. Some of the comedy is quite funny, but there isn't enough of it to save the day. The story itself is routine, the execution careless.

Anthony Newley is likeable as the nice lad. Anne Aubrey, as an unwilling moll, is a miracle of cleavage, and amply illustrates the fact. Lionel Jeffries adds a strong impression of a semi-sadistic, mooching cop to the list of first-rate characterizations. There is a slick portrayal of a young heav, by James Booth, some amusing efforts as his henchmen by Al Mulock and David Lodge, and good support by Bernie Winters and Joyce Blair.

Camera work by Ted Moore, editing by Geoffrey Foot and art work by Ray Simm are adequate. Most of the music is of the jive- and jazz-variety by Ted Heath and his swin ing band. Specialty numbers ing from r r to ballads, re scored by Joe Henderson, with additional lyrics by Newley and Hughes. They're not bad but don't fit snugly into the context here. There's also a Gallic selection by Huberg Giraud and Michael Julien, sung with Montand-like charm by a promising vocalist named Jean Philippe. Tibe.

Suspect
(BRITISH)

Modest, well-made dualer deliberately shot on a shoestring. Writing, acting and direction all add up to a smart, smooth peace of film-making which should be safe booking in any house.

London, Nov.

British Lion release of a Boulting (John Boulting) Bros. production. Stars Peter Cushing, Ian Bannen, Virginia Maskell, Tony Britton; features Raymond Huntley, Donald Pleasence, Thorley Walters, Kenneth Griffith, Spike Milligan. Directed by Roy Boulting. Screenplay by Nigel Balchin, from his novel, "A Sort of Traitors," with additional scenes and dialog by Jeffrey Dell. Roy Boulting; editor, John Jympson; camera, Max Greene; music by Chopin and Schriabin, arranged and played by John Wilkes. At Queen's, Bayswater Road, London. Running time, 81 MINS.

Bob Marriott	Tony Britton
Lucy Byrne	Virginia Maskell
Professor Sewell	Peter Cushing
Alan Andrews	Ian Bannen
Sir George Catlin	Raymond Huntley

The old theory that a second feature can get away with being shoddily written, directed and produced is not true. The challenging Boulting Brothers set out to prove it, with thi deliberately designed dualer, "Suspect." Shot in 17 days, it skimps on nothing except possibly running time. This is adapted from Nigel Balchin's novel, "A Sort of Traitors."

The Boultings have lined up a fine cast of firstclass established artists and top technical boys. The writing and direction are taut perhaps a shade too taut towards the end. Under Roy Boulting's direction, the cast has done excellent stints and obviously did not need too much time for re-takes. "Suspect" may well be a model of the pre-planning that saves coin, and within its modest limits is a very good job. Certainly a useful booking for theatre.

Story ncerns a small team of research medical scientists who have patiently dug out the virulent m (that can dispose of typhus and bubonic epidemics. The boss (Peter Cushing) is shocked when h is told by the Minister of Defense (Raymond Huntley) that their findings cannot be published under the Official Secrets Act.

Reluctantly, they buckle down to authority—all except one member of the team (Tony Britton). Not for financial gain, but purely in the interest of humanity, he nearly commits treason when he arranges for the findings of the experiment to be published. He's egged on by a maimed pilot wh has a grudge against the country which has left him in his armless plight. Britton is saved from his folly in the nick of time.

There's nothing pretentious about this film, but it is entertaining and literate. In the hands of less experienced people, both technicians and thesps, weaknesses might show up through lack of development of characters. But here there are a number of topnotch performances. Tony Britton, as the weak young man; Donald Pleasance, as an insidious spy; Virginia Maskell, the femme link in the research team, Kenneth Griffith, Raymond Huntley, and Peter Cushing could hardly be bettered.

Thorl Walters, as an apparently vague security officer, adds to his fast growing reputation as a character actor while Ian Bannen, as the embittered ex-pilot who engineers the near-treason, enhances his rep as one of Britain's most significant young actors.

Lensing, artwork and editing are all satisfactor. There's no sense in hailing "Suspect" as anything more than a competent and useful program filler. But if talent can continue to be harnessed to move in swiftly, snap up temporary studio space, and turn out little pix like "Suspect," then there's some sanity in a world of million-dollar efforts. May it happen more often, for here's a "tv play" which has just that extra polish and knowhow that distiguishes the small box from the big screen. Rich.

Drama unturls in a cafe set where actors (and there are few stars in this one since featuring some of Mexico's new faces) go through their paces. There is no overplaying, with the general effect being that of everyday occurrences in the life of cabaret habitues.

Elvira Quintana makes a good looking femme of easy virtue and shows that she is capable of taking on more serious acting. For comedy relief "Loco" Valdes interprets a screwball character.

Director Benito Alazraki has turned in one of his best film efforts which may be dubbed in English as well as exploited in European markets. Emil.

La Verite

Paris, Nov. 15.

Columbia release of Iena Films production. Stars Brigitte Bardot; features Charles Vanel, Paul Meurisse, Sami Frey, Marie Joce Nat, Louis Seigner, Jean-Louis Reynols, Andre Oumansky. Directed by H. G. Clouzot. Screenplay, Clouzot, Michele Perreins, Christiane Rochefort, Simone Marescal; camera, Armany Thirard; editor, Albert Jurgenson. At Colisee, Paris. Running time, 130 MINS.

Judge	Louis Seigner
Michel	Jean-Louis Reynols
Ludo	Andre Oumansky

Using the background of a murder trial, director H. G. Clouzot has given a series of slice of life sketches, via flashbacks, detailing the modern French youth today. It does not preach but gives various sides in detailing its downbeat tale of a young provincial girl's adventures in Paris and the eventual murder of her lover and her own suicide. It stars Brigitte Bardot, forced into one of her most dramatic roles by director Clouzot.

Star's suicide attempt may help this here. It has the Bardot name and news interest abroad, too. But the pic is overlong and quite plodding. Hence, it will need hard-sell. It shapes an arty entry on its relentless exposure of youthful morals today. This goes further in frankness and pictorial treatment than is usually the case in these type pix.

Miss Bardot is a dissatisfied smalltown girl who goes to Paris.

Instead of working, she sinks into a Bohemian life and first affairs with intellectual characters. Her sister's boyfriend falls for her but she is capable of having other affairs while theirs is on. But in time she becomes faithful to him.

They finally fight and part. But she realizes it is love and tries to come back to him only to end in her killing hi nd trying suicide again.

Miss Bardot is her morally blind, pleasure-ridden sexy self in most of the production and is then called on to have big dramatic moments. Though they are mainly outbursts, but she seems to have been whipped into shape by Clouzot.

Clouzot has given this a solid mounting, but the depiction of youth seems strangely flat. It does take swipes at a justice that can be unfeeling. But this rarely gives more than the life of a childish sexpot whose sudden determination to love leads to her complete destruction.

It is sound technically, but could me tightening for foreign cha The theme and Bardot ame are the main assets for foreign use. His study of the younger generation is a stereotyped look at delinquency that has been seen before. Miss Bardot looks as sexkittenish as ever, however, and has some sawily done nude and love scenes. These, of course, are hypo factors. Mosk.

Principal speaker Ambassador James J. Wadsworth, United States Representative to the United Nations. He said the motion picture is a particularly potent medium of communications in an era of crisis and change. He said he sees the American film industry playing an important part in aligning the new Afro-Asia nations with the western world. He added that the Yank industry already has contributed substantially via its film exchange progra with Russia. And he suggested that the trade's leaders and pioneers may contribute still more importantly to th "world community of open "

Eric Johnston and Si Fabian ined in tossing the posies to "Guts-n-Gamble" Levine.

George Jessel was in fine fettle as toastmaster despite a sore throat. After Ambassador James J. Wadsworth's fine speech on "communications" and the Russians, Jessel couldn't resist "but what the heck that's got to do with Joe Levi "

Alan King's standup comedy accented the g. of h.'s predilections for th Roman-style of celluloid entertainment and observed that the "E" probably stood for Joseph Euripedes Levine. King's kidding was humorously barbed at one point he noted that Levine's midas uch got lost with "Jack the Ripper."

Making good point with that omnibus dais—when a double-tier might have been a better idea—he recalled that when he first started doing the comedy bit for the (late) C. B. DeMille "Pioneer" salute i 1949 he worked from the bandstand; "now I've worked myself up to the dais, but sitting out there in Poughkeepsie is ridiculous." It's ridiculous also to overload the dais or, as has been a good point with som other fetes in years past, to make it a double—and there have even been triple-tier daises so that the fringe, supposedly honor guests aren't way out in left field.

On the other hand, a good technique with the still photographs was the simulated dais set up in the Palm Court adjacent to the Starlight Roof, at which the photog did the mugg shots, in the same seating arrangement as in the main event.

'Butterfield' Sharp 18G, Buff.; 'Barrier' $7,000

Buffalo, Nov. 22.

"Butterfield 8" is the brightest thing here this unusually dull session. It looks smash at the Buffalo. "Beyond the Time Barrier" shapes slim at Paramount while "For Love of Mike" is bad at Century. A couple of oldies will not hold at the Center where rushed in after "Sunrise at Campobello" failed to jell opening week.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,500; 70-$1) — "Butterfield 8" (M-G). Sock $18,000. Last week, "Hot Wind Blows" (M-G) and "Key Witness" (M-G), $8,800.

Pittsburgh, Nov. 22.

Bright newcomers which are sparking biz this round here are "Butterfield 8" at Penn and "North To Alaska" at Harris. The other new entry, "Breath of Scandal" at Stanley, looms dull. Hefty holdovers include "Midnight Lace," fine in third at Fulton, "I'm All Right, Jack" in second at Squirrel Hill and mighty "Ben-Hur" in 44th round at Warner.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,365; $1-$1.50)—"Midnight Lace" (U) (3d wk). Still fine at $7,000. Last week, $11,000.

Par's 15% Stock Position Part Of 'British Telemeter Home Viewing'; Third Toll Outfit in London

Paramount has sold all British rights to its International Telemeter home toll television system to a newly formed outfit called British Telemeter Home Viewing Ltd., which comprises significant elements in the London show business, press and financial community.

Par is receiving a "respectable" down payment and will share in the royalties. American film company additionally has acquired 15% of the stock in British Telemeter.

This is widely regarded as a major move on the part of Louis A. Novins, president of Telemeter, for it sets the pattern largely for operations abroad. Rather than being an "invasion" by a Yankee company, the modus operandi will be via "home" interests, and influential ones at that.

Participants in British Telemeter are British Lion Films, indie producer and distributor of British Films; Financial Times, outstanding financial journal of the United Kingdom; Granada Ltd., circuit operator and program contractor for commercial tv; Manchester Guardian & Evening News Ltd., newspaper publishers; Schlesinger Investments Ltd., which has extensive entertainment holdings in England and South Africa; N. M. Rothschild & Sons, one of the most famous banking houses of Europe. Rothschild will be banker and financial advisor for the company.

Need U. K. Okay

British government authorization for the fee-tv system is required and will be sought shortly, it's anticipated. Fact that Telemeter has such a strong group backing it doubtless will be in its favor.

British company has an authorized capital of $2,800,000, of which about 10% already has been taken up to cover initial expenses. Participants all have commitments for further investment.

Elected as temporary chairman of British Telemeter is R. A. Allan of the Financial Times.

Foreign Allies

Clearly, Par intends to align itself with powerful corporations in foreign territories who will have the major stake in the home toll process and obviously will carry much weight in fighting the opposition as and when it arises.

Novins recently completed an extensive swing of European capitals, where he initiated talks with important local people about the adoption of Telemeter in their respective areas. For the most part, it's expected, the corporate setups will be fashioned after the British company.

Indications are that British Telemeter will farm out the operation to individual franchise holders, just as is intended in the United States. Also of significance is the fact that equipment for British Telemeter will be manufactured in the U. K.—this, too, giving it the homegrown look.

Directors of British Telemeter, along with Allan are Novins, British Lion's David Kingsley, Joseph Warton of Granada, A. E. Harmel of Schlesinger and W. McMillan of the Manchester Guardian.

It's Third Britih Group

London, Nov. 22.

British government approval of home toll television, presuming it's duly given, will see a vigorous race to get to market first. This is on the basis of contestants already lined up, and other potentials.

Paramount-owned International Telemeter's new setup here is third in the field. First came when the Rank Group teamed with Associated-Rediffusion to form Choiceview. Then came another concern whose participants include Daniel Angel, Lord Brabourne, Sir Laurence Olivier, Anthony Havelock-Allan, the Earl of Harewood and Field Marshal Viscount Slim. Numerous other local companies with tv affiliations are eager to enter the derby when and if the government gives its okay.

Pilkington Committee, now inquiring into all aspects of radio and tv broadcasting, has home toll on its agenda. Its findings will guide the government in framing new legislation.

As to British Lion

London, Nov. 22.

One intriguing feature of the British Telemeter Home Viewing setup is the fact that British Lion Films is among the subscribers and is represented on the board. The company, as is well known, is owned 100% by the British Government, yet the Government is a long way from giving it authority to the introduction of toll-tv.

There is, however, no special significance. British Lion is a public corporation and, as such, is allowed to make its decision at board level without seeking prior Governmental okay.

See Anglo-Yank Toll Talent Swap

The most extensive interchange of international entertainment programming is envisioned by key parties in the home toll television field, now that Paramount-owned Telemeter has sold its British rights to what's identified as an influential and aggressive group of British corporations (separate story).

Taking over Telemeter in England is British Telemeter Home Viewing Ltd., which has the background and resources to provide important shows for its homescreen clients, either on its own or through local franchise operators.

It's now figured that these same shows—plays, musicals, concerts, opera etc.—will be licensed to Telemeter in the United States when it comes into being, and to Telemeter in Canada which already is running.

The interchange, naturally, will not stop here. Par is in process of lining up other outlets in Italy, France, Germany and other countries. The list will grow as time goes on, and each nation will produce a good part of its own programming. Much of it will be available, and suitable, for export, according to today's blueprint. Tape will accommodate both the local reruns and the export.

There's much to be proven about home toll, of course, and there's no saying for sure that the Par process will be dominant.

But if time, effort and money are to prove the determining factors, fee-tv could catch on and with it will be the vast international exchange of show business programming.

IF PRICE IS RIGHT

Goldwyn Will Sell All or Part of His 57 Film Features

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Samuel Goldwyn didn't hesitate when asked to clarify conflicting reports that his theatrical films were, and then again weren't, on the tv market.

"Of course they're available," he replied, "to the right people and at the right price."

Just what that right price may be, Goldwyn isn't saying—not for publication anyw...

His library consists of 57 talking pix, but he said he will hold back a few which didn't turn out too well in their original theatrical release. "I want to give the public good entertainment on tv," he added.

Pix won't be sold outright, producer said, but will be "licensed" for a period of years.

Telemeter Staffing Up; Phil Isaacs on Deals; Phone Co-Op a Problem

Paramount-owned International Telemeter is starting to build up its United States organization with the appointment of Phil Isaacs as director of franchise operations. Move is a forerunner to actual operation of the home toll system in the States but still there's no rush about this.

Isaacs has resigned from Fruchtman Theatres, Bali more chain, to take the job. Previously he had a regional manager's spot with Par Film Distributing.

Telemeter post involves liaison work between homeoffice and those who come to be territorial operators in the new field. A full-scale department will be built around him.

However, significantly, Par tinues to go slow in introducing Telemeter in the U. S. for a variety of reasons. For one, there's no competition likely to spring up shortly; second, the telephone companies with radio and television loyalties are hedging as concerning the availability of facilities and, three, final decisions on the modus operandi must await the results of the initial run in West Toronto.

PARSONS, QUEENS, N.Y., HITS CENTURY'S 'IN'

A $1,500,000 antitrust suit has been filed in N. Y. Federal Court against Columbia, Universal, United Artists, Metro and the Century Circuit. The complaint, by Parsons Theatre Corp., operator of the Parsons Theatre in Queens, N. Y., charges that the defendants discriminated against the Parsons in the exhibition of pictures on first neighborhood run.

The suit asks the court to direct the defendants to negotiate in good faith and also seeks an injunction to halt the film companies from giving the first-run product to the Century Circuit.

Didn't Mean What He Testified?

Odd Reversal Attempt by NAB Lawyer As Hartford Hearings Close

Washington, Nov. 22.

The record was closed in the Hartford Phonevision hearings last week with the filing of a survey on the Telemeter operation in Etobicoke.

The survey, by the marketi search firm of Elliott-Haynes, showed that 65.7% of h mes subscribing to Telemeter watched at least one progra during a sample week in October. Based on telephon interviews with 286 Telemeter subscribers during a three-day period in October, survey found:

—Weekly expenditures for Telemeter programs averaged 80c per hon

—During a mple week, 34.3% of subscribers saw no Telemeter progr... 44.1% saw one; 19.1% s... two, and 2.5% saw three.

—On one night, only 14.6% tuned in on a Telemeter offering.

—Average ti... spent watching Telemet... programs was 2.4 hours wk.

Among stipulated technical and economic data filed before closing the Hartford record was an estimate that installation and service costs of the Phonevision decoder would average $22.79 per set yearly.

An attempt by National Assn. of Broadcasters to revise testimony by NAB v.p. for television Charles Tower was objected to strenuously by W. Theodore Pierson, Hartford Phonevision attorney, who declared the meaning of Tower's remarks would be completely reversed, ower took the stand during the hearings in what was generally regarded as an unsuccessful attempt to show that the Hartford Phonevision operation would have an adverse effect on free television in the Connecticut city.

Toll-Cursers' Meet

Woodbridge, Con ... Nov. 22.

Connecticut exhibitors, who were prime movers in opposition to the RKO-Zenith petition for a broadcast tollvision test before the Federal Communications Commission last month, will receive a first-hand report on the hearing tomor- (Wed.) at a luncheon meeting here.

Trustees for the Connecticut Committee Against Pay TV—Maurice H. Bailey, B. E. Hoffman and Bernard Menschell—have called the meeting to hear reports by three men who attended the full hearings—Menschell, Herman M. Levy, Theatre Owners of America general counsel, and Philip F. Harling, chairman of the Joint Committee Against Toll TV d TOA's Anti-Pay-TV Committee. The printed summary of the hearings prepared by TOA will be distributed.

If You Ask Them, People Agin Toll

Min apolis, Nov. 22.

When the question, "Do-you-want-to-pay?" is put to the public, th nswer negative. Min apolis Tribune took sou throughout the state and found that few people, indeed, are "clamoring" for tollvision.

Poll was taken as a result of the Federal Communications Commission's hearings last month on RKO General's application to run a three-year trial of subscription tv in Hartford. The survey covered a cross-section of men and w men over 21 in urban and rural homes.

Only surprising aspect of the study was that the Minnesota pollsters found 13% of their sample expressing an interest the unknown phenomenon of tollvision. The vast majority, 85%, said they weren't interested while 2% gave qualified replies or no opinions.

1960 DIVIDEND PACE

Despite a $49,000 dip in October, dividends paid by film companies are still running ahead of the 1959 rate by more than $1,000,000, according to the latest Commerce Dept. report.

In the first 10 months of this year, the dividends amounted to $20,345,000, compared to $19,331,000 for the same period last year. They totaled $1,353,000 in October this year, against $1,402,000 in that month a year before.

'Internationalization' Impact on Scripts, As Viewed by Bernheim

Paris, Nov. 22.

International aspects of filmmaking w also apply to literary properties, as well as to the ever-i creasing use of foreign stars and locations, according to U.S. literary agent Alain Bernheim, who has based his activities in Paris for the last four years.

Point made by Bernheim is that American producers today ar using more non-American properties than ever before, not only because tv and films consume properties so rapidly that there might be shortage if the overseas properti were not available, but als because these stories and themes give the same kind of extra-added-traction to the finished film in overseas markets as does the use of foreign stars.

Bernheim, of French origin, was originally an agent in Hollywood, but moved to Paris when he noticed the growing calls for new material and the increasing activity of U.S. producers abroad. He still has a liaison office in Hollywood, but his main bailiwick is here. He handles many French literary names, some Yanks living abroad, as well as one writ -director, Jules Dassin.

Francoise Sagan was his first local client whose "Bonjour Tristesse" he sold to Columbia and "A Certain Smile" to 20th- Fox. He also reps Pierre Boulle, Vahe Katcha, Art Buchwald, Steve Coulter, James Jones, and Edwi Gilbert.

Bernheim says that European filmites are also getting an international outlook, and now agents, as well as producers, are going where their business needs take them. It's "have properties, will travel," for the percenters.

An Easy Guess: British Exhibitors Taking Anti-Toll Stance Like TOA

By ERNIE PLAYER

London, Nov. 22.

Though the general council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn. is to meet specially on Nov. 30 to discuss further its views on tv for submission to the Pilkington Committee, which is charged by the Government to make recommendations on the future of radio and video, it's already crystal-clear that the exhibs will voice 100% opposition to tollvision, same like the Theatre Owners of America in the U.S.

A report on tv, with the emphasis on pay-see, was discussed at a meet of the exhibs' council last week and earned general approval for its anti-toll section. It will accordingly form the basis of a memorandum to be drawn up for the Pilkington probe, after CEA president Alfred Davis has added information gleaned from his recent trip to the U.S. and Ontario where he inspected Paramount's telemeter test at Etobicoke.

The report, which incidentally points to the growth of piped-tv services able to provide tollvee if and when greenlighted (around 330,000 houses are wired, according to General Post Office figures quoted which are admittedly substantially in arrear"), is careful to point the danger of exhibitors making out a completely negative case to the Pilkington Committee. All the same, it says that "Exhibitors feel they are fully justified in calling attention to their own position, as on the other side of the picture it cannot be thought that the protagonists of toll television are solely motivated by public-spirited ambitions to improve the level of entertainment and culture comprised in existing television programs."

Must Hurt B.O.

Accordingly it puts forward the views that any kind of extension to the tv services must have some adverse effect on cinema box-offices, that the transfer of top-drawing shows to tollvee would have the "inevitable result" of a general deterioration of the existing free tv services, that any extensive increase "in calls on leisure time which are unproductive or which anchor the public to their homes cannot do other than tend to break down" the existing social structure of voluntary service, communal activities, etc., and that the Government could not surely let the British film production industry dwindle "almost to the point of complete extinction," which might happen if, in turning away from the cinema, producers were denied the Eady subsidy to which cinemas now contribute.

Elsewhere the report adopts the realistic outlook that if the Government should eventually sanction tollvee, exhibs ought to be in there pitching for a claim as purveyors of same. It also covers the subject of viewing in cinemas via large-screen presentation, for example, and suggests that "whilst it might be that this method of conveying programs to cinemas would not, if permitted, became the subject of immediate general application, exhibitors would nevertheless wish to be in a position to take advantage of modern technical advances to help them in their primary function of bringing the best possible entertainment to the public in their cinemas."

LANDIS X-RAYS FCC FOR 'CURE'

The Network That Never Got Sold

American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres voted at its November board meeting not to go out of the radio business. The decision, a top spokesman said, was unanimous, despite some tempting offers. One of the offers would have involved a selloff of all the ABC o & o properties for somewhere between $30,000,000 and $35,000,000 (and presumably pave the way for a Mutual move-in on the ABC affiliated stations), but the ABC directorate said "no dice."

It involved a number of separate deals, with Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. as the principal would-be-purchaser. WBC, had the deal been okayed, would have inherited, for some $22,000,000, the ABC Radio stations in New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco. It's no secret that Don McGannon's operation has long coveted stations in both L. A. and N. Y. In return, it's understood, WBC would have abandoned its AM stations in Portland and Fort Wayne.

To Gene Autry would have gone the ABC o & o properties in Chicago and Detroit. (Autry has been involved in previous negotiations for another AM acquisition in Detroit.) And Loew's (MGM), which recently sold its WMGM in New York for nearly $11,000,000 to Crowell-Collier, was to acquire the ABC Pittsburgh station.

The ABC directors were confronted with still another propositi from an undesignated source for the sale of the whole ABC Radio setup—o & o's plus continued affiliation ties for $39,000,000.

This, too, was rejected, and apparently it's now all past history. Sez AB-PT prez Leonard H. Goldenson: "We're in network radio to stay."

AFTRA-Webs in Real Stalemate: No Agreement, But No Strike—Yet

A strike by the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and the Screen Actors Guild may be averted until "the end of the week," according to reports of key observers. If the situation doesn't change markedly in the next several hours, it looks as if the networks will function normally at least beyond the big holiday due tomorrow (Thanksgiving Day).

Networks and agencies and SAG and AFTRA met yesterday (Tues.) morning in a mediation meeting historic for its brevity. A quarter-hour after both sides in the contract stalemate had met at the N.Y. Federal Mediator's office, having "responded to his call in courtesy," the session broke up.

Management and labor reportedly want to continue their talks for the time being without intercession by the mediator, and they implied as much during the brief getto-gether. However, no negotiating meetings were immediately scheduled, and both sides were being mum about the prospects of same.

While SAG and AFTRA understood last week's offer to constitute management's "final" proposal, it appears now that the offer was only meant be final in some areas and open for negotiation in others. Feeling yesterday was that both sides would try to clarify what was and what wasn't final before AFTRA and SAG call a stri

Both ions, which are jointly negotiating the contract terms for video blurbs, now have full authority to call a strike whenever they please.

Lending support to the reports that the strike still is a few days off is the rumor that Jack Dales and Bill Berger, SAG's chief negotiators, intend returning to N.Y. where negotiations have been taking place. A declaration of labor

Granada (TV-Pix) $2,933,697 Profit

London, Nov. 22.

The Granada Group, comprising both mmercial television and moti picture exhibition, announced a trading profit for the year ended Oct. 1 of $7,502,180, as compared with $5,903,973 the previous year. But net profit—after taxes and depreciation—came to $2,933,697, as against $2,232,412 during 1959.

Granada board has hiked the dividend 25% to 110% and has proposed a stock split of two "A" ordinary shares for each ordinary or "A" ordi share held. Board also announced that profits for the current year are running more than double the rate of the last fiscal year.

Montand Nixes TV In Algerian Crisis

Paris, Nov. 22.

Yves Montand turned down an invitation to appear in a New Year's Eve show for the state controlled video setup, Radiodiffusion-Television Francaise, stating that he would not do so as long as other performers (either close or unknown to him) were denied this right due to their opinions and beliefs.

Monstand was referring to the petition of the 121 condoning insubordination among French troops in Algeria. All those who did have been forbiddien tv and nationalized legit appearances as well as cutting off needed film aid for all films they appear in. Over 25 film, theatre, tv and radio people signed the manifesto, including Montand's wife, Simone Signoret.

EX-HARVARD DEAN TIPS STRATEGY

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Nov. 22.

To be in tune with the times around the Federal Communications Commission, lift your voice with "There'll Be Some Changes Made." It's one of the safest predictions in unpredictable Washington.

That President-Elect John F. Kennedy wants reorganization of the federal regulatory agencies is obvious in his handing James M. Landis, former Harvard Law School dean and chairman at different times of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Securities and Exchange Commission, the task of evaluating what should be done to make the agencies function m efficiently in the public interest.

Although Landis is currently holding his tongue while he undertakes his study, some of his views along this line were voiced three months ago when he was on a panel during the American Bar Assn. convention here. In his statement, a copy of which has become available, he detailed a number of gripes about the way thi are going at all the agencies.

Also, President Eisenhower has set the stage for shaking up the agencies. Today in Washington, a high level conference took place, presided over by U. S. Court of Appeals Judge E. Barrett Prettyman, which promises to lead to annual or semi-annual meetings in the future to make searching, critical evaluations of the operations of FCC and the other agencies.

What Judge Prettyman has in mind is an egghead organization like the Judicial Conference of the U. S., the group meeting annually, presided over by the U. S. Supreme Court chief justice. This conference surveys the federal judicial system and recommends procedural changes and legislative needs.

The proposed conference of thinkers who would turn the mental x-ray on the regulatory agencies would be made up of represen-

NBC-TV's Administrative Revamp; Stone, Stabile, Matson Move Up

NBC-TV underwent some major administrative changes yesterday (Tues.) and the most major of them appeared to be the elevation of Robert L. Stone from vicepresident in charge of the relatively narrow engineering and operations area to vicepresident and general manager of the tv network, where he not only keeps his ultimate control of old line of duty but who, in his new broadened job, will touch on everything from sales to programming.

George Matson, former general manager, moves into a newly created job as veep and assistant to NBC president Robert Kintner. James A. Stabile, who some time ago gave up control of talent and contract negotiations in order to become veepee in charge of NBC standards & practices, gets a new title—staff veepee, NBC-TV—and with it the renewed jurisdiction over the negotiating area. Stabile's appointment is the other big administrative move.

Moreover, talent and contract negotiations, a key area of the company's functioning, will be moved from the control of Thomas Ervin's legal department and directly into the tv web's jurisdiction, with Stabile in charge. Burton Hanft, veepee over talent & contracts, will report to NBC-TV's Stabile hereafter.

Ernest Lee Jahncke Jr., director in charge of practices, will succeed Stabile in charge of all NBC standards & practices, and he'll probably succeed to a vicepresidency soon, too.

To take up the slack caused by Stone's promotion, Kintner has named William H. Trevarthen who got a veepee stripe within the last month as boss of engineering and operations. Reporting to Trevarthen will be Andrew J. Hammerschmidt, veep over engineering.

To give some idea of the broad responsibilities of the NBC-TV general manager, Jerry Danzig, v.p. over participating programs, John Heywood, director of NBC-TV biz affairs, and Fenton Coe, director of film production, Hollywood, along with Trevarthen will report to Stone.

When Matson held the post, the general manager of tv seemed to register authority in most sales and programming areas, at least to the degree that high-ranking cohorts sought Matson's support for many

Boston's Strange Affiliate Pattern (WNAC to ABC)

Effective Jan. 1, the Tom O'Neil-owned WNAC-TV, Boston, now a CBS-TV affiliate, will switch over to ABC-TV, under terms of a two-year pact just negotiated with the network. That's because ABC's present Boston affiliate, WHDH-TV, moves into the CBS affiliate fold the first of the year.

It's one of those unique deals in network-affiliate relationship. How long the WNAC-ABC tie will continue is strictly conjectural, despite the two-year arrangement. For tied in with the CBS and ABC switch of stations are the still pending maneuvers which, long before the two years have elapsed (or then again it might take five years to consummate), may find NBC acquiring WNAC-TV as its very o&o. In such an eventuality, ABC and WNAC would have to terminate their relationship, which would undoubtedly be followed by an ABC tie ith the Westinghouse-owned

Sun. Nite Arbitron Hard On the Bard

"Hallmark Hall of Fame's" version of "Macbeth" took the customary competitive licking accorded Shakespeare on tv, but the Harry Belefonte special walked away from the field, according to the Multi-City Arbitron ratings for Sunday night (20).

Belafonte's 10-11 outing on CBS-TV racked up Arbitron scores of 30.2 and 28.5 in its two half-hour periods, vs. 14.4 for Loretta Young and 14.6 for "This Is Your Life" on NBC and 12.3 for the second half of "The Islanders" and 4.8 for "The Man and the Mandate" on ABC.

The Maurice Evans-Judith Anderson "Macbeth" on NBC held a consistent audience but fell victim to the kiddie series at its early 6-8 p.m. post. The half-hour ratings: at 6, against no network competition rated, "Macbeth" had 11.4. At 6:30, "Macbeth topped "The Twentieth Century" on CBS by 11.4 to 11.3, but fell victim to the first half of Walt Disney, which racked a 17.0 on ABC. At 7, Disney again led with 20.2, against 14.0 for "Lassie" and 11.4 for "Macbeth." At 7:30, Hallmark rose to 13.1, but "Maverick" first-halved an 18.4 and "Dennis the Menace" led the field with 20.7.

ABC-TV's 'Contiguous Twosome' (Treyz & Moore) Riding Herd On Sports-Pubaffairs-Entertainment

By ART WOODSTONE

All roads at ABC-TV lead to program vicepresident Tom Moore and the network president Ollie Treyz, who, to some friends and rivals alike, are known as the "contiguous twosome," a phrase adapted from a universal television technique of attracting advertisers.

Presently under the administration and care of Moore's program department is the regular commercial programming, in which he and Treyz have their primary training, and also sports and public affairs. Thus, for the first time in network television, the same men who direct and schedule entertainment vehicles like "Surfside 6" and "Maverick" now exercise similar authority over boxing, college football and "Close-Up" and the Churchill series.

To distinguish this pattern of monolithic operation from that of the two other tv webs, it should be noted that CBS-TV has a large staff of producers and writers working exclusively under Sig Mickelson, whose sole interest is the output of news and informational stanzas, i.e., public affairs programming. At NBC-TV, though the final authority admittedly rests with network president Bob Kintner, the planning, legwork and direct supervision fall to NBC News veepee Bill McAndrews and his journalists.

CBS-TV and NBC-TV have completely distinct departments for the construction and supervision and scheduling of entertainment (Treyz's term: "bread and butter") programs.

First clear sign that bread and butter had moved, in some measure, into pubaffairs was given several weeks ago as ABC-TV topper Treyz assigned the Churchill series to one of Moore's staff vicepresidents, who since has ridden careful herd on each element of the forthcoming Sunday night half-hour film series. But the shift in emphasis and power was brought home dramatically last week when it was learned that Moore's staff, without the knowledge or compliance of ABC News veepee John Daly, had hired a producer named Bob Drew, onetime exec of Time Inc. television stations who now works out of the parent publisher's New York offices.

Moore and Treyz had made the deal with Drew to produce an hour documentary on Cuba two or more months ago. It has since been scheduled for an early December airdate and is being called "Yanki, No!" (Drew, incidentally, took time off from his job with the publishing house a few years ago in an effort to develop and sell a public affairs idea for tv, but evidently the networks were then unanimous in their disapproval of buying pubaffairs from an outside production source.)

Drew is to do three other pubaffairs programs, all, as with "Yanki," for the Bell & Howell "Close-Up" series. Excellent Madison Ave. sources say that Drew and Time, who are working together on this project, were "in-

ABC Calling Card

When most of the affiliates of NBC-TV picked up their mail at the Hotel Plaza Thursday (17), the second day of their annual convention, they found missives from rival ABC-TV.

ABC-TV had placed in their pigeon-holes reports on the latest 24-market Nielsen study, in which that network came off ahead of its competitors. Attached to each of the rating studies was the calling card of an ABC-TV station relations executive.

Said an NBC executive: "It's about as subtle as a nosebleed and as welcome."

Hagerty ABC News-Pubaffairs Deal Is Finalized

John Daly's voluntary departure from ABC last Wednesday (16) was the last of several internal dramas in which the news and public affairs veepee has been involved.

Meantime, his old buddy Jim Hagerty, the Eisenhower press chief, was hired to replace him. Word was leaked by the network the day after Daly left. Hagerty will come over after Ike leaves office in January.

When Daly first learned, through sources outside his own network, that ABC-TV president Oliver Treyz and overall chief Leonard Goldenson had hired Time Inc. to produce some programs for the public affairs series, "Close-up," he went to Goldenson, by his own account, and said he'd resign if the outside production deal was consummated. He quoted Goldenson, who is president of the parent American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, as saying then and there that he intended "going ahead" with Time.

Daly had threatened to quit ABC in many previous clashes with top management, but either top management finally withdrew or Daly did.

Daly held the leadership of ABC News for seven years, continuing all that time with his chores as an on-the-air news and public affairs personality for ABC and as host (a job he still holds) of CBS-TV's "What's My Line?" In the past couple of years, as ABC-TV rose to a position of equality with NBC-TV and CBS-TV, he reportedly felt restricted when heavy coin support for enlarging the pubaffairs and news schedule wasn't forthcoming.

A few years ago, he got angry when the ABC command hired interviewer Mike Wallace and his production sidekick Ted Yates over a Daly objection. Wallace did an interview stanza, which seemed to fall into the public affairs area, and for most of the time that Wallace remained with ABC, he and Daly weren't on speaking terms.

Daly held strong opinions about what constituted public affairs programming and the editorial prerogatives of a broadcaster. This occasionally led to differences with fellow ABC staffers. For one, Sterling (Red) Quinlan, the ABC veepee in Chicago, had his share of differences with the newly resigned news boss. Quinlan wanted to establish some manner of news-pubaffairs operation for ABC in Chicago, a city where network productions had over the years fallen off to virtually nothing. But Daly felt that control of pubaffairs and news were his and that he should have direct supervision of all such programs, and, as a result, nothing emanated from Chicago on a regular basis.

Daly's own crew was in charge of "Close-Up," a current public affairs series being done for sponsor Bell & Howell. When he dis-

Looks Like Disney NBC Deal After All

Despite reports two weeks ago that maybe ABC and Walt Disney would continue their tv relationship beyond the expiration of their seven-year pact this season, it now appears almost certain that the filmmaker will be with NBC-TV in '61-'62.

NBC sources say that the producer and the web, after weeks of negotiation, are now only "a point or two away from a contract." The signing, others indicate, looks imminent.

Disney will probably supply NBC with only one stanza next season, one said to be essentially like his currently weekly hour on ABC-TV, with several reruns and Disney's old theatrical stuff included.

Como Sets Guests

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Barrie Chase, Fred Astaire's dancing partner in his three tv specials, will guest on Perry Como's NBC-TV show Feb. 15.

Other guests set by Como include Gwen Verdon, Jan. 18; Brenda Lee, Dec. 14; Kay Thompson, Dec. 28.

British ATV Exits Bergman Special

CBS-TV has lost a partner and a foreign sale on its upcoming Ingrid Bergman special, "24 Hours in the Life of a Woman." Associated Television of London will have participated in the financing of the special and purchased one-time rights, but is no longer involved in the project.

Deal with the commercial telecaster fell through when it found it could not provide CBS-TV with its full studio facilities for the two-week period required to tape the 90-minuter. CBS-TV thereupon called off the deal and decided to move studio production on the show to New York Jan. 18 to 28, following several days of location taping in Monte Carlo. Web will turn over two of its Gotham studios to the Gordon Duff production for 10 days.

Web will also start pre-telecast foreign sales on the special in English-language countries, and hopes to make up the loss of the ATV deal via another sale in the United Kingdom as well as selling the special in Canada and Australia. Reylon, of course, sponsors the special in the U.S. March 6.

CBS-TV had delayed filming from last June until this January because the ATV studios in London were not ready by summer and the plan had been to proceed there. But once the studios did open, the British web found itself busy with its own shows and didn't want to tie them up for nearly two weeks. Hence decision to move to N.Y., though Miss Bergman and her husband, Lars Schmidt, would have preferred the London site. Silvia Narizzano, the British director, will come to Gothai with them to direct the show.

ROY ROGERS RERUNS AS SAT. AYEM ENTRY

Roy Rogers returns to the networks the first of the year with reruns of his old NBC-TV Saturday night stanza. Only difference is the show will air Saturday mornings, under Nestle's sponsorship on CBS-TV.

Being dropped to make way for the Rogers reruns "Mighty Mouse," which being retired from the web after something like a five-year run. The Terrytoons stanza has been only half-sponsored this year, by Colgate, and the latter drops out at the end of the year. Rogers replaces the cartoons show at 11:30-noon.

Nestle buy was set via McCann-Erickson.

Joey Bishop Pilot As Danny Thomas Entry

Pilot for the projected half-hour Joey Bishop telefilm series will be aired on CBS-TV as an episode in the Danny Thomas show. Thomas did the same last spring with the Andy Griffith pilot, which sold immediately afterwards to Thomas' sponsor, General Foods, and which has been a top 10 contender since its preem.

Bishop pilot was to have been readied for this season, but the writers' strike interfered. It'll be completed well ahead of the March deadli

Frank Blair is filling the WNBC-TV Sunday night news void made by the recent departure of Ken Banghart. Starting Nov. 27, the 11 p.m. "Sunday Night News" will have Blair as newscaster, job originally offered to commentator Frank McGee, who finally had to turn it down because local sponsor Shell Oil would have conflicted with a pending network stanza for Gulf Oil.

Blair is a regular on the news segs of NBC-TV's early morning "Today" show.

Death at 65 Ends Career of Chi's Les Atlass, AM Pioneer 'Untouchable'

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Nov. 22.

H. Leslie Atlass, radio pioneer and for many years a living legend as the most powerful broadcast figure west of New York, died of a heart attack Nov. 18 in Miami, Fla., where he had been vacationing. He would have turned 66 next Tues. (29).

Exactly a year ago, on his 65th birthday, CBS retired him as vice prez and general manager of the Chicago o&o, WBBM-TV. It was involuntary retirement for Atlass, who had had a lifetime contract with the network dating back to 1933, when Columbia purchased the station he had founded, WBBM; and it marked the end of an era during which Atlass had bossed the CBS plant as though it were his own, repeatedly defying the will of the New York muckamucks.

Both the AM and tv outlets, under Atlass, came to be among the most profitable stations in the country; and in the early days, when the CBS radio network was on the ropes, it was Atlass who consistently came through with the key sales—usually Wrigley Gum—that kept the web solvent. Indeed, it was through his ability to make money for the network, while at the same time spending lavishly for programming, that he acquired his power. That power reached its peak in the Thirties, when he controlled the entire midwest for CBS. Had he wanted to, it's said, could also have bossed the West Coast; but instead of taking over KNX when it was starting, he recommended Don Thornburgh, whom he had trained, for the job.

Atlass was one of the original "Think Big" boys, and his freedom with the buck was legend. But not the least of his talents was his knack of finding and developing future elder statesmen for the network. Among that number are Merle Jones, now prexy of the Columbia-owned tv stations, Jack Von Volkenburg, past prez of the television network, and Kelly

Liebman's 'Private Eye'

Max Liebman has closed another deal with U.S. Steel to produce a special, to be titled "Private Eye, Private Eye," Telecast date March 8, '61 over CBS-TV.

Special will star Ernie Kovacs and Edie Adams. Frank Cooper Associates, which negotiated the deal, is talking with Peter Ustinov for role in the show. Will Glickman, Sydney Zelinka and Lucille Kallen are at work on the script.

British Com'l TV 1960 Gross Heads For $218,500,000

London, Nov. 22.

Advertising expenditure on commercial tv is heading for a total of some $218,500,000 in 1960. The estimate is based on figures covering the first nine months of the year, published by Media Records, which indicate that the increase over 1959 is so far around 33-34%.

According to Media Records, roughly $149,500,000 was spent in the January-September period, comparing with $112,000,000 in the same spell in 1959. In the summer season (July-September) expenditure at $50,400,000 was the highest ever recorded in the U.K. for the time of year, being 34% upon the comparable 1959 figure.

TV Acad On the Prowl For an Intern'l Director For Annual TV Festival

Sponsors of the international television festival, to take place in New York next year, are now on the lookout for a permanent festival executive director. It's understood that the festival planning committee appointed by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences has sufficient money in pledges from the tv networks to go ahead and also take office space.

First festival, intended to bring together tv people from all over the world to exchange ideas on technical, financial and programmatic aspects of televisi will take place either next spring, more probably, next fall. The following two festivals, according to plans worked up under the aegis of festival chairman Tex McCrary, will take place on the Coast and then, in 1964, return to New York for the World's Fair.

Jack Wrather was appointed chairman of finance for the festival committee last week. Sometime earlier, Henry White, an ATAS executive, was named its treasurer.

Ringling Circus Booked By CBS; Sponsor Set

One-hour taped special with the Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey Circus will be aired on CBS-TV sometime in April, with Top Value Stamps (trading stamps) sponsoring. Top Value picked up the tab on the circus last season too.

Show will probably be taped before the circus leaves its Sarasota winter quarters for its annual spring tour, with the showing while the circus is touring to boost the promotional values of the telecast.

Shelton for FCC? 'It's Not for Me'

Washington, Nov. 22.

Edgar G. Shelton Jr., ABC's Washington p., today (Tues.) pooh-pooed published reports that he may get the Charles King seat on the Federal Communications Commission, which is guesswork speculation which should be pooh-poohed. Shelton said he isn't interested, while modestly expressing appreciation for the "flattery" involved.

Thee factors deserve consideration:

—FCC already has a Texan as a Commissioner, Robert T. Bartley of Dallas, nephew of House Speaker Sam Rayburn. Shelton, who is from Austi took leave in the campaign to work for Rayburn's protege, vice-president-elect Lyndon B. Johnson. It is way out of the ordinary for one state to have two commissioners.

—There is little, if any, chance that the Commissioner replacing King will be selected from within the industry. If so, the Senate might not confirm him. In the same connection, Shelton's association with the industry has been such a success that it is unlikely he would leave it for Government, probably at a lower salary.

FREDDIE'S ELYSIAN TV FIELDS

The New Nielsens (24 Markets)

(Week Ending Nov. 13)

ABC-TV walks away with five of the Top 10 shows in the new 24-city Nielsen report, where all three webs clash head-on in competition. On half-hour nighttime wins (spanning 7:30 to 11 and 6:30 to 11 on Sunday) ABC is out in front with 21; CBS is second with 16 and NBC third with 14 (seven of which represented election coverage.) ABC captures Sunday, Monday, Thursday and Friday nights; CBS Saturday night and NBC Tuesday (Election Nite) and Wednesday. For the 51 nighttime half-hours, the average audience ratings read: ABC: 19.4; CBS: 19.1; NBC: 17.9. ABC was low man on th Nielsen poll Tuesday (Election) night, with 12.6 rating as opposed to CBS' 24.7 and NBC's whopping 31.7, but the remaining six nights of the week gave ABC enough of a lead to win out in the seven-night tally.

Here's the Top 10 lineup:

Gunsmoke (CBS)	36.4
Untouchables (ABC)	32.5
NBC Elections (NBC)	31.7
Have Gun (CBS)	29.3
Flintstones (ABC)	28.6
77 Sunset Strip (ABC)	28.3
Wagon Train (NBC)	28.3
My Three Sons (ABC)	27.9
What's My Line (CBS)	26.5
Lawman (ABC)	26.4

Agencies 'Selling Us Down River' With 'Beloved Ratings'. O'Connor

Chicago, Nov. 29.

If the ABC and CBS mechanical brains proved dead wrong by picking Nixon on a sample of only three-tenth of one percent of the total vote, how then can we trust the television ratings which are based on a sample of even less than that?

Newscaster Len O'Connor tossed this poser at the Chi Broadcast Advertising Club last week and proceeded to answer it. He called ratings a "mythology" built around one-tenth of one percent of the potential television audience. "How does anybody know," he asked, "whether the secret opinion-maker is a studious person who will keep his diary with academic care, or some kid with dirty feet and a dribbly nose who dreams about spending his life on the front seat of a stagecoach?

"The trouble is, even if you were right, you'd be wrong," he told the local advertising trade. "Even if your charts and percentages were infallible, the advertising business has a greater responsibility than merely providing a plethor of mass audience shows. I think it can be said, with a reasonable degree of accuracy, that the only shows on tv dedicated to the precept that American people must be well informed are created by the networks and independent stations and not by sponsor or an advertising agency."

In the general dressing dow the local NBC performer gave the

Pet Milk Ankles Red Skelton Show

Pet Milk, which has sponsored half of the Red Skelton show on CBS-TV for some five years, has asked out of its alternate-week at the end of the year, and CBS-TV will okay the withdrawal.

Reason is not dissatisfaction with the network the show; on the contrary, Pet credits them with a major share of its sales growth in the past few years. Fact is that Pet has completed a major reevaluation of its marketing problems vis a vis its multiple products and plans a completely different approach in its advertising, via the Gardner agency. Probability is that heavy use will be made of spot tv.

CBS-TV has no problem in placing Pet in the skip-week sponsorship; if anything the problem is with the number of advertisers who'd like to grab the spot. How- first refusal, as customary, has been offered to S. C. Johnson & Son, which sponsors the other half, and indications are that Johnson will expand its tv budget to take every-week sponsorship on the show.

Esso's Bard Buy

Standard Oil of New Jersey, the riginal sponsor of WNTA-TV's "Play of the Week," is taking a second flyer in cultural programming with a 15-week Shakespeare series on WNEW-TV, N.Y., and WTTG, Washington. Company will sponsor "An Age of Kings," BBC-TV dramatizations of five of Shakespeare's historical dramas on the British monarchs, starting Jan. 10. Programs run an hour to 75 minutes, with initial exposure Tuesdays and repeats on Sundays.

Wrigley Back To Network TV; ABC $4,000,000 Splurge

Chicago, Nov. 22.

Wrigley Gum, through Erwin Wasey, Ruthrauff & Ryan, is getting back into network television with a $4,000,000 splurge on ABC-TV. It's a big coup for the web's central division office, not only because it comes this late in the season but also because it involves saturation quarter hours in daytime and minute participations in all nighttime and weekend availabilities.

Sponsor had dabbled only tokenly in netw rk in recent years (and alw with CBS-TV), with the greater part of its broadcast budget, via both EWR&R and the Arthur Meyerhoff agency, going into spot. On ABC, the scheduling of the participations is to be flexible, with the agency specifying only that the availabilities "fit the Wrigley commercial climate."

An unusual aspect of the purchase is that the sponsor is, for the most part, trusting ABC's judgment as to where the spots should fall, with the quarterly renewal of the contract hinging pretty much on how good that judgment is. The buy figures to give Wrigley a broad range of exposure, catching the hausfrau and juves by daytime, the intelligentsia with the unsponsored pubaffairs shows, and the males in weekend sports programs, including basketball, football, golf and bridge.

It's the Wrigley Co.'s first ride on ABC-TV, and clearly the purchase is inspired by that network's ward graph in the ratings. Apparently the gum company has be come unstuck from CBS radio and tv, which it has favored for more than 30 years. NBC scored a few weeks ago when it pulled the Doublemint radio shows away from CBS for "Monitor," starting next year.

PROGRAMMING ON A MONTHLY SKED

By BOB CHANDLER

An intriguing and even revolutionary plan to change the entire scheduling concept of television has been proposed as a means of getting the medium out of its progr mming rut.

The plan, brainchild of agent Freddie Fields, stated in its barest essence, would rid the medium of the "straightjacket" of its Monday-through-Sunday scheduling procedure, a holdover from radio, and instead expand to a monthly-calendar schedule, through which the same programs would hold forth on a given day of the month instead of a given day of the week.

"Wagon Train," for example, instead of being aired each Wednesday, would be aired the 12th of each month. Same for every other show on the air, with series reduced to a 12-shows-per-year basis but the number of series multiplied more than four-fold. The advantages of the plan, as expressed by its originator, are these:

1. Far more variety of programming for tv, with room for everything. "There's no reason why a Sid Caesar shouldn't be on the air just because 'there's no room for him.'" Under th plan, there would be.

2. Better quality in existing series, as well as new programming. "Nobody would quarrel with the fact that a show can be done more qualitatively in 12 episodes per year than in 39."

3. A better break for creative people and talent. They'd have a longer life—a program or personal service deal would extend over four years (including options) instead of 52 weeks. Tax-wise, talent's income benefits from the spread. Also, the one-a-month schedule leaves them free for other work, a problem that's prevented top talent from being available for series work.

4. A break for the advertiser—he can spread his money among four different shows over a monthly period, hitting different types of audience. The smaller advertiser can participate more. And even the advertiser with one show a month benefits, because audience makeup differs each night of the week, and a particular night's programming, say the 15th of each month, is on Wednesday night one month, Friday the next, Sunday the next, etc., giving the advertiser access to different unduplicated audiences.

5. Better break for public affairs and specials. These could be given a specific night of the month—the months with 31 days would have pubaffairs the 31st, and a web could also devote other specific nights to pubaffairs and specials.

Author of the plan was for years an MCA veep and now heads his wn shop, Freddie Fields Associates. He admits that "if I had another 20 years in this business, I'd pitch the plan to the networks, but I don't have the stature. If a Lew Wasserman went in with it, they'd pay some attention." Nevertheless, he feels it warrents serious consideration as a means of ex-

CBS-TV Workshop To Wind Up on Xmas Day

"CBS Television Workshop" will go off the air on Christmas Day, with its fate thereafter uncertain. Subject of its future comes up next month at the CBS-TV quarterly budget meetings, and if the web approves another 13 weeks of operation, show would start again in the spring.

However, in any case, the Workshop will be subject to quarterly review and appropriations hereafter. According to a CBS exec, the network had appropriated only a 13-week budget when the show returned to the air in September. Albert McCleery, show's producer, has been put to work on development of two other "projects," but the exec declined to identify the .

Sarnoff in Blast at Rival ABC At Annual Affil Conclave; An Up-Tempo Show With Few Gripes

Four items of the NBC affiliate conclave last week in New York gave the two-day affair the look of bullishness on the whole.

The upsurge of the NBC new and public affairs image, the newfound equilibrium of NBC Radio, the hotsy totsy daytime television picture and a strong, direct blast at rival ABC-TV's way of doing business seemed to be the key elements of the Sarnoff-Kintner-Bannister "show."

It would have seemed that some affils had come to town meaning to find fault but they left happily enough. Emphasis in most all of the public sessions of the convention at the Hotel Plaza was on news, news and more news—with public affairs a happy fillip. The high standards of NBC Election night coverage (i.e., Huntley & Brinkley and the RCA 501 computer, the only one of the three used by the webs that was never wrong) and the stanza's high ratings plus the fact, which in the last analysis may be the most important feature, that NBC had gone into that Tuesday evening SRO—all helped.

And since money talks, NBC-TV was in a position to boast the most productive daytime tv picture in years. All at once, as if NBC chairman Bob Sarnoff and prexy Bob Kintner had a line to someplace Higher Up, the dollars, combined with revealing new Nielsens and Colgate-Palmolive turned in favor the NBC pre-dark establishment. First off—and the fact was apparently dropped in the right places, although it's still not common knowledge—Colgate came back to NBC-TV daytime to roost with about $4,000,000 in annual billings. "Young Dr. Malone" and "From These Roots," two daytime NBC stanzas that looked like they'd never get off the ground ("Malone" was ready for surgery two-and-a-half months ago), suddenly came up Nielsen roses in the Oct. 11 report. These two, plus the new Jan Murray morning stanza, came up ahead in their respective time periods, which, more or less elevated NBC-TV's whole

What's Another Million?

"U.S. Steel Hour," which has scheduled an adaptation of a Nicholas Monsarrat story for April production on CBS-TV, had to change the title of the play to "The Big Take" from "$1,000,000 Ransom."

Reason is that the original is too close for comfort to the Jackie Gleason special, "The Million Dollar Incident," which also deals with kidnappers holding Gleason for $1,000,000 ransom.

NBC-TV's Daytime Colgate Windfall In CBS Defection

Colgate-Palmolive is on the verge of moving the remainder of its business in CBS-TV daytime programming over to NBC-TV daytime. NBC-TV now has four Colgate quarter-hours a week and with the pending biz will increase the tally to seven quarter-hours, which, on the full year, means approximately $4,000,000 in time and talent for the web.

To stimulate the shift, NBC-TV is offering Colgate a way to schedule 30-second announcements in the pre-dark lineup. This innovation, which CBS reportedly refused to make, is in addition to regular 60-second blurb inserts for Colgate.

The CBS-to-NBC maneuver follows by less than a year a similar move wherein Colgate moved some of its ther daytime biz over to NBC.

Part of the setup revolves around the probability that Colgate will remove from daytime advertising its long line of toiletries. All the daytime tv biz from Colgate is soon expected to consist solely of its household goods.

Even with the loss of daytime Colgate coin, CBS still has a large hunk of Colgate money at night—in Ed Sullivan, "Perry Mason" and "My Sister Eileen," plus participations elsewhere.

Perhaps to compensate for the NBC "30-second plan," CBS is said to have offered substantial discounts to Colgate if they bought into the sustaining "Full Circle."

Grand Central Station Originations for WCBS To Highlight New Sked

With the new CBS Radio schedule going into effect Monday (28) and consequently with substantial changes in its own local lineup, WCBS Radio, web's N.Y. flagship, is moving into Grand Central Station to originate some eight hours of programming a day next week to spotlight the changes.

Station will ensconce itself in a 20x30 foot plastic bubble placed near the main information booth starting Tuesday (29) and running through Friday (2). Jack Sterling will originate his morning show there, band and all, with Lanny Ross and Allen Gray dittoing for the noon hour and Martha Wright and Ken Banghart broadcasting from the station in the afternoon.

Pitch will stress the changes in the schedule plus the use of "live" programming as opposed to all-disk. Traffic through the station is estimated at 400,000 daily.

'Omnibus' Prowls N.Y. at Night

Robert Saudek and his "Omnibus" crew have been prowling the Gotham scene for nocturnal shooting in prepping the next "Omnibus" hour entry on NBC-TV. Titled "Night People," it goes on Dec. 10, in its Sunday 5 to 6 p.m. slot.

It'll be a Cooke's (Alistaire) tour of such New York after-dark attractions as Greenwich Village, the Fulton Fish Market, a Chinese theatre, a Police Precinct (126th St.), museums, Macy's, etc., designed to illustrate how a city comes alive at night.

Cooke is also writing the continuity. Filming will be wrapped up this week.

Another Sponsor Ride For 'Sing With Bing'

Insurance Cos. of North America will sponsor the annual "Sing With Bing" special on CBS Radio for the sixth consecutive Christmas on Dec. 24. Joining Crosby will be wife, Kathy Grant, Rosemary Clooney and Jose Ferrer and the Norman Luboff choir.

The 45-minute show, which this year will have an American-only format as contrasted to the international tinge of other years, will be written and produced by Bill Morrow and Sam Pierce and directed by Murdo McKenzie. N. W. Ayer agency repped the insurance outfits in the deal.

CBS-TV Preps for AFTRA Strike With Vintage Vidpix Strips for Daytime

An AFTRA strike would leave CBS-TV's nighttime schedule virtually unaffected, but oh that daytime! Tape repeats will fill in every live nighttime show on the web, but in daytime, the network is dragging up such weary vidpixers as "Brave Eagle," "Mama," "Life With Father" and "Schlitz Playhouse of Stars." The Schlitzers are skedded for two daytime strips and one Sunday half-hour, in fact.

Pretapings and repeats would cover "Candid Camera" and "The Witness." Taped repeats would cover other live shows, Ed Sullivan, Garry Moore, "To Tell the Truth," "I've Got a Secret," "What's My Line?" and others. Taped and filmed repeats cover Jack Benny and Red Skelton. News and live pubaffairs like "Face the Nation" and "Eyewitness to History" would continue live with news execs on camera.

But the daytime situation would constitute the biggest boon ever to CBS Films, the vidpix subsid which would supply the vidpix strips to the network. Only "Captain Kangaroo" and "House Party" would use tape repeats. Otherwise, it's "Schlitz" twice during the day, one a straight anthology, the other a mystery-anthology strip; "Brave Eagle," the Eve Arden Show, "Hey Jeannie," "Mama," "The Brothers," "Life With Father" and "Assignment Foreign Legion" filling in for the game shows and soap operas.

ITC Sets Up New Javelin Prod. Unit

Independent Television Corp. has formed a new division, Javelin Productions, which will handle the recently acquired assets of Heritage Productions.

New division on the sales end will be topped by Mel Schlank, formerly general sales manager of World-Wide TV. Schlank will report to Arthur (Skip) Steloff, general manager of the new division and former prexy of Heritage.

At the same time, two properties formerly distributed by World-Wide TV have been acquired for distribution by ITC. Two properties are "National Football League Presents" and "Women's Major League Bowling." Both are properties of Peter De Met Productions.

Additional acquisitions will mean an expansion in the division's sales force. Javelin Productions plans to divide the markets into five sales regions, each headed by a regional sales exec.

Heritage properties to be marketed by Javelin include "Campy's Corner," featuring Roy Campanella; "Golf Tips of the Day," featuring Dow Finsterwald; and the Leo Durocher starrer, "Magic Moments in Sports."

James Mason Gets Setback in Slander Action Against NTA

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

James Mason has lost a major point, anyway, in his two-year-old slander suit against National Telefilm Associates, when L.A. Superior Court Judge Gordon Files ruled (17) that the controversial letter attributed to Mort Abrahams was not defamatory.

Letter, printed in the London Daily Express, had said (inter alia) that Mason had asked a clause in his contract permitting him to return from England to U.S. in case of war. He was to have starred in NTA's "Third Man," which eventually starred Michael Rennie. British press made much of the letter.

Judge Files also gave Mason's attorney, Paul Caruso, 20 days in which to file an amended (new) complaint on the other causes of action, involving statements allegedly made by Oliver Unger and Bert Kleiner to reporters.

Technically, the suit is not being tried at this point but being prepared for trial; i.e., O'Melveny & Myers, NTA's attorney, is raising questions of law via demurrers. In granting defendants' demurrer denying legal weight of the Abrahams' letter (whether he actually wrote it or not), Judge Files removed a major pillar from the case.

Mex Union Asks Ban on TV Shows Dubbed Elsewhere

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

The Mexican Union of Film Workers has formally asked the Film Bureau to deny exhibition permits in Mexico for all short subjects and feature lengths released over television facilities, if Spanish dubbing is done elsewhere than in Mexico.

Carlos Tinoco, union official, specifically asked that all future dubbing should be realized in the republic, and that union technical personnel could "easily" undertake this work.

While quite a number of American shows are dubbed in Mexican laboratories and studios there is lively competition from Spain, Puerto Rico and other countries where dubbing fees are lower than prevailing rates here. The popular "Perry Mason" show is among those dubbed outside of Mexico.

Current union drive hopes to build up work hours for technicians and actors engaged in dubbing. There is a slight "open door" in Tinoco's remarks asking for prohibition of exhibition of "short subject and feature films for tv and commercial motion pictures." The union leader would not expand on this further, but there is a standing official ban against import of dubbed features for theatrical exhibition in Mexico.

Joe Stein's New Deal

Joe Stein, pacted by MGM-TV and who recently completed the three episodes of "Harry's Girls," has been signed by Arthur Freed to do the screenplay of "The Day Before Spring."

Producer-director Ralph Levy is now completing final assembly of "Harry's Girls," developed by Alan Jay Lerner and Stein.

'Iceman's' Whopping Arbitron

Part One of "The Iceman Cometh" on WNTA-TV, Newark-N. Y., was one of the highest rated shows in the N. Y. market, achieving a total Arbitron of 31.3. The total rating was for the seven exposures, under multiple telecasting plan in the N. Y. market of "The Play of The Week." Of interest, too, was that the starting time for "Iceman" was moved up to 10.30 p.m. because of the mature nature of the outing.

On the basis of the 31.3 Arbitron, it was estimated that the play was viewed in 1,430,000 homes and by 2,860,000 people. The 31.3 for "Iceman" put the outing among the top ten rated programs in the market. Total rating of "Iceman" was ninth in the Arbitron scale for N. Y. that week, with top "Gunsmoke" achieving a 39.0 for that one Saturday night exposure. "Iceman" was the highest rated "Play of The Week" outing this season and the second highest for the dramatic showcase. Tops to date was last season's "Lullaby" with a 36.7 Arbitron. (Station, according to v.p. Ted Cott, has received only about five complaints about the language, or about anything else in the play.)

Sir Robert Fraser Holds No Truck With Film Quotas for British TV

London, Nov. 22.

The proposal by the British film producer organizations that there might be a quota for vidpix on tv, analogous to the films quota imposed on cinema theatres, is rated as "unwelcome" by Sir Robert Fraser, director-general of the Independent Television Authority which runs Britain's commercial tv setup. Sir Robert, who was answering VARIETY questions at a press conference called to receive ITA's annual report and accounts for 1959-60, declared that he didn't like quotas anyway, couldn't see that there could be any distinction between filmed, taped and live material to warrant this particular measure, and indicated that it wasn't any concern of his that the proposed quota was intended to ensure employment in British studios. "On the whole," he added, "television hasn't been a bad ally of cinema film production: there have been times when there has been as much direct production for tv going on in the studios as there has been production of films for the cinemas."

Which comments were in keeping with the trenchant tone adopted by Sir Robert reviewing the year, general tenor being that ITA was well satisfied with commercial tv and to blazes with critics. He picked out for cordial reference drama ("1960 has so far been its Golden Year"), documentaries, "superb" school programs, and others. He asked "Are the entertainment programs seriously at fault?", self-answering with: "Is there anything wrong with 'Maverick' or 'Cimarron City', with 'No Hiding Place' or the Saturday Spectacular or the Palladium Show, or 'Bootsie and Snudge,' 'Double Your Money,' or 'Criss Cross Quiz,' or 'Cool For Cats,' or 'Fury,' or 'Annie Oakley,' or 'Huckleberry Hound,' or 'Emergency-Ward 10,' or with that sweet and gentle 'Small Time,' the most shining little program in all television? It will be hard to persuade viewers so, who put most of them in the Top Ten week after week."

4 Star's Longterm Friedberg Pact

Billy Friedberg, comedy scripter and former head writer of the "Phil Silvers Show," has signed longterm deal with Four Star Films as producer-writer. Friedberg deal appears to be in line with Four Star's policy of coralling comedy scripters in relatively longterm pacts.

Agreements extending to the spring of '61, for example, already have been set for such comedy writers as Mel Tolkin, Mel Diamond, Mike Morris, Max Wilk and Dave Schwartz. Four Stars policy seems to be dictated by the growing competition among producers for comedy scripters.

Prior to the Four Star deal, negotiated by Frank Cooper Associates, Friedberg's Bonnaker Productions delivered to CBS-TV the comedy pilot, "The Drumbeaters." Pilot, directed by George Marshall, stars Pat Harrington Jr.

Friedberg is producing "Peter Loves Mary" and writing the Tom Ewell show as his initial Four Star assignments.

Tape 'New Faces' Before Live Aud

For the first time, "The Play of The Week" produced a show before an audience. The vehicle was "Highlights of New Faces," featuring what is considered the best of Leonard Sillman's "New Faces," which had Broadway productions in '52 and '60.

The vidtaping before an audience took place Sunday (20) and Monday (21) nights. Invited to attend were time-buyers and other members of the industry. It was thought that the musical revue would play better before a "live" audience. "Highlights of New Faces," the first musical of the season for "The Play of the Week," will be telecast the week of Nov. 28 on WNTA-TV, Newark-N. Y.

Starred in the revue are Ronny Graham, Paul Lynde, Robert Clary and Alice Ghostley, Inga Swenson, June Carroll and Virginia De Luce, all of whom appeared in the Broadway production.

Good Idea, Anyway

That cross-breeding of "Lassi" and "Dennis the Menace" idea for a one-hour special has gone kaput. What caused the demise of the project was the revelation, upon close investigation, that 61 stations do not carry the shows back to back.

The whole premise of the project was the back to back slotting of the shows on CBS-TV Sundays from 7 to 8 p.m. With that premise, having a one-hour show melding all the characters of "Lassie" and "Dennis" and the same sponsors wouldn't cause any major problems. But when it was found that 61 stations don't carry the show back-to-back, the idea collapsed.

HARDLY A NEW SYNDIE ENTRY

What's With That Option Time?

Washington, Nov. 22.

Television networks let the deadline pass without challenging the half-hour cutback in option time in federal court. But Los Angeles' KTTV-TV, the Times-Mirror independent station, petitioned the U. S. Court of Appeals here to knock out option time altogether. (Issue, of course, is of paramount importance to syndicators and stations seeking program placements.)

Robert Cutler, Washington attorney who also represents the San Francisco Chronicle in its tv legal battles with NBC, filed the KTTV petition for a review of the Federal Communications Commission's Sept. 16 order reducing option time from three to two-and-one-half hours, effective Jan. 1. His brief declared that option time is a violation of U. S. antitrust laws and, therefore, FCC rules sanctioning any option time are illegal.

The webs no doubt will attempt to intervene in the KTTV suit, which probably won't be heard by the three-judge court until next summer. Meanwhile, the Sept. 16 order goes into force Jan. 1.

Of greatest immediate urgency for the networks is finding out the attitude of the new Justice Dept. hierarchy of the Kennedy Administration toward option time. That promises to be a key factor in the court case. KTTV sued both the Justice Dept. and the FCC.

The outgoing Antitrust Division chief at the Dept., Robert A. Bicks, holds option time to be a per se antitrust violation. But Bicks will yield his job to a Democrat around Jan. 20, the day President-Elect John F. Kennedy takes control.

Option time is one of the network's most nervous Washington situations, and they could certainly use the support of the new Administration's Justice Dept. The FCC situation remains shaky at best. Three out of 7 Commissioners voted on Sept. 16—date of the latest order to kill option time. Of the four who made up the majority and ruled in favor of option time, although cutting it by 30 minutes, only three will remain on the Commission. A 3-3 split will result. The fourth member of the majority, Charles King, a Republican who hasn't been confirmed and will go off FCC after President-Elect Kennedy picks his Democratic successor and gets him confirmed.

The networks decided against fighting the Sept. 16 FCC order in court for the simple reason they didn't think they could win. To be able to regain the 30 minutes FCC took away from them, they would have to prove legally that FCC had acted unreasonably. That would be difficult, if not impossible, to establish legally.

KTTV filed its suit on the last day possible to challenge the Sept. 26 order.

SCARCITY IS WORST IN YEARS

Syndication has hit the bottom of the barrel in terms of the number of new, first-runners being offered to the market either for a winter or spring start.

Only syndie house set to come up with a new winter entry is Ziv-UA. Others are either in the iffy category, or riding with off-network properties, or out of the race entirely until the new fall season.

The dearth of new first-runners are blamed on a variety of reasons, but whatever the causes, the scarcity is the worst in years. It comes, too, at a strange interlude in broadcasting annals.

The Federal Communications Commission's ruling cutting network option time from three to two-and-a-half hours daily in each broadcast segment is supposed to take effect January. The ruling, if effectuated, holds the possibility of freeing hundreds of markets for syndie entries.

Today's strange interlude is this: It's felt that unless syndicators themselves sell affil stations to take advantage of the FCC ruling, little, if any, change is expected in the network program supply service. Forecast that networks will change their affil agreements to abide with the FCC ruling, but the web program feeds will continue just about as much as today. An affil can elect to take more than the two-and-a-half hour network option time program service, leaving the syndicator as much out in the cold as ever.

But instead of meeting this situation with a quantity of product to lure stations to take the syndie programming route, there's a scarcity of new, first-run product. It's hard to be convincing in such a set of circumstances. Bid to affils to collect 100% of ad revenues flowing from local programming, as opposed to about 30% from network programming, is quite academic if the scarcity in the syndie market is so pronounced.

Screen Gems is the only major syndie house in the "iffy" category, as to introing a new, first-runner in the near future. Those out of the new, first-run derby include Independent Television Corp., CBS Films, California National Productions, et al. (ITC will have the off-network "Broken Arrow" entry; CBS Films off-network cartoon "Heckle & Jeckle.")

It's not all bleak, although the

Ziv-UA the Exception

Ziv-UA, in the midst of the current bearish syndie market, is continuing its policy of at least six first-runners a year. Outfit now is out selling "Miami Undercover" and fourth year production of "Sea Hunt."

A fresh, first-runner is slated for winter and spring selling. There have been rumbles of some Ziv-UA sales axings, but a company exec denied this, contending there has been some reshuffling of sales personnel. Despite the holdback attitude of other outfits, Ziv-UA remains bullish on its company's prospects.

General Toy & WABC-TV Hassle Over 'Tom Sawyer' Holiday Pic

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Tom Sawyer had his troubles, but how was he to know that he would be the fave of picture makers and cause havoc in the tv market place. Mark Twain's little boy was world's apart from the electronic age, although he did have glimpses of grownup business practices.

What happened in the N. Y. tv market would have sent poor Tom's head spinning. Big spender General Toy, via Webb Associates, wanted a series of pix specials for the holidays. According to General Toy prez Saul Robins, he first approached WABC-TV, which had acquired Selznick's "Adventures of Tom Sawyer," among other desired pix, and tried to make a deal for the Thanksgiving-Christmas holidays. Robins said negotiations for sole sponsorship of pix on WABC-TV broke down when the ABC-TV N. Y. flagship couldn't clear the desired Sunday afternoon periods.

So General Toy and Webb Associates took their idea and bankroll over to WCBS-TV, which among other pix, had Paramount's "Tom Sawyer." A deal with WCBS-TV for single sponsorship of kidult family classics was signed.

Lo and behold, General Toy, Robins said, hit the ceiling when WABC-TV not only put on the Selznik pic a week before the Paramount pic, but sold the pic to a competitor of General Toy. Parker Bros. Games was the single sponsor for the WABC-TV telecast, a week before Saturday's (19) WCBS-TV's "Sawyer" telecast.

General Toy didn't take the matter lightly. It had spent big sums in promoting the WCBS-TV "Sawyer" telecast, as a "first" in the market, making tie-ins with schools and dealers. The toy company threatened to pull back the spot money allotted to WABC-TV, but according to Robins, the ABC-TV flagship wouldn't budge. In the midst of the confusion about the two "Sawyers," Robins decided to let things be. "We need the extra holiday exposure," he said, "and if I pulled out it would be a case of biting my nose to spite my face."

Robins said he had to answer to

Studebaker-Lark $3,000,000 Outlay On 'Mr. Ed' Series

Studebaker-Lark's syndie sponsorship of the situation comedy "Mr. Ed," announced earlier this year, is now set for 109 stations and will cast the car company and dealers $3,000,000.

The $3,000,000 appropriation is more than the company's 1961 national ad budget for newspapers, magazines, radio, billboards and other media.

Co-op bankrolling deal will include about 2,000 dealers and all time purchases, says the company, will be made at the national rate via the New York office of D'Arcy ad agency.

Contracts will cover 26 weeks beginning in January '61. Schedules will, wherever possible, cover the 7 to 8 p.m. time period.

"Mr. Ed" stars Alan Young with Al Simon as exec producer. Shouting began last week in Hollywood.

WM. MORRIS ASKS % ON BOB CUMMINGS

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

William Morris Agency has filed suit in Superior Court against two Paul Henning corporations alleging agency has right to 10% of companies' profits on "Bob Cummings Show," estimated at approximated $70,000. Named were the Henning Corp. and Hen-Ten Corp., through which Henning is said be joint venturer with Cummings in show.

Morris Figures its supposed cut in Hennings' profits at $70,000, but asks for accounting to determine exact amount. Estimate thus places Henning's share in $700,000 category, and general earnings for sh w in millions. Now in reruns on ABC daytime hours, show ran five seasons alternately on NBC, CBS prime time.

'International Zone' As New UN Series

U.S. Broadcasters Committee for the United Nations is doing a new film series called "International Zone." First of the 13 half-hours will be offered in the middle of December and then there will be a new one approximately every third week.

"Zone" succeeds "Dateline UN," stanza done two years via the Broadcasters Committee, which finances the productions, Alistair Cooke will serve as commentator and Westinghouse's national program manager Bill Kaland is chairman of the program committee. New show will be an examination of "famous and little known personalities" working in the United Nations.

'Our Town' As Telepix Series

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Filmaster has acquired television rights to Thornton Wilder's "Our Town" and plans to turn the Pulitzer Prize winner into a half-hour series. John Tucker Battle is scripting the pilot, with Nat Perrin, v.p. in charge of production at the company, to produce the initialler in January.

Series would be aimed at network telecast only. It's the first major acquisition for Filmaster in its new role as a packager-producer. Heretofore, company has concentrated on below-the-line production for other packagers, along with commercial and industrial production.

Rights were acquired from Banner Films, the Sy Weintraub-owned company, which will continue to own a small participation in the series. Weintraub got "Our Town" rights when he bought out Sol Lesser Productions, and at one point planned his own series based on the play, with Jerry Stagg as producer. Since then, however, Weintraub has kept to theatrical production, and assigned "Our Town" to Banner, his vidpix distribution company.

Europe Looms as 'Healthy Market' For Telepix, Sez Bill Fineshriber

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Nov. 22.

William Fineshriber, vice president in charge of television for Motion Picture Export Assn., has just wound up a three-week fact-finding trip through England, France, Italy and Germany with the feeling that the European countries will provide a "very healthy market" for the American film-makers' products in their new television developments. (Fineshriber is former CBS, Mutual NBC and Screen Gem —Ed.).

"There are of course various problems with th local European industries planning to protect their own products by taking measures against foreign imports that might flood the market. But we don't want to flood it. We want to establish a normal healthy growth pattern for our products on the European television screens—and I feel it will be possible," Fineshriber said.

"MPEA has been interested in television—at home and abroad—for two and a half years from the angle of looking into the aspects that would be of interest to the member companies," he pointed out.

WPIX Kiddie Strip Peak Arbitron

Kiddie strip on WPIX, N.Y., from 4 to 7 p.m. daily, is the top rated programming bloc in the market, according to Arbitron ratings, vering the Oct. 30 to Nov 12 period.

Monday through Friday's 4 to 7 p.m. Arbitron average gives WPIX a 10.9 rating, with WCBS-TV the closest competetor with a 7.8. In its Sunday through Saturday tabulation, WPIX for the 4 to 7 p.m. period again leads the field with a 10.4 average. WCBS-TV, according to Arbitron, second for the 4 to 7 p.m. period with a 7.0.

In the kiddie programming field, due to the outcry against blood and violence, shows and cartoons are being pitched on the basis of their "non-violent" character.

Latest example is Interstate Television's "Snip and Snap" cartoon series, created for tv by Halas and Batchelor, who did the film adaptation of George Orwell's "Animal Farm." Series includes "Top Dogs" which won first prize for children's films at the 1960 International Film Festival at Venice. Series is referred to by Interstate as the "non-violent world of 'Snip and Snap.'" but the television audience votes every night..

One day, come every four years, the electorate turns out to choose its President—and, come that same night, sits down to see how it turned out.

In doing so last week, the vote for the most election viewing went, convincingly, to Network Z. (It's smart politics not to name your opponent.)

Now, while in the credit-where-it's-due department, let us not forget that the television audience votes every night. And dial twisting, like lever pulling, can shift the vote from minute to minute.

By Popular Majority

That the dial twisters have, from recent week to week, shifted to ABC is now a matter of simple, available record.

So, too, went the voting for the week ending November 13. As the chart shows, this Nielsen TV Report* gives ABC a clear lead in audience. Despite, we repeat, Network Z's victory on Tuesday night.

	Rating Entire Week Ending Nov. 13	Rating Entire Week Excluding Election Night
ABC-TV	19.4	20.6
NET Z	17.9	15.7

*Source: 24 Market Nielsen TV Report, week ending Nov. 13, 1960, Average Audience. Sun. 6:30-11 P.M., Mon.-Sat. 7:30-11 P.M.

By nights of the week, if that's your gauge, ABC led four times (Sunday, Monday, Thursday, Friday). Net Z took Tuesday (Election Night) and Wednesday.

The Margin Grows

What happens when you look at the numbers uncluttered by the complication of election preemptions? When you base your rating on how the networks fared for the five nights following the Election Extravaganza? The margin grows bigger: ABC leads with 20.5... Net Y is second with 18.2... Net Z last with 16.4. (Actually this is a bigger rating for ABC than we rolled up for the same five nights of the previous pre-election week.)

Enough figures. Whether your measuring standards are broad or narrow in gauge, one truth emerges unchallenged. Where the 3 networks compete on an equal facilities basis,* where the dial twister can dial in all 3 networks, most of the time he dials in ABC.

Heritage Recalling

This, despite any pious pronouncements to the contrary, did not happen by laurel resting or heritage recalling. It was achieved by hard work, not hard words. By a belief in pioneering new programming patterns, by trend-setting, not trend-spotting. By recognizing that the dial twisters hold the voting and veto-ing power. By knowing that you have to be there with the right new twist when they start twisting the dials.

Significant case in point: We were there first with the Westerns . . . and then, with the right new twist in Westerns: Maverick. Today, with the noble declarations about full range programming obligations being tossed about, it is enlightening to note that Network Z leads in the number of Westerns on the air (just as it trails in audience).

This, of course, is their privilege. We're off pioneering again. This time, trend-setting in completely new television country with The Flintstones . . . TV's first adult cartoon series...and TV's top-rated show among all new entries this season.

Coming Events

In the public service area, similar pioneering strides are in evidence. There is television's most ambitious visual project—Winston Churchill: The Valiant Years . . . 26 chapters of living history. There is also a vital departure in documenting current events, co-produced with Time Inc., leading off with Yanki—No!... a non-punch-pulling exposition of the coming showdown in Latin America.

If any or all of this comes as news to you, we'll be pleased to fill in the details. For the moment, suffice it to say we are where we are because of what we are . . . a forward-moving network alive to the changing moves of the dial twisters.

How else can a network find and keep favor with them?

Mohawk's Lavish Carpet Spread In Holiday Return as TV Sponsor —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

It's been about 10 years since the jingle lyric "Carpets from the looms of Mohawk" boomed into the nation's livingrooms. There'll be a few bars of the melody, but no sentimental lyricizing of the commercial museum piece tomorrow (24) when Mohawk Carpets returns to tv as sponsor of NBC-TV's Thanksgiving special, "There's No Place Like Home," at 5.30 p.m.

One of the real vets of web tv, Mohawk first sponsored a dinner hour show featuring the songs of Roberta Quinlan and Morton Downey in 1946. Except for plugs via daytime quizzers with Mohawk carpets as prizes, company has spread its ad budget in women's service and shelter mags and Life for the last 10 years. Last video bankrolling was the "Mohawk Showcase" in the very early '50's.

The tele production, plus nationwide merchandising contest with 4,000 stores taking part, is costing the company $500,000. Strategy behind the plunge, as worked out by Mohawk ad manager Herbert Jay and the company's agency, Maxon, is to strike during a crest season for carpet sales. Best months are April-May and September-November. Contest will have carpets as prizes, natch, and entries are picked up in store rug departments.

"No Place Like Home" features Jose Ferrer, Rosemary Clooney, Dick Van Dyke and comedienne Carol Burnett in skits and production numbers spoofing suburban home life, home buying and improvement and so on.

So far as continued use of tv is concerned, there'll be no more spending this year by Mohawk, and, it's "wait and see" on results this time out as regards next season.

For the People

Neil McElroy, Procter & Gamble chairman and former U. S. Secretary of Defense, last night (22) received the Advertising Council's pubservice award that yearly honors an "American businessman who has contributed notably to the welfare of his country and his fellow citizens."

In accepting the award at the Council's annual dinner in the Plaza hotel, McElroy spoke on the need to improve the public's attitude and policies toward government officials.

Impressively Dull

National Audience Board's survey of Chrysler commercials on the Sept. 28 "Astaire Time" NBC-TV special showed that 64.6% of the respondents found the blurbs "increased my interest in the product" while, paradoxically, only 46.6% found them entertaining, and only 40% felt they were imaginative.

The sample of NAB civic and community leaders returned 440 ballots from 14 states.

The blurbs received majority endorsement on four other counts: 96.5% found them in good taste; 87% felt they were informative and effective; 86.1% said they were believable; and more than 80% said they had "eye appeal."

As for a querry concerning accuracy of copy, more than 50% had no opinion. Leo Burnett agency, Chicago, handles Chrysler.

Thawed Out Model

Studio Associates photog Constantin Joffe last week demonstrated for the press a "Sequence Camera" which he says frees the cameraman and unfreezes the models for more natural ad-pix posing.

With model Rosalie Gronan (Ford agency) sudsing up with Dial soap under the shower, Joffe fired away at a rate of up to 20 pictures a second while wondering free behind the camera.

Result was a string of contact proofs that not only caught the model in natural action, but also captured each drop of water with crystal clarity.

Studio Assoc.'s figures the method is applicable to storyboard creation as well as sharper, more natural still photo work.

Wolff's Beep Scoop

Washington, Nov. 22.

Some adroit beep-a-phone manipulation was said to have given sportcaster Bob Wolff a neat beat on WWDC here.

The story was Thursday's (17) American League announcement of a new franchise for the capital, replacing the vacating Washington Senators. Wolff, in N.Y. covering for WWDC, made a deal with the accounting department of the Savoy Hilton Hotel for the use of its phone. Wolff also tied up the sole phone outside the press conference room. Result was a running account of the news as it broke via beep-a-phone.

With the Station Reps

Tv spot revenues are off for the summer and early fall months, will probably reflect a new low when the July-August totals are in. Reason: the political conventions, campaigning and the electio

According to a station exec, ad agencies generally refused to take make-goods on the multitude of spots that were cancelled or preempted by the special political coverage. They also refused to allow stations to run spots during the conventions coverage for fear of associating products with parties. In several cases, when agencies were notified of spot-time preemption, flights of three to six weeks were likely to be cancelled.

The conventions also caused endless cancellations via overtime. Appearance of Mamie and president Eisenhower cut through two prime-time chain breaks, and nobody was about to cut off the president for blurbs.

The station exec said the convention coverage cost his outlet more than $20,000, and he'd heard of losses as high as $37,000—and in relatively modest markets.

One of the reasons for the all-out effort on special pickups throughout the campaigning, and acquiescence to party preemptions of valuable spot time was concern over the political coverage report each station must file in Washington early next month. There were stations, for instance, that delayed the debates, but only a handful that didn't carry all four.

Advice on the Spot

Leo Burnett's media veepee Thomas A. Wright Jr., proposed a plan to resolve tv spot billing discrepancies at last week's annual Television Bureau of Advertising meeting in New York.

Four major problems, he said, are long-delayed billings, negotiating credit refunds or make-goods, correcting invoices imporperly prepared and properly identifying billing by brand.

Resolving long-delayed billings, said Wright, depends on "communication between the proper parties—'We want the stations to tell us the name of the business manager so we can detail to him the nature of the discrepancy and get an answer from him."

Credit refunds or make-goods, he said, should be negotiated via station advisement within 24 hours of a new time slot.

On incorrect invoices, he said his agency would like to be assured of 48-hour service.

Properly identifying billing by brand, he said, "is bound to exist under blanket contract systems covering multiple brands unless the agency is careful to clearly indicate the identification of individual brands and to list the specific spots for each schedule so that brand names rather than the parent company titles can be listed on rogram logs and routine sheets.

FCC Challenging NBC's Restricting Shows to Affils

Washington, Nov. 22.

Federal Communications Commission has challenged an NBC policy of refusing grants of rebroadcast authority in communities where there is an NBC affiliate. Such a policy, FCC said, appears to run counter to the bar against territorial exclusivity agreements contained in the Chain Broadcasting Rules.

The Commission took the position after an inquiry into the withdrawal by KHQ-TV, NBC's Spokane affiliate, of consent for Lewiston, Idaho, translator station to rebroadcast its programs. The translator is operated by Orchards Community Television Assn.

In a letter to NBC, KHQ-TV and KLEW-TV, NBC affiliate in Lewiston, FCC said it was advised that withdrawal of the rebroadcast consent was based on NBC's interpretation of the "first refusal" clause in its affiliation agreement with KLEW-TV.

Moreover, the Commission continued, its staffers were told that NBC will, as a matter of policy, hold back approval of a rebroadcast grant any community served by an affiliate regardless of whether the affiliate is basic or secondary or whether it's carrying all or only part of the network progra

Such interpretation of its affiliation agreement, FCC said, "appears to place it beyond the bounds" of the Chain Broadcasting prohibition against affiliation arrangements preventing other stations in an area from carrying network programs passed up by the affiliate.

Application of the NBC policy, FCC said, would prevent a new tv station which might be licensed in Lewiston from carrying any NBC program, even though KLEW-TV did not. Also, if the other networks were to follow suit, KLEW-TV would be the sole outlet for network programs in the Lewiston area, and the public would be deprived of many programs presently available over translator and booster facilities.

Asking NBC and the two affiliates for comments, the Commission said: "Since this interpretation and policy relates to a provision which appears to be standard in all NBC affiliation agreements, its impact far transcends the local situation (in Lewiston)."

Before proceeding any further in the matter, the Commission said it wanted to consider the views of all parties involved in the dispute.

CANADA SETS UP NEW RADIO RULES

Ottawa, Nov. 22.

Radio broadcasting in Canada is due for a shuffle under new regulations proposed by the Board of Broadcast Governors. BBG will huddle in Ottawa Nov. 29 to get opinions and comments from interested groups. The board said its new rules will be designed to limit promotional contests, change the timing of commercials, increase the Canadian content of programs and "induce greater program choice for listeners."

After specific amendments suggested at the Nov. 29 hearing, a second meeting will be called to work over the amended regulations before they become law.

He'll be responsible for developing (a) Canadian live talent (MCA's top Canadian names are Wayne & Shuster); (b) live tv programming, packaging and production (c) sale and distribution of feature and syndicated films.

TV's (Bill) Monroe Doctrine

By GEORGE ROSEN

New Orleans, Nov. 22.

Down here where the school desegregation issue has been making Page One national headlines, there's another exciting story going on—one that has strictly to do with broadcasting.

The WDSU performance as an opinion maker, with its seven-times-a-day editorial expression (twice on tv, five times on radio) is, to put it mildly, quite unique in the whole range of broadcast editorializing. What's been happening in the past 10 days or so is perhaps without precedent; since, in fact, WDSU, on the eve of school integration in New Orleans, was so bold as to throw its weight in favor of token integration as the alternative to violence, hatred and closing of schools.

The resultant overtones and reverberations have established beyond doubt the station's new and pr inent status in the community. WDSU's impact on the community has been tremendous, perhaps at this point even transcending the only other editorial voice here in a monopolistic newspaper town that's served by the Times-Picayune and the T-P-owned New Orleans States-Item.

It was back in September, 1958, on the very day that New Orleans to all intents became a one-newspaper town with the acquisition of the Item by the Times-Picayune, that WDSU decided to raise its own voice daily, let the chips (and local issues) fall where they will—and invariably they have been falling with controversial thuds at the opposite end of the Times-Picayune stand. (Indeed, in the more recent period of the desegregation issue, the gradual moderation in tone of the Times-Picayune editorials from its onetime solid anti-integration position is attributed by many to the growing influence and audience of the WDSU on-the-air espousals).

There is no pat yardstick for determining this sphere of influence, but best estimates are that the twice-daily tv editorials (heard in such peak news periods as 5:55 p.m. and 11:10 p.m.) have five to 10 times the circulation as the newspapership readership.

Success of the WDSU editorial stance can be laid (1) to the station's willingness to say something that's positive; (2) the ability to give it wide circulation; (3) the fact that it has the guts to go out on a limb, once convinced that it's in the right. These convictions get a daily going over at a morning editorial conference between Edgar Stern, president of the company; Lou Reed, general manager (both of whom, along with ex-general manager Bob Swezey, now a freewheeling emissary for the Secretary of Commerce) incepted the editorial pattern, and Bill Monroe, sparkplug of the station's news department.

No Stranger To Opi

Monroe is no stranger when it comes to trespassing in editorial pastures. For five years he was chief editorial writer of the Item, and it's his personal conviction today that tv, with proper know-how and dedication, can do a far more persuasive and telling job in enlightening a community.

As the on-camera spokesman for WDSU-TV, Monroe is the guy who takes the brickbats and the hosannahs. The WDSU audience response from the recent series on integration testifies to the overwhelming wallop they're packing—responses ranging from poisonous letters and telephonic threats of bodily harm to encomiums from high civic, state and community leaders lauding a "voice of sanity that helps revive faith in human nature." For Monroe himself, it's now become more than a job; over and above the day-to-day excitement engendered by the editorials, he sees a new respect, admiration and dimension for a new industry coming to life.

These are no casual off-the-top-of-the-head editorials; they're sincere, thoughtful, well-researched and documented essays in the best editorial page tradition, with Monroe staffing his news dept. with a fulltime editorial assistant and researcher. Thus, when he goes into battle, he knows whereof he speaks. To balance the scorecard, he'll invariably extend an invitation to someone representing "the other side" to appear in rebuttal. There's a continuing respect for the equal time provision. (Since the integration issue has been going full blast, Monroe has repeatedly sought Gov. Jimmie Davis' appearance. Davis has never bothered to answer him.)

The WDSU editorials range far and wide, but the major accent is on the New Orleans parish scene. It can be critical of Senators and Congressmen, of state and local administration practices, and only recently went on a tirade against the Times-Picayune itself for its dropping of the Joe Alsop and Walter Lippmann columns. That one got a whopping response.

Initially there were fears that slotting the twice-daily editorials immediately adjacent to sponsored news shows in the late afternoon and late night, would create client sensitivity. How would an Esso respond to such back-to-back treatment? The fact is that Esso not only doesn't mind, but actually takes pride in the fact that some of the prestige rubs off on its own sponsored news slot. And as for WDSU, its Bill Monroe doctrine of "no sacred cows and no pulling of punches" has won the station a deep and enviable respect.

CBC Prez Defends Regime In Blast At 'Propaganda'

Montreal, Nov. 22.

"Deliberately planted propaganda" and "dangerous statements" continue to threaten and discredit the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. in the eyes of the tax-paying public is the opinion of J. Alphonse Ouimet, president of the CBC.

Speaking at the Rotary Club here in Montreal, Ouimet listed some of the statements which are made with endless repetition: The CBC is too expensive; Canada can't afford it; it is wasteful and inefficient; its expenditures are out of control; private enterprise could provide the same service free.

According to Ouimet the CBC spent $90,000,000 last year, $52,000,000 from public funds and $38,000,000 for commercial sources. To the charges of "too expensive" he listed 14 services CBC supplies to listeners and viewers including two complete but distinct broadcasting services, one in English and the other in French and programs to the Armed Forces overseas.

As to investigation, Ouimet pointed out that in the last 30 years, there had been a major investigation by a Royal Commission or a Parliamentary committee every 21 months. The CBC has never had a deficit and last year the corporation exceeded its commercial sales target of $4,000,000 and spent $2,000,000 less than its Federal grant. On a per capita basis the CBC costs less than one-and-half cents a day to operate.

WRNW's Hi-Fi Pattern

WRNW, new suburban FM'er in Mt. Kisco, N.Y., has begun operations as a hi-fi, concert music operation, with a 6 a.m.-to-midnight schedule. Station is owned by Incorporated Meliphony Inc., and headed by prexy William F. McCarren.

Edward Dembert is general manager and Dean Corse program manager.

John Crosby Setting WNEW-TV Deal For Sun. Nite Panel Show

John Crosby and Metropolitan Broadcasting Co. are near agreement for the N.Y. Herald Tribune (and syndicated) columnist to host a one-hour Sunday night panel show on Met's WNEW, N.Y. indie starting after the first of the year. Show would probably be telecast also on Met's other stations, starting with WTTG, Washington.

Met and Crosby are in agreement on format and other terms, but contracts are still to be signed. Show would utilize Crosby as host and discussion leader, with two or three guests on the panel, and would constitute an "extension" of his new column, which is no longer limited to television. He'd discuss anything he likes. Possibility is he'll use a studio audience, with questions from the floor in addition to the panel discussion.

An audition tape will be cut either late next month or early in January. Station hasn't yet decided on a timeslot, but is considering 9-10 on Sundays, just ahead of David Susskind's "Open End," which airs 10-to-closing on WNTA-TV, N.Y.

WCAU's Philly Rumble

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.

A simulated teenage rumble, a mob of youngsters tearing up a schoolroom and other symbols of juvenile delinquency are being staged on Philadelphia's streets by WCAU-TV there for "Demons on the Streets," documentary on teen gangs which the station is producing.

For the rumble, the station got 100 volunteers from St. Martha's Settlement Home for filming next Sunday (27) on the corner of Seventh & South Sts. Already on film is a sequence in which 25 youngsters literally demolished a real school room, along with a sandwich shop sequence that drew large crowds and a call to the police. Documentary is being done with police cooperation, latter seeing that things don't get too realistic.

TV Sked Finalized For Frisco Giants; Nix Matty Feevee

San Francisco, Nov. 22.

Frisco Giants will televise 11 ball games played against the Dodgers in Los Angeles to the Frisco area next year.

Giants' president Horace Stoneham disclosed reversal of tv policy—previously Matty Fox's Tollvision had had inside track — on his return from Japan last week. Giants had been under intense pressure to televise out-of-town games since close of last baseball season.

Sponsor, with whom one-year contracts already been signed, will be Falstaff Brewing Co., which will name Frisco channel to carry the telecasts.

Current speculation is that either independent KTVU, Channel 2, or NBC-affiliated KRON, Channel 4 will carry the ball games. KTVU, having no network affiliation at present, has the flexibility to carry the games. On the other hand, NBC-TV has purchased KTVU as an o-and-o and is waiting for FCC okay on buy; if this okay were to come through or if NBC decided to drop it KRON affiliation when its current contract expires (June 30, 1961), KRON might land the Giant telecasts. KRON is vigorously fighting the NBC-KTVU deal and has filed an antitrust suit against both parties.

Meantime, Golden West's Frisco radio station, KSFO, landed the Giants and Falstaff Brewing for a seven-year contract, with Russ Hodges and Lon Simmons handling the radio chores just as they have done for the past three years.

Wagner to Balto

Houston, Nov. 22.

William T. Wagner, program and production chief for KTRK-TV here, will leave his post to go to work as program director for WJZ-TV, Baltimore. Wagner has been with KTRK-TV since the outlook took to the air here in 1954.

He begins duties at the new post late this month.

Corinthian Sets Zingy Pubaffairs 5-Station Series

Corinthian Broadcasting Corp. has an ambitious five-station project coming up for the prime-time half-hour released to affiliates by CBS-TV every third week in the "Face the Nation" Monday night slot.

Spurred by sellout of the group's special convention coverage this summer, Corinthian stations will use the Monday slot for a full-scale mounting of wide-ranging series reflecting "totality of community life," all geared for sponsorship.

KHOU-TV, Houston, has already signed the Southwestern Savings & Loan Assn. for full 22-week bankrolling of the series. Group's execs feel that the comparative ease of signing clients for the convention coverage is an indication that there is a big and unexploited potential nationwide for station pubservice ventures of the right kind.

Southwestern Savings, a conservative firm, is switching from radio sponsorship to take on the controversial series. "We prefer it that way," client veep H. W. Howard told the Houston station. "We see nothing to be gained in sponsoring a program that sits on dead centre."

Cost-per-thousand and ratings, say station officials, never came up in negotiations with Southwestern Savings. Sale took one day.

Corinthian figures the prime-time release as one of the most significant opportunities yet for stations to do a sound community service. Group is therefore eschewing the simple panel formula that would fit in with "Face the Nation" pattern with minimum strain on station resources. Concept, according to a group spokesman, "is that of a community mirror, reflecting life and times of the area, the problems and issues, the cultural, social, scientific aspects. The range will be from hard-hitting documentary to folk song entertainment."

Houston schedule typifies the spreads. Shows lined up include "The Zoning Enigma," "Murdertown, USA," treating the obsolescence of frontier law in the nation's leading homicide centre; "Texas, Flat on Its Back," examining state finances and the depressed oil industry; "The TB Hospital, A Houston Disgrace"; "Substandard Schools" and a folk music spectacular.

Corinthian's WANE-TV, Ft. Wayne, plans to treat tightening college accomodations in the area, obscenity via the mails, "Cities of Tomorrow," a look at the city 50 years hence, after urban redevelopment and city planning pays off, and other subjects of local interest.

KOTV, Tulsa, will take a strong sociological approach with a probe of Indian tribes in "Forgotten Nation," report on development of an actual legal case in "Verdict," and studies of juve delinquency and old age, all from a local or regional standpoint.

Indianapolis Corinthian station WISH-TV is working on a series that will cover community cultural operations from music through art and drama. Corinthian's Sacramento station has similar plans in the works.

MINNESOTA MINING IN CBS GOLF BUY

CBS-TV will do the first network telecast of the Palm Springs Classic, annual celebrity-pro-amateur golf tourney out of the winter resort, with Minnesota Mining & Mfg. already signed for half-sponsorship of the two-day tourney Feb. 4 and 5.

Tourney was incepted last year as a $100,000 entry with top Hollywood celebs as the organizer. Telecast last year was for Los Angeles only, via KTTV, but the event attracted so many top pros and VIPs that CBS bid for the rights. Organizers included Desi Arnaz, Danny Kaye, Bob Hope and Bing Crosby.

Network will air an hour on Saturday (4) and 90 minutes for the windup Sunday (5). Tab on the remaining half of the package figures at over $150,000.

When Is "Too Cold" Too Hot?

That's the question we put to ourselves when we began considering the idea of an hour-long drama-documentary on frigidity in the American female.

Could "too cold" be too hot to handle?

The answer came fast. Not lickety-split, exactly, but fast enough. Even preliminary research revealed that sexual frigidity, in one degree or another, is blighting the lives of an estimated 40 per cent of American women, to say nothing of the unhappy families and broken homes it often leaves in its wake.

NO PROBLEM that widespread, we decided, could any longer be considered too touchy for the TV screen. We were, of course, equally as determined that the subject should be handled with taste and intelligence. For even the best-intentioned of public affairs programs is no excuse for sensationalism.

So we went ahead. And one afternoon last month, televiewers across the nation did see the Purex-sponsored special, "The Cold Woman." The response from both the public and the professional reviewers (sometimes known as "The Cold Critics") was overwhelmingly favorable.

In the cascade of congratulatory letters were a great many from terribly troubled women who'd been suffering silently for too many years with this very problem of sexual coldness. The one sentiment running through just about all this mail was "gratitude —first for being shown that the difficulty is one besetting millions, and, second, for being advised that frigidity frequently can be overcome by professional therapy.

But weren't there indignant letters as well? A few—so very few that modesty alone keeps us from giving the percentage. Even among these, the gripe was almost invariably leveled at our decision to deal with the subject in the first place rather than at any aspect of its presentation.

One miffed gentleman from Florida (which, we presume, has its proportionate share of frigidity despite the climate) was honest enough to preface his full-page critique with, "I didn't see it. I dialed it out in stomach-turning disgust as soon as you announced what it was all about.

We're sincerely sorry he didn't choose to stay with it. We're certain he would have come away just as pure as he was before the program began. A bit more enlightened, we'd guess, but otherwise unsullied.

As forward and bold a step as "The Cold Woman" was, NBC doesn't expect to be shattering a precedent each time we go to bat with another documentary. That's the sort of unrealistic goal that makes this year's milestone next year's millstone. But we are rather proud of other serious programs we have been and will be doing.

The second in the series of afternoon specials was "The Trapped Housewife," and upcoming (on December 8) is "The Working Mother." That will be followed by other meaningful drama-documentaries on such subjects as "Intermarriage" and "The Ordeal of the Single Girl."

OVER-ALL BOSS of these and other creative projects in NBC's News and Public Affairs division is Executive Producer Irving Gitlin, who is so fervent a believer in TV's mission as a fountain for enlightenment and an arena for controversy that, by indirection, he sometimes makes us feel guilty for enjoying Perry Como.

But we eagerly forgive him one he starts describing some of the exciting things being done in his department. On "The Nation's Future" this Saturday evening, Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. will debate "Are Sit-In Strikes Justifiable?" with James J. Kilpatrick, editor of the Richmond (Va.) News-Leader. The session isn't likely to be a serene one.

Nor is there likely to be much serenity in another Gitlin-supervised project, the six "NBC White Paper" specials, which kick off the night of November 29 with a documentary on "The U-2 Affair. Viewers are promised facts about this incident that have never been revealed. "But just as important," explains Gitlin, "is that this study will give the public a truly detailed picture of how a democratic government responds in a time of international crisis."

Ensuing "NBC White Papers" (all Timex-sponsored, by the way) will be covering such areas as "Featherbedding," "Government by Publicity" and "The Soviet Union from Within."

Almost any sort of pioneering is really its own reward, but the kind of response that greeted "The Cold Woman," together with our anticipation of these other ambitious specials is enough to make a network want to dance for joy.

And we would be more than pleased to do just that, except for our rather sensible resolve never to dance in any TV season that has the letters "Fred Astaire" in it. We know when we're overmatched.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U.S.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Tomorrow

An interesting, and often absorbing, excursion into city planning was provided by "Big City—1980," the CBS-TV pubaffairs science series slotted in prime time. Monday (21) night's "Tomorrow" program had a lot going for it—showmanship, good footage, and experts in the field of municipal planning.

Sharper editing might have built even greater interests, but that's really a minor reservation in an otherwise tip-top outing. Whether producer Thomas H. Wolf and scripter Philip Reisman made the city of Philadelphia prettier and more progressive than it really is may be open to question. In order to show the positive sides of urban redevelopment, the show might have gone overboard, depicting the City of Brotherly Love as a coming Metropolitan paradise.

But there is no challenge as to the constructive intent of the show and even going overboard in this instance may serve the purpose of showing what can be accomplished nd the problems associated with rban redevelopment.

The footage of the brand new capitol of Brazil was fascinating. It was like an armchair Cook's tour of Brasilia.

Garry Moore, as the layman asking questions, lent a show biz name to the attraction. He performed ably in the straight role. The articulate experts included John E. Burchard, two deans of Massachusetts Institute of Technol and Edmund Bacon, chairman of the Philadelphia Planning Commission. Vaude also came into the act, with Pat Harrington Sr. and Dan Healy doing an oldtime number kidding th Philadelphia of yesteryear.

Ed Sullivan Show

Ed Sullivan got together an expensive cast for Sunday's (20) edition over CBS-TV. With names such as Sophie Tucker and Jerry Lewis to headli and with port from Connie Francis, Bert Wheeler, Ford & Reynolds and the Kim Sisters, the entertainment values were assured. It was a well-paced show; everyone contributed a peak piece for consistent results.

Soph, who doubled over from the International, N.Y., is the eternal entertainer with or without a police identification card. There is little she can do to add to her lustre except her consistantly good job, which she did on the Sullivan stint.

For Jerry Lewis, his appearance on this sh was the first in many years. In the intervening time, he has been an NBC contractee, nd now is in a position to free lance. His brief bit was probably more effective than some of his protracted stints. He said what he had to in his delineation of young dancers, and got off. There were some funny bits of business not marred by extraneous matters.

Also in the comedy line was an effective bit by Bert Wheeler, doing his portrait of an old lady and her son with the assistance of Tom Dillon, with whom Wheeler has been practicing at the Lambs' shindigs for sometime. They look like a good team with Wheeler providing the focal point. The vet comic is still a funny p erator. Completing the parade of levity was Ford & Reynolds from the Latin Quarter show, who zanied along entertainingly.

Connie Francis, one of the top record singers of the day, willingly essayed any type tune, even a Yiddish number, which served as a closer. The Kim Sisters, Korean singers and instrumentalists also registered well at the start of the display. The added starter on the occasion was the Ferreiera Bros. from Bogota, who entertained with a Latin beat.

Dow Hour of Great Mysteries

Robert Saudek Associated mounted a lavish production of "The Great Impersonation," based on E. Phillips Oppenheim's spy thriller fave of yesteryear. It was an entertaining hour outing, with some faults, stemming mainly from the required condensation. The 60-minutes on NBC-TV Tuesday (15) ight, though, wound up in a satisfying switcheroo that surprised the viewer. Not many tv mysterios can boast that.

Keith Michell, portraying the two roles of Baron Von Ragastein and Lord Dominey, had the key role and he carried it off in fine, effective style. Eva Gabor as German princess w s beautiful, but more emotional range, in the sincere vein, could serve her in good stead.

Jeanette Stark, Michell's real life wife, was good as the stage wife, too, in the Oppenheim opus. Others in the cast included Theodore Marcuse, Otto Simanek, Martin Kosleck, Geoffry Lumb and Louis Edmonds. Supporting players were excellent.

Script by Audrey and William Roos captured the old world quality of the spy thriller. Scripters could have had a more effective play if some of the wrinkles would have been smoothed out. Concentrating on the big plot convolutions might have packed a greater wallop. Director David Greene helmed the outing so that the characters, settings and intrigues were captured. Horo.

The 20th Century

A fascinating, and sometimes frightening report on the problem of jammed-up air traffic mai - tained this documentary series' excellent pace on CBS-TV last Sunday (20) evening. Although flying is now commonplace, not so commonplace is the idea that the flying space around airports has become inadequate to handle the growing numbers of high-speed commercial, military and private aircraft.

Various aspects of the problem were spotlighted via interviews with the head of the Airline Pilots Assn. and with E. R. Quesada, head of the Federal Aeronautics Authority. The issue was most effectively dramatized, however, in a long sequence showing a traffic control crew stacking up incoming flights around an airport until the saturation point was reached. The stanza also indicated possible solutions to the traffic jams through the introduction of electronic computers in the control centers and the use of automatic piloting devices. Walter Cronkite handled the narration and interviews.

It's nice to have a comic fantasy around on television once i awhile, even though this Talent Associates production tended to rush through the fantasy and lay the stress on the comedy. Result was that this teledaptation of Harry Segall's play filmed as "Here Comes Mr. Jordan") lacked the senti ental charm of the original and emerged instead as an express-train fantasy-farce.

That's a substantial change, and "Heaven Can Wait" came off the worse for it. Nevertheless, the Jacqueline Babbin-Audrey Gellen adaptation, as directed by Alex Segal, held up as fairly entertaining comedy, if nothing else.

Anthony Franciosa, as the fighter who is called to heaven prematurely and whose soul and personality are placed into a couple of other bodies, turned in a good performance, managing to capture the wistfully goodnatured character of the part in spite of the breakneck pace, and scoring well in the comedic aspect of the role.

Robert Morley, as Mr. Jordan, the heavenly gatekeeper, was pleasant but restrained (at least for Morley) but not completely effective. Of all the cast, Joey Bishop as the fight manager came off best, delivering a portrait of a kindly hustler in the best Sam Levene tradition. Wally Cox was good in a small role as the heavenly messenger who bolixes up the works in the first place; Frank McHugh had a good turn as another manager; Elizabeth Ashley was pretty and effective as the love interest; Diana van der Vlis and Paul Stevens made a sinister pair of plotters and Paul Reed was good as a harried policeman.

Dave Garroway went down memory lane Friday (18) night, but the one hour trip through nostalgia was dull. There were many resources placed in his hands. Unfortunately, though, except for certain bits and pieces, the show didn't take advantage of its setting and motif.

The setting was the RCA building at Rockefeller Center and NBC studios. Garroway spoke about the death of big-time radio entertainment from famous NBC Radio studios and did likewise for tv, mentioning the exodus of "live" shows from network television and the ascendancy of Hollywood film. Obits in bare studios hardly make for electrifying viewing.

Al Kelly came in for a double-talk bit, which was too abbreviated. Other funsters such as Cliff Norton, Sid Gould, and Bernie West had little to do. Julie London showcased a few numbers in okay fashion. The bits of the Joe Wilder Jazz Sextet and N.Y. Woodwind Quintet were fun, also the Alec Wilder music.

Where the show fell down badly was in the memory lane excursion. Television could not have survived in the non-exciting key and making the excursion seem even longer were the extensive commercials.

The low pressure Garroway approach — associated with the old Chicago school of television—came off best in an imaginative bit of "motion sculpture," with a picture array developing the earth's relationship to the universe. These segments, though, came too late to salvage the special outing for the web's morning "Today" personality.

BELAFONTE, NEW YORK 19

Harry Belafonte carried the mail through "New York 19," a postal zone bounded from 48th St. to Central Park South and from 5th Ave. to the Hudson River, with a bagful of songs, dances and instrumentals. The Gotham territory to which he confined himself is a virtual melting pot of the city and offers varied moods and attitudes from which to cull an hour-long musical tour.

The musical segments were convincing but the quasi-documentary form which surrounded them were stark, artsy and a bit contrived. The nearly bare settings, the excessive use of art photography stills to relay the picture of the city and its people and the soupy commentary took a lot of the fun out of the session.

Belafonte, however, is a magical performer, and whether he's singing a joyous round with a bunch of kids, a brash calypso, an Israeli folk song, a showtune or a religioso, his efforts have meaning and a point of view. Another factor to his credit is his choice of associate performers. He prefers new faces and new sounds and he gives them an important showcasing. Assisting Belafonte this time out was young jazz thrush Gloria Lynne. Already known in jazz club circles, Miss Lynne is now sure for a potent spread because of her solid work on blues, rhythm and showtunes. She's got a wide range and the kind of delivery that should take her far. She received a fine instrumental assist from the Earl May Trio on "Birth of the Blues." The Modern Jazz Quartet and the Contemporary String Quartet are also rarely heard and seen on tv and this display shows that they are not too far out for mass enjoyment. The jazz piece on which they worked together was based on understandable rhythmic patterns.

A pas de trois by Arthur Mitchell, Julia Robinson and Pat Dunn was a sort of jazz ballet. Incidentally, Miss Robinson (Mrs. Belafont) appeared only in this one number. It had the sort of appeal that could win over the squares. Jazz buffs, who have been complaining about tv's brushoff of jazz, should have no beefs with Belafonte.

Director Norman Jewison blended the stills, the commentary and the performances in an okay manner and choreographer Walter Nicks supplied lively dance sequences. Show was packaged by Belafonte Presents Inc., one of the singer's subsidiary activities.

Revlon was unusually obtrusive during the hour, coming in with five spots, and its pitch is taking some of the mystery out of how a woman gets that way. Gros.

MACBETH
(Hallmark Hall of Fame)
With Maurice Evans, Judith Anderson, Michael Hordern, George Rose, Ian Bannen, Felix Aylmer, Valerie Taylor, Malcolm Keen, Megs Jenkins, Jeremy Brett, William Hutt, Charles Carson, Trader Faulkner, others
Producer-Director: George Schaefer
Composer: Richard Addinsell
Conductor: Muir Mathieson
120 Mins., Sun. (20), 6 p.m.
HALLMARK
NBC-TV (film)
(Foote, Cone & Belding)

A two-hour color filmed production of "Macbeth," tailored to tv dimensions, was presented on NBC-TV Sunday evening as an expanded "Hallmark Hall of Fame" entry. Designed to upgrade the status of television programming, it accomplished its purpose nobly. Wisely, it was slotted from 6 to 8 p.m., permitting maximum exposure to both adult and youth.

With a cast topped by Mauric Evans (a Hallmark Shakespearean fave from way back) and Judith Anderson, the performances in most cases literally glowed, and George Schaefer's production and direction were everything that could be desired. Network tv demonstrated, as did Hallmark, that when people care, they deserve the very best.

In "Macbeth" they certainly had it, and the fact that it's permanently inscribed in celluloid for repeated use is to be applauded.

Filmed on location in Scotland, this was a lavish sweeping "on location" production, it's ominous shadows and eerie tint tones underscoring the tyrannies of the Bard's Scot classic. In a season dedicated to mayhem formats, what better than to have the world's No. 1 scripter of foul deeds going for you, as Schaefer had.

This was a drastic departure for Hallmark, in the past identified with live programming. The switch to film and the utilization of the Scottish landscape were all to the good, lending an added and attractive dimension to the whole. Within the 21-inch confines, such standout scenes as the witches' tale, the plotting and murder of King Duncan, Banquo's ghost at the state banquet, Lady Macbeth's sleepwalking scene and the climactic Macbeth-Macduff swordplay were visually vivid and compelling in their closeup treatment.

Unfortunately, Maurice Evans' performance as Macbeth was spotty. His ordinary dialog was delivered in such a declamatory tone that it left no room for growth for the more highly dramatic episodes. In the latter part of the play his soliloquies, being more tempered and controlled, carried greater conviction and force. But since the character of Macbeth is larger than life, some may prefer this rather stylized performance.

Judith Anderson as Lady Macbeth brought the greatest degree of tragedy and the deepest emotional interpretation to the role, without straining or declaiming. As always, her performance was inspired and beyond reproach. Many of the other, particularly Michael Hordern as Banquo; Ian Bannen as Macduff and George Rose in his brief scene as the porter assumed the tongue of Shakespeare with a naturalness and e se that matched their performances.

The continuity was exceptional, with the many scenes of the Bard's drama flowing into the three acts without a break. The intensity and fervor with which the cast spoke the more familiar and telling Shakespearean quotations made their depth and wisdom once more apparent.

Richard Addinsell's original score, as conducted by Muir Mathieson, was both dramatic and judiciously integrated.

Schaefer, NBC, Hallmark and all hands on deck can take a bow.

Rose.

THE HAPPY HOUSE
With Nadia Ghazzi, guests
Producer: Nadia Ghazzi
Director: Atef Helweh
30 Mins., Sun., 8 p.m.
Television Damascus

"The Happy House" recently received kudos from the press in Cairo and Damascus and a special commendation from the Minister of Communications. On the program caught the reason was apparent. Mme. Nadia Chazzi's offering is several cuts above the average women's program.

The program has hints for the culinary department, some good ideas for brightening the home and labor saving practices for cleaning "those nasty-to-get-at" spots. Sounds trite but Mme. Nadia is subtly broadening the homemaker's outlook within the bounds of Arabic tradition.

The real meat of the program is her treatment of social and civic ills. On this outing she hit at mothers who neglect their children. To illustrate her point, she covered the town with a cameraman and took enough footage to fill 12 inutes. It was provocative stuff, sometimes shocking, showing the tots playing in the gutters, in filth, in danger spots several almost hit by cars etc. Where were the mothers? At the movies, the beauty parlors or just plain gossiping at some neighbors. And she minced no words, hit them right between the yes.

Adnan Slei, a psychologist from the Educational Research Committee, followed and explored the dangers of overprotecting the only child.

Mme. Nadia has good presence on the screen and talks to her audience, not at them; handles the interview porton adroitly.

The camera work on the film was excellent, really told the story.

Almost 17 billion dollars in food store sales alone! That's what was missed in the top 15 markets last year by advertisers who cry about lagging profits, but refuse to recognize the steady shift of people and money to suburban and "extra-urban" areas. (During 1959, 67% of all food store sales in the top 15 markets were accounted for by non-city retailers!)

Nowadays, advertising must travel farther, sell more. That's why spot television is the choice of today's advertiser. No other medium provides freedom of market selection, together with the unbeatable, marketwide selling impact of television's sight, sound and motion.

h. ger skein is Francis Durbridge, who's already established his repute at this sort of nerve-stretching tale. Idea is to wolve Tim Frazer in three sets of six episodes, so spring should be here before he's through. Judging by this launching segment, Durbridge is in for another resounding click. And some of the script credit rub-off on Clive Exton, whose brisk and unerring dialog gave the half-hour a solid base.

Story opened with Frazer going o a Cornish hotel for a rendezvous with his ex-partner in an engineering business, but the fellow hadn't turned up. Meanwhile, a Russian seam , victim of a typhoon, was dying pstairs, nowing the lingo. Frazer gleaned that he wanted to see a girl called Anya—but he died that night. In his room, there was a receipt for a car from a London garage.

Next move was for Frazer to be asked along to see an intelligence man in London. There he was asked to help them track down the missing partner, for reasons not disclosed. As the man had skipped off with a slice of Frazer's money, he fell in with the scheme. The car ticket, he was told, belonged to the partner. Frazer picked it up, found an address inside, went there, and the segment left him surveying a little girl he found at the house, called Anya.

So, as indicated, there was enough telling mystification to carry viewers forward. Jack Hedley, as Frazer, scored freely; the part was conceived without the usual tightlipped and heavy-slugging cliches, and enabled him to fill it with a likable charm. Other support was fine, with Donald Morley registering as a secret-service type masquerading as a salesman. Producer Alan Bromly ensured an immaculate show. Otta.

THE ANIMAL STORY
With Dr. Desmond Morris Writer: Philip Oakes
Producer: Milton Shulman
30 Mins.; Mon., 10:30 p.m.
Granada TV, from Manchester

Swinging along at a brisk gait, this initial sortie into the animal kingdom promised well for the whole set of six. It roved around the world at the great apes, and after brief peeks at gorillas and orang-utans settled into a close examination of Congo the chimp. He proved a natural for the camera, like all his breed, and a lot of amusing observation of his mental processes who conveyed without effort.

For instance, Congo was show to have a shrewd aim at a cocoanut, to have the sense to heave himself on to a box to reach for an inaccessible hunch of grapes, and to be a sort of Picasso-of-the-apes, daubing away with paint and paper to some purpose. A neat and factual commentary, written by Philip Oakes, was nicely delivered by zoological expert, Desmond Morris, and patient, telling photography was the responsibility of Douglas Fisher.

The program stablished that apes are quite bright in the upper storey, and fortunately didn't make the dreadful mistake of treating them as odd sub-humans with pet names. Further segments will treat the hunting habits of animals, their disguises, and their table manners. All in all, quite a novel and successful gambit, for animals don't often get an airing at adult viewing times. Which raises an odd point. Why slot it in when the kiddies should be snoring? Otta.

THE DICKIE HENDERSON SHOW
With Dickie Henderson, June Laverick, John Parsons, Lionel Murton, Alfred Marks, Lindsay Scott-Patton, Pat Coombs, Judy Cornwell
Writers: Jimmy Grafton, Jeremy Lloyd
Director: Bill Hitchcock
30 Mins., Mon., 8 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

This domestic-comedy skein made a sparkling entry into the schedules with this initial segment, dubbed "The Psychiatrist." Each self-contained episode centers around a family threesome, with the addition of guest star. But the chief burden of yocks fell on Dickie Henderson, and he carried it with it with aplomb.

Situation of this one was that the wife (June Laverick) called in a crazy psychiatrist (Alfred Marks) to probe the mental disorders of her 10-year-old son. He was showing a destructive bent with the furniture, but father Dickie Henderson was kidded into believing the mind-doctor was a journalist come to interview him, for he was dead against all such quackery. This led to some sharp and inventive interludes, culminating in Henderson himself getting the treatment. Fast fun was had with hypnosis, and the whole thing had Dorothy gaiety that should ensure a steady welcome.

The only fault was a tendency on June Laverick's part to force the brightness, but this should be cured as she settles in. As the problem child, John Parsons was well-chosen for charm, and Lionel Murton proved a good butt as Henderson's buddy. Guest star Alfred Marks clicked strongly as the psychiatrist, and the scripting was taut throughout.

Production values were okay, and director Bill Hitchcock helped the fluency. Henderson's a gifted comedian who up to now hadn't found the right tv iche. This seemed to be it. Otta.

A TO ZOO
Producer: Derek Twist
25 Mins., Wed., 5 p.m.
Granada TV, from Manchester

Aired at the children's viewing hour of 5 p.m., this genial skein certainly combines instruction with its entertainment but isn't thereby to be castigated as juvenile. Expertly made, by the Granada TV unit stationed at the London Zoo, the edition surveyed—"E for Eagles and Enlistment"—brought excellent camerawork and slick editing into play to help provide a th roughly captivating program.

The section on eagles adduced some interesting facts about various of the species, while the "enlistment" part comically covered the grooming of a goat called Charlie for stardom as mascot of the Royal Welch Fusiliers. Harry Watt, wellknown as a director and cinema documentary pioneer, provided an informative commentary in easy, conversational style.

tatives of these agencies, members of Congress, lawyers who practice before them, iversity scholars who are exports in Government administration and other federal officials in fields related to the agencies, such as the Justice Dept.

The conference—or assembly, the word Prettyman seems to prefer—would make recommendations both to Congress and to the agencies themselves on how their job can be done better.

Although Landis had nothing to do with today's conference being scheduled (it was Judge Prettyman's project, which he sold to the White House), it apparently has his enthusiastic blessing.

Favors 'Judicial Concept'

In his August speech, Landis expressed these views:

—The agencies need to function in a more judicial concept.

"We have an assurance . . . with reference to judicial appointments (federal judges) . . . that they have been exposed to one discipline, that of the law . . . But with administrative appointments (to independent regulatory agencies), a single discipline is not required. But a discipline that has som relationship to the responsibilities to be assumed should be required . . . Insufficient study has heretofore characterized thi problem of administrative appointments . . .

"Many of them (commissioners of the agencies) come from professions and businesses unattuned to the idea of articulating conclusions. Some of the past colleagues (on regulatory agencies) . . . could not conceivably have set forth the ground for their conclusions and yet the soundness of these conclusions could not be questioned. Law, however, is not built this way. It is not a forest of isolated pillars but an edifice built stone by stone . . .

"This practice . . . has . . . resulted in the lack of devel t of adequate standards in various administrat fields. I refer, for example, to the lack of any true standards in the choice between competing applicants for a television or radio channel . . . These choices are made and have to be made but the bases upon which they rest are incapable of being accurately briefed."

Landis went on to deplore "opinion writing sections," such as FCC has. Commissioners decide how a case will go and direct others to compose the written opi

"The process of decision is not alwas capable of delegation . . . I know from judges for whom I have worked whom I have known and from my own experience that frequently an opinion in accord with a prior conclusion simply will not write," Landis declared.

—He pondered if top jobs in the regulatory agencies shouldn't be transformed into career posts, another hint that Landis may be sympathetic with the concept of making commissionerships into U.S. judges.

"The rapid turnover at the top levels of our administration agencies presents a serious problem. It means fundamentally that service in these posts is not regarded as a career but as a stepping stone to some other position in Government or industry . . . The devotion that arises out of the conception of a lifetime of concern is missing," Landis said. (Federal judges, for the most part, are appointed for life.)

—He considers the powerful influence Congress holds over the regulatory agencies to be an unhealthy situation.

"Agencies have to deal with their budgetary problems before House and Senate committees, and these problems are vital to the efficient exercise of their powers . . . (At such Congressional hearings) efforts have been made again and again through the withholding of funds to influence both the rule-making and the adjudicatory processes of the agency.

"Committees of Congress have on occasion directly intervened with the operation of the agencies. Only a short time ago, we saw the extraordinary spectacle of a committee of Congress seeking to tell FCC not to handle a proposed rule change pending before that Commission, which the Commission had already concluded was withi its jurisdiction to consider."

—He wants something done to speed up handling of cases by the agencies to ease the financial burden on applicants, as well as th cost to the Government.

"Delays stem from several factors, some of which are curable. There is too casual an attitude toward the admission of evidence . . . Huge records are made which have little chance of personal examination by commissioners . . . This can be enhanced considerably by the not infrequent attitude of Government counsel not merely to prove his case but to insist upon proving it four times over. Other counsel, representing interests with large resources, can resort too easily to delaying tactics. The authority of the hearing examiner is often too meager to deal with situation such as these . . .

"I can recall an effort to bring about a rule change before FCC, substantially unsuccessful, on which some $200,000 was spent . . . These are proceedings that the average businessman or entrepreneur simply cannot afford."

—He also expressed an opinion which may well be the theme of his study of the regulatory agencies:

"Perhaps one of the largest worries over the work of our administrative agencies has been their lack of creative thinking."

CBS-TV Taps Raymond

Al Raymond has been named to the newly-created post of manager of labor relations in the live operations department of CBS-TV. He's been manager of studio operations in N.Y. for the past five years.

In the new spot, he reports to Hugh Graham, director of live operations for the web.

Dallas—Mike Shapiro has been named general manager of all broadcasting properties of the A. H. Belo Corp., parent organization of the Dallas Morning News. Manager of WFAA-TV since 1958, Shapiro w elevated to the top exectuive position held by the late Alex Keese. He will continue in his role as head of WFAA-TV.

Television Reviews

ogies apart, is the continued reliance on military audiences for the best un-canned laughter in the business. This time he made his stand at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs, and though many of his jokes were faulty, their "inside stuff" quality drew explosive reactions from the youthful fly boys. Some of the material supplied him, as usual, topical. The gags about th ultra-modern Academy buildings and about Air Force discipline were new and apparently pertinent to the scene, but they were also reminiscent of his commentary before the GI's of Alaska and Fort Ord and wherever else he's been in the last two decades to entertain the military.

Steve McQueen had no sooner finished as the star of CBS-TV's filmed "Wanted Dead r Alive" than he showed up as Hope's No. 1 guest on NBC-TV. McQueen, a good actor but not especially trained for the art of comedics, was nonetheless able to get considerable mileage out of the sure-fir lines supplied him in a series of paper-thi skits with Hope. All of them were built around the Academy. Kay Starr, who sings a corking brass style, also got involved in some of the skits. Throughout the skits, the audience broke up, and the neat shots of the boys in the pews and of the Academy itself gave the viewer a false sense of participation.

Neile Adams, McQueen's real-life wife, did the kind of tv filler that soldiers everywhere ought to eat up and, in this case, did. The cadets seemed jubilant over her brief appearance in a singing and wiggle dancing rendition of "My Heart Belongs to Daddy," kind of a natural anywhere but especially when there are GI's in the audience.

In short, the whooping pewsters may have exaggerated the uality of humor on this latest Hope romp, but everybody, including the people at home, didn't have a chance in the hands of the rapid-firing comedian for anything but fun. Art.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF DRAMATICS ARTS SHOW
With Brendan Behan, Frances Fuller, others
Director: Ed Cooperstein
30 Mins., Sat., 11 a.m.
WNTA-TV, N. Y. (tape)

Brendan Behan, the unpredictable Irish playwright, seems to be on his best behavior an in his best spontaneous form before young audiences.

His U. S. tv preem last year on CBS-TV's "Small World" was a fiasco of mutterings and inscrutable balladeering that had moderator Ed Murrow cutting him out of the transcontinental conversation before the show was half over. Behan had most probably been aleing. He was unfunny with Jack Paar and over-clowning on "Open End."

But he reportedly a smash in a rambling lecture before an Ivy League girls college assemblage, and he had an easy charm and wit in a Q. and A. session with American Academy of Dramatic Arts students on the school's WNTA-TV Saturday (19) morning show.

With restrained good humor, Behan told the kids, among other things, that "We've got to have some kind of theatre or life doesn't go on. Theatre captures a bit of life, captures a bit of poetry. The rest of the world thinks we're necessary, obviously, for we're here. Good mornin'."

Comparing American and British theatre audiences, the author of the current Broadway hit, "The Hostage," said American theatregoers have a puritanical streak and are easily shocked—"America is peopled by country people . . . if they're from England, they're not from London; if they're from France, there not from Paris; if they're from Italy, they're not from Rome." But, he said, Americans are extremely generous and hospitable—"very honest country folk."

America, he said, has a lot of funny words and sayings, "like 'top o' the morning.' I never heard it in Ireland, but it's a good saying."

He told an Iowa femme student who said she wasn't sure what Behan wanted her to think after seeing "The Hostage" that the play was not meant to have any obscure symbolism—"I have a reputati for being witty because I say actly what I think. Do you dig?"

Behan at the pace set on this show was m h like, but a substantial improvement the stereotype of the Irishman. Frances Fuller, Academy prexy, moderated and seemed more patronizing toward the students than necessary, but that may have been because she knew them.

Show has been on the air for the last few weeks and, besides Behan, has featured Marc Connelly, Howard Lindsay, Worthington (Tony) Minor, Thelm Ritter, Walter Abel and Peter Glenville. Bill.

A large part of the appeal of the acle" aspect itself, an aspect sacrificed to a great degree when filtered through television's smaller-th life dimensions. gly, NBC failed to compensate for this los with a colorcast but, in the case of "Wonderland Ice," the nifty skaters and flashy routines

"Holiday on Ice of 1961" mpany were "spectacle" enough, without all the usual m production trimmings. These blades, left to th s, put on quite a show.

Unfortunately, writer-producer Bill Nichols and or exec producer Jack Philbin apparently felt th need for injecting na value into the proceedings. Several embarrassing exchanges between guest stars Efrem Zimbalist Jr. and Dorothy Collins were thoroughly damaging to the sh w style and pace. Zimbalist was forced to go through the "what does private-eye do on a musical show?" bit. The obvious answer: He makes kind of a nuisance of himself. Miss Collins was luckier. She got to sing a couple of song and rendered them in her infectiously hale-and-hearty style.

The skating was outstanding. Some of those who displayed their frosty gifts were Jinx Clark, Alfredo Mendoza, Dorothy Goos, Paul Andre, Werner and Renata Muller, Ray Balmer, Tommy Allen, Debbie and Bobby Williams. With several "Mother Goose" and "Clown" routine conspicuous, the program had strong kiddie appeal, and was slotted by NBC at an appropriately early hour. Show was directed by Grey Lockwood, bankrolled by Top Value Stamps with timely pre-Xmas pitch. Tube

'Music for Winter Night' As 3-Wk. Churchill Sub

"Music for a Summer's Night" comes back for three weeks, beginning Sunday, Dec. 18, as "Music for a Winter's Night," and returning to ABC-TV for the three-week run will be producer Fred Heider. It'll go into the 10:30-11 p.m. period.

"Music," which will dwell holiday (Xmas and New Year's) themes, is served as the filler during the transition period for sponsors on ABC-TV's Churchill series. Bell & Howell is pulling out of the Churchill telefilm after sponsoring the first three stanzas. After the first of the year Mead Johnson, manufacturer of Metrecal, will assume weekly bankrolling responsibilities for Churchill. (There will be 23 Churchills left after B&H leaves, but it has not been confirmed yet whether Mead Johnson will buy all 23.)

ABC-TV had planned to go from Sunday's (27) starting date for Churchill and keep it going weekly, but B&H's changes brought about ABC-TV's decision for three-week suspension.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U.S.

VARIETY-ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau covers one market. Each week the 10 top rated features for the one market will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, ., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are accurate as could be ascertained.

pre-dark rating picture to the merest fraction behind leader CBS.

Bullish Daytime Sponsor Lineup

As for the money part of the story, the affils were informed that (even before Colgate) the web had just achieved the highest level of sponsored daytime hours in tis history—21 hours and 30 minutes.

And still talking money — only this time from the affils side of the matter—the radio stations on the NBC hookup acknowledged the recent receipt of several millions of dollars in compensation by "approving" the continuation of regular comp in the face of "financial rearrangements" by other webs. There is no estimate available of how the NBC Radio affils received the news from Sarnoff that he was contemplating making his studio web an "around-the-clock operation." Network, now feeding news, etc., for 18 hours a day, would like to appeal to "night workers and early risers." These folk are indie radio's traditional baliwick, and many network stations operate as much as indies as network affils.

But, for sheer drama, it was Sarnoff's Thursday luncheon speech, before the combined radio and tv affils who a day earlier had a first-hand chance to evaluate during a panel discourse some of NBC's top newsmen. With the increased importance of NBC News as background, Sarnoff belted ABC by name as the network "that sets its sights on the short range and the narrow service," as a network with "meager scattering of programs in the whole field of news and public affairs" and the company which, in this case by implication, that tended "to weaken the whole broadcasting economy and the maintenance of quality programming."

The riot act began in the morning, when prexy Kintner dropped a remark (ABC had just hired Time Inc. as an outside producer on the pubaffairs stanza, "Close-Up") that it's "impossible (for a network) to take outside producers. The network has to be on the basic research the basic planning. Otherwise, it's impractical ."

Less than two hours later, Sarnoff began: ABC "claims not only equality, but indeed superiority. This claim is advanced with all the din and devices of self-promotion — including frequency and repetition. It is worth analyzing, and it can be analyzed most validly not by considering it on its own narrow terms, with principal reliance on numbers, but by weighing the broader questions of what should be expected of a network worthy of the name."

"Two of the networks pursue these objectives," he said, "and this philosophy of maximum service to the total audience. The third network has a different philosophy and a different set of objectives and has been successful (only) within its own terms . . . True responsibility of a network is not met by concentrating on a few popular categories of programming to attract the largest audience per program. Nor is it fulfilled by spotty efforts at an occasional documentary or news special."

This tirade by NBC against its rival may, when added to bullish daytime, and bullish ("best in eight years") radio, may have taken the eyes of NBC affils off a problem still confronting NBC-TV —what to do about filling prime night time after Jan. 1 with biz. Network is presently several yards shy of SRO in that area, and, naturally, this negatively affects tv station compensati

Some affils sought from NBC's Sarnoff and Kintner and senior affil advisor Harry Bannister more time for local commercial cut-ins, it was reported. This request, a normal one at most any affil convention, is under web consider - tion.

One sour note: Bob Hope, skedded to emcee the closing night festivities, had to beg off when a close friend passed on. Victor Borge, in 11th hour substitution, garnered lots of yoks.

WBZ-TV, the NBC affiliate station.

The background for this, of course, is NBC's still-hanging-fire succession of moves whereby the network would swap its Philly station for O'Neil's Boston station, with O'Neil also buying NBC's Washington o & o, and NBC in turn acquiring a San Francisco station. It may take a long time in coming, however, with court fights and other relatiatory moves already initiated in the attempt to forestall the switches.

O'Connor's Soundoff on Medium

ad trade, he accused them of "actually invoking a censorship of dollars against the most worthwhile productions on tv."

Advertising agencies turn their backs on vital shows like "Face the Nation" and "Meet the Press," which have been created by television people, he said. "You look at the beloved ratings and you sell us down the river for another saccharine cowboy. It's undoubtedly true that the cowboy gets a bigger audience, but is it necessarily a better audience?" O'Connor suggests that the smaller audience of thinking people might be more receptive to a commercial than "the vast audience that has given its rapt attention to the dream-boat cowboy and his horse."

He lay the blame for the humiliation that has lately been brought on the television squarely upon the advertising industry. "It is true," he said, "that we accepted some of the money, but those phony quiz shows and the payola scandal, the lurid chunks of video violence, the big-bosom technique—these are trouble - making insidious things and they have been manufactured by bright young men in the advertising agencies."

O'Connor upbraided Madison Ave for its chicken-heartedness. "The advertising business peddles the gospel: see and compare, examine the rival products. You hire a guy to talk to people and he decides to talk to Khrushchev, to see and compare, and what do you do? You pick up your animated commercials and you run out into the night, waving the American flag." The newscaster insisted that, in controversial shows, there need be no more association between program and sponsor than there is between a gruesome news story on the front page of a newspaper and an ad on page three.

For a payoff, he urged the ad trade to realize that the great new devices are a boon to mankind and not a trap. He reminded them that the air they use belongs to the citizen. "Give him an honest deal," he said, "give him things to think about."

of their activities. It is believed that the modus operandi will remain essentially the same under the new general manager.

Officially, however, the heads of sales and programming report directly to Walter Scott, executive vicepresident in charge of NBC-TV. Stone's new boss is Scott.

Stone has a long history of close affiliation with prexy Kintner. When Kintner was at ABC-TV, Stone held many and varied jobs, last of which was to head the key N.Y. owned & operated station WABC-TV.

WHAT HAPPENED TO ALL 5 OF THESE STATIONS ON ELECTION NIGHT WAS NOT A COINCIDENCE

Three different network affiliations...yet each of the WBC TV stations ran "ahead of its ticket" on election night. Each drew a greater share of audience than the average of other local stations on that network that evening.

This is not coincidence. No more than it can be called a coincidence that more local advertisers use WBC TV stations than any other TV stations in their markets.

Now, what about ratings? The WBC TV stations are leaders in their markets. All five are first or virtually tied for first place in share of audience. Again, despite the fact that one station is ABC, two are CBS, two NBC.*

What makes so many people tune to the five WBC TV stations? We believe the answer lies in the important identification that our stations have with community problems, and in their attempts to serve the community and the personal needs of viewers. For example, over 400 times in the last few years, WBC stations have editorialized on local issues, alerting their audiences to the need for action and infusing them with the desire to find solutions. Even more significant, these editorials have run in time periods when there are peak viewing audiences.

Also, recognizing the obvious need and desire for information, WBC stations have programmed special national and international news coverage of world happenings, supplementing the services received from the networks. The intention: to give WBC audiences a locally-oriented point of view, and as complete news coverage as possible.

These facts have earned for the WBC stations the top awards for significant and outstanding programming in the public service.

So it isn't COINCIDENCE. Audiences, advertisers, ratings, community services, awards. These are the stimuli that prompt viewers and advertisers to turn to the WBC television stations.

25 Years Ago This Week

(From VARIETY Nov. 20, 1935)

Radio guest fees were reaching astronomical heights, resulting from a bidding battle between Lord & Thomas and J. Walter Thompson. L&T, on behalf of RCA, paid Walter Huston $3,500 for a Sunday afternoon NBC reading from "Othello," three times what Lux had paid him just a few months earlier for a role on "Lux Radio Theatre.

Bernard Prockter replaced William F. Fagan as manager of sales service at CBS. Fagan moved back into network sales; Prockter's post of supervisor of CBS o&o's was left open.

NBC veepee Edgar Kobak warned sponsors that politics and advertising don't mix, an admonition to keep their pet political theories and likes-or-dislikes out of radio commercials and programs.

Radio stations started going publicly-owned, with E. F. Hutton & Co. leading the way via a public sale of 20% of the stock of WJR, Detroit, and 45% of the stock of WCAO, Baltimore.

Assn. of National Advertisers and the American Assn. of Ad Agencies put increasing pressure on NBC and CBS to eliminate local announcements during network breaks, claiming the local blurbs constituted chiseling on the network advertisers who were paying the program freight.

Dr. Frank Stanton, new at the CBS research dept., released findings of a project he started at Ohi State, indicating a 69% discrepancy between automatic devices used in gathering rating information and the recall-type of "what did you listen to last night?" rating survey.

Freeman Keyes elected prexy of Palmer Advertising, Chicago, following the sudden death of Philip O. Palmer.

WBT, Charlotte, dropped its last laxative advertising accounts, Crazy Water Crystals and Carter's Little Liver Pills, in line with a CBS edict banning such announcements.

MCA purchased rights to all time on the new Mutual web between 10:30 and 11:30 p.m., Chicago time. Idea was to set up band remotes, with MCA using its own bands and paying for line charges except where the remote was near a Mutual station.

Radio execs were disturbed by a trend of the medium's toward stripping itself of glamor and illusion. Cited was an Atwater Kent program in which he explained (and illustrated) how various sound effects are created.

Tennessee B'casters Elect

Memphis, Nov. 22.

Arthur Smith Jr., owner and operator of WMTS, Murfreesboro, was elected prexy of the Tennessee Assn. of Broadcasters in the annual shindig held at the Peabody. He succeeded Charles Brakefield, commercial skipper of WREC and WREC-TV, Memphis.

Other officers elected by the TAB were William Potts, g.m. WDKN, Dickson, veepee; Carter Parham, and general manager of WDEF and WDE-TV, Chattanooga, secretary-treasurer. Board members named were Franklin "Chick" Brown, McMinnville, F. C. Sowell, Nashville and Brakefield.

Les Atlass Died at 65

Smith, Frank Folknor and Wendell Campbell. The pattern of their apprenticeships were nearly always the same. Atlass would baptize them in sales, move them up eventually as his assistants, and then farm them out to either the Minneapolis or St. Louis stations as general managers. New York grabbed them from there.

As for himself, he was content to remain in Chicago, where he was an untouchable so far as the network was concerned. He maintained a yacht, the largest in the Chi complex, at company expense; and he ruled his shop as a king. In 1956, he purchased and refurbished the Chicago Arena for the local CBS plant at a total cost of more than $7,000,000. Tradesters, to this day, refer to the edifice as "Atlass' monument to himself."

He shrank from publicity and, when he vacated CBS last year, destroyed all picture and biographies of himself. It's true that few loved him in the trade, and he never tried to correct his spotty reputation, but he was universally admired as a businessman and broadcaster.

A Feudin' Man

Atlass had numerous feuds and rivalries—one of them with the late Chicago Tribune publisher, Col. Robert R. McCormick—but it was his friendships that were significant. One, of course, was with CBS board chairman William S. Paley, who remained devoted to Atlass up to his death, remembering how WBBM virtually sustained the network in the shaky days of the Thirties. Another was with James C. Petrillo, former czar of the American Federation of Musicians, a friendship which made Atlass always a key figure in all network negotiations with the ion. A third was with chewing gum magnate Philip K. Wrigley, who did all his network business exclusively with CBS for over 30 years, out of a friendship and business association with Atlass that dates back to their youth. (Significantly, Wrigley pulled out of CBS for the first time this year.)

Wrigley and the Atlass brothers, Les and Ralph, were partnered in the acquisition of WIND in 1931, with all of them benefitting hugely when Westinghouse bought the station a few years ago (Les Atlass had by then assigned his stock to his children, H. Leslie Jr., Harriet and Frank). The Wrigley relationship had helped pull CBS out of many a squeeze, and reciprocally Atlass billeted his stations in the Wrigley Bldg. until the purchase of the Arena.

Atlass was an autocrat who refused to fit into the contemporary organization scheme, and he alienated many a CBS topper thereby. His defiance of New York headquarters began at least as early as 1946, when the web ordered him not to air a controversial show, "Prime for Perjudice." Atlass liked the script and put it on the air anyway.

A former employee describes him as "a man who walked the store." He was always the first to arrive in the morning to carry out the ritual of placing a fresh flower in the bud vases on the desks of every receptionist and secretary. When he instrumented the purchase of WBKB from Balaban & Katz in 1953 (and subsequently changed the call letter to WBBM-TV), he reportedly issued only one order to his staff: "Spend all you have to, but make it number one in the market." They did, soon afterwards.

The Atlass brother started broadcasting as early as 1911, when they built the original transmitter for an amateur spark station in Lincoln, Ill. Nine years later they bought a 200-watt transmitter and in 1923 were licensed to operate professionally as WBBM. The Atlass brothers eventually went separate ways, with Ralph taking over WIND and WJJD (he's still general manager of the former) and Les affiliating his station with CBS in 1928. In 1933, when he sold the station to the network, he became v.p. and general manager of the now defunct central division.

He is credited with introducing remote broadcasts from churches on Sunday mornings and dance band programs direct from the ballrooms in the evenings. Among the performers he helped to develop were Gene Autry, Pat Buttram, the Andrews Sisters, Patti Page, Ben Bernie, Pat Flanagan, Fran Allison, Dale Evans and John Harrington.

In addition to his three children and brother, he is survived by his wife.

Hagerty

covered the presence of Time as a producer, it his own words, the "last straw."

"Nobody in (my) department knew anything about Mr. Drew or anything. I repeat nobody," he said the day he quit. "I take you back to the 'Race for Space,' Shulton's show. The networks wouldn't schedule that and I don't see how they make any distinction for Time Incorporated." (Daly was referring here to rejection by each of the tele networks of an independently mode pubaffairs stanza that Shulton wanted to sponsor on any one of the networks. It finally ended up shown on a spot basis throughout the country.

Timing seemed to have a great deal to do with Daly's resignation. Had it not been for what happened during the ABC Election night coverage, some observers feel he might not have been quite as troubled as he was about the surprise (to him) inroads of Time Inc.

He opposed showing "Bugs Bunny" and "Rifleman" between 7:30 and 8:30 p.m. on Election night, when both CBS and NBC had already started their regular coverage of the Kennedy-Nixon sweepstakes. And he might not have been especially happy when it turned out ABC ran a secure third in the ratings for the coverage of the three tv networks.

Daly joined ABC in 1949 and became a vice president in 1953. It was often said that he prized his vicepresidency more than he did his reputation as an airwise personality.

When he resigned, he asked to be released from all remaining on-the-air obligations, which include his role as host of "Close-Up" and his nightly job as ABC newscaster.

The negotiations that went on between Goldenson and Hagerty did not affect Daly's decision to quit, it has been said.

Tom Velotta, who was in charge of news and public affairs prior to Daly, has been given temporary control in the wake of Daly's departure until Hagerty's arrival.

Keesely Sets Sights On Gorme-Lawrence

Nick Keesely, Lennen & Newell's tv boss, has his eye on the husband-wife team of Eydie Gorme and Steve Lawrence for a tv show, once he figures out a format for the brace of singers.

Keesely has been up several times to the N.Y. Copa nitery, where the former vocalists for Steve Allen are appearing, in a desire to assess where and how they'd best fit into a video format for one of L&N's several clients. Keesely believes it'll take another few weeks before anything comes of this early-stage o.o.'ing.

troduced" to ABC brass by representatives of the sponsor. (In the last few weeks there were reports that Bell & Howell was not entirely satisfied with the work of Daly's pubaffairs crew in preparing "Close-Up.")

A spokesman for Bell & Howell in Chicago said last week that the sponsor so liked Drew's first effort, "Yanki," that they asked ABC to take the other three shows from the Time man.

Daly quit (see separate story) when he learned finally that Drew had been hired and that, already one of his own "Close-Up" productions ("Red & Black," on African Communism) had been delayed to make room for "Yanki." Messrs. Moore and Treyz and, reportedly, Leonard Goldenson, president of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, the ABC parent company, discussed the topic of Cuba with Drew before he went ahead and shot his film footage.

After the date was picked for the scheduling of "Yanki," Dick Krolick, a public relations man contracted to Time Inc. at the moment, sent a detailed report on Drew's stanza, already in rough cut, to ABC. This is apparently in keeping with the network's statement that it will retain "creatives and editorial control of production of (Close-Up') including every element in every show."

As for sports, ABC-TV programming brought in Ed Sherick some months ago to produce such stanzas for the network. Moore seems to be in constant touch with the Sherick operation. In contrast to this pattern, NBC-TV, for instance, has a fulltime sports staff under Tom Gallery, who bypasses NBC programming and reports directly to bossman Kintner.

While NBC and CBS have resisted the incursions of outside pubaffairs producers like Drew and have, by and large, kept sports and pubaffairs distinct and separate from regular entertainment shows, it has been observed in the past week (since l'affaire Daly) that perhaps ABC has a grasp on the mode for the future: Tight control, by a central source, for everything that is aired on network time.

James Hagerty, the Eisenhower press secretary, confirmed last week that he would join ABC as vicepresident in charge of news and public affairs, replacing Daly. Now it's entirely possible that the Moore-Treyz system of direct control could be dissipated when he arrives, but there is also this alternative: Having wet his feet in pubaffairs, Treyz, who after all has the final authority on what is and what isn't public affairs, can still put shows like Churchill into the commercial program department's jurisdiction—naturally, with an "assist" from Hagerty, since that would be both politick and probably useful.

If it happens that Moore should retain control of some public affairs programs, there is reason to expect he may do the job well. As many have observed, most everybody "wondered what he knows about programming?" the day he shifted to the program department from ABC-TV sales. Yet two years later, ABC-TV, by all accounts, has made extensive programmatic advances.

the open. Nor did Sarnoff talk around his subject; it was a blunt, direct attack designed to spell out, call letters and all, alleged misdemeanors in serving the public.

Whatever the misgivings or apprehensions of some of the NBC affiliates as to NBC's own status in the realm of entertainment programming—and misgivings there are—Sarnoff scored a decisive hit. The station man today likes to be told, in the words of Sarnoff, that he's "trading the medium up" and "enlarging his scope and stature."

Aubrey's Takeover at CBS

Meanwhile the smart money, around 485 Madison Ave. headquarters of CBS is betting on some drastic changes in the offing. Not the least of these, goes one report, is the possibility of a corporate about-face in turning CBS News over to the television network under the Jim Aubrey helmship. CBS News, out of which flows not only news but all public affairs-informational shows, now operates as a separate and distinct entity under the presidency of Sig Mickelson.

One thing seems for sure, though it's hardly a startling revelation—the onward & upward ascent of tv network prexy Aubrey into kingpin status. He went into the new season a big hero, selling out the network. With Aubrey it's money and the direct approach that counts. And it's no secret where he stands with the top command.

On the other hand Mickelson's news division has fallen from its lofty prestige perch. More and more sponsors are embracing NBC news, with its winning Huntley-Brinkley team. And for all the sporadic sales in the pubaffairs area, it's a mighty costly undertaking. Further, CBS, after a consistent winning streak of spiraled earnings over the years, is $2,000,000 under last year's net for the first nine months of '60. That's not the Paley way.

In the eventuality of CBS News being delivered to Aubrey it would invite the immediate speculation of a deemphasis on news and the tough policies that were set up in the wake of last year's quiz scandals. Aubrey has frequently been represented as championing programming that brings maximum returns, both money and audience-wise.

Meanwhile ABC was having its own troubles, with the resignation of John Daly as the administrative v.p. of news and public affairs, purportedly over policy differences (see separate story). To most, however, this was not too surprising. Daly's days at the network were considered numbered by virtue of a standstill status in "image" building, regardless of whether he or management was at fault.

More to the point, everybody's waiting to see what correctional moves Leonard H. Goldenson intends to make, now that Jim Hagerty has been given the job.

No Strike Yet

strategy would probably wait on further conferences, if not with management, at least between SAG and AFTRA. And it might be another day or two before the SAG toppers get east.

SAG Poised

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Screen Actors Guild, barring new last-minute vidblurb offers from management, will go on strike—possibly over the weekend or early next week—against television networks, ad agencies and producers of filmed and taped tv blurbs.

SAG's membership voted a strike authorization by an 89% majority, and the guild's national board yesterday (Mon.) rejected management's last counteroffer made a week ago and simultaneously called a strike. SAG measure brought the guild quickly into line with AFTRA's national board, which by Friday, after all regions had met, rejected the management offers and also decided to strike.

SAG balloting showed 4,369 actors voted to strike, 549 voted against. SAG's rank-and-file receives an estimated $14,000,000 annually in earnings from tv commercials. Major issue in the current negotiations by AFTRA and SAG center on filmed and taped wild spots. The unions seek both increased rates and a method of calculating use payments on a scale involving the number of viewers for any given commercial.

For the first time since the commercial talks got underway in earnest on Nov. 9, specific details were revealed. John Dales, SAG exec director, explained negotiators have two primary aims: (1) to achieve some degree of parity between rates for program commercials and rates for wild spots; (2) To achieve some degree of parity between filmed commercials and taped commercials. Existing structure finds program commercials bringing significantly higher salaries than wild spots; and taped blurbs returning significantly higher rates than filmed commercials.

SAG negotiator declared that co-negotiator AFTRA is willing to take cuts in some rates to effect the parity between film and tapes. According to Dales, nine out of ten dollars spent in commercials is spent on filmed blurbs, only one out of every ten dollars on taped.

"We are within $2 of management's latest offer in program commercials," Dales said. "In return for this point, we want a substantial re-evaluation of services in wild spots." In this wild spot negotiation, SAG and AFTRA seek a formula akin to television's rate-card system whereby rates go up in relations to the size of market. "We realize if this formula is carried to its extreme that it would lead to out-of-balance demands," Dales explained, "and in our first meeting we informed management that we understood this defect and were prepared to work out a cut-off point or a descending curve once a fair sum of money was earned."

SAG exec declared that this formula, worked out in contract talks, was negotiable, but that at 3:15 a.m. last Wednesday—when last session broke up—management declared the offer was non-negotiable and was acceptable only with certain conditions.

They gave us 14 other non-negotiable points," Dales said, explaining that one of them sought the right to buy wild spots in six-week cycles (instead of the minimum 13-week cycles) at 50% of the cost. "And they would do that and pay less than they have to pay under the old contract," he added. Conditions, Dales said, "shocked us as negotiators."

Allaying various rumors, Dales noted that AFTRA is also dissatisfied with latest offers from employers. He said all negotiations are being held on equal levels by SAG and AFTRA. "We are prepared to continue to negotiate with management if there is any room for negotiating," he said.

RAPID PROGRESS IN HARTFORD

Broadcast House, new home for WTIC TV-AM-FM, is rebuilding rapidly in Hartford's Constitution Plaza, one of the most exciting urban redevelopments in the nation. The technique of lift slab construction, employed in erecting the new studios for southern New England's mainstay radio and television station, accounts for vast savings in building time.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

WABC-TV, N. Y. flag for ABC-TV, has set up an education service department to increase rapport with the N. Y. high schools and colleges. It'll fall under the aegis of the station's press boss Les Dinoff, who has already started feeding study guides, lesson plans and other printed matter about WABC-TV's educational stanzas to 1,100 high school principals.

Station, which had its first High School Press Council in October, is having another one in December, with highschool editors being brought into the West 67th Street readquarters of the station to o.o. the studio setup and the production of stanzas like "Expedition, New York," "Astronomy for You" and "High School Sports."

"Education Tailor Made," the second "Expedition" stanza produced by WABC-TV's pubaffairs boys, in which Sam Levenson was host, has been scheduled for a repeat on Saturday, Dec. 6 at 6 p.m. Meantime, "Expedition" has decided to do a close-up on the United Nations, with Myrna Loy as hostess.

Joyce C. Hall, the president of Hallmark Cards and the prime mover of the "cultural" NBC-TV "Hallmark Hall of Fame," has extended his kick to the printed word. Not only did he write the forward to "Poetry for Pleasure," a 526-poem anthology that hit the stalls last Friday (18), but he had his illustrators work on the book's graphics and he got his Hallmark dealers across the country to submit their "favorite poems," from which publisher Doubleday picked the ones to be published.

Another Hallmark man, editor Webster Schott, wr the preface. Poems range "from Plato to Pasternak."

Federal Communications Commission has extended from Nov. 28 to Dec. 30 the deadline for filing reply comments in the VHF drop-i rulemaking proceeding. The action was requested by Assn. of Maximum Service Telecasters, among others.

Ben Duffy, vice-chairman of the board and executive committee of BBDO, received the first annual CARTA Award Sunday (20), at the Catholic Apostolate Radio-Television-Advertising communion breakfast at the Waldorf-Astoria. Award, to become an annual event, hailed the onetime BBDO prexy as "the person, who because of his personal integrity and convictions has been responsible for significant achievements having a beneficial effect in elevating the standards of good taste, moral values and ethical practices of his industry and thereby permitting the industry to contribute even more fully to the public and common good."

NBC's third annual promotion managers' wards competition for affiliated stations has drawn slightly over 100 entries—highest number yet. Station promo men have submitted their special exploitation entries in four categories—press, advertising, promotion and showi ship.

The five winners, to be picked by NBC exploitation in conjunction with ad agency execs, get all-expense junkets to Hollywood, spending money and a color tv set.

Freddie Fields

panding tv's horizons, taking it out of its present straightjacket, and warding off pay-tv.

Fields believes the changeover wouldn't work on anything but an all-network basis, and the public would have to be given some six months or so to get used to the pattern. But the three-network unanimity is a must, and if the plan served no other purpose, it would get the three network toppers together—"tv is the only major industry where the major company heads never talk to each other to see what direction their business is taking and to plan ahead."

TV also is one of the few industries that has failed to keep abreast of the times and its own potential. "When the jet age came along, the airports built bigger runways; when the railroads expanded, they build bigger platforms and bigger tracks. But television has clung to the old radi concept of weekly programming, and for no logical reason. Who says it has to be programmed on a seven-day basis?"

Fields has been noodling with the plan for some time and feels it's virtually foolproof. He's anticipated several objections, for example, the question of viewing habit on a per-show or per-week basis, and he points out that research indicates that even the most avid fan of a weekly show watches only 2.5 times a month; no hardship there. On the matter of the shortage of creative talent, he feels with the pressure of weekly shows off, a far greater number of writers, directors, etc., can achieve quality work. Ditto for the plaint that it's tough enough to program seven days, 30 would be next to impossible. Not with the talent that's not currently being used, says Fields. What about the show that's proved to be a dog — how does the sponsor get off the hook? Well, at least he's stuck with the dog once every four weeks, not every week, and he'd have cancellation privileges after 12 shows or sooner.

It's a daring plan, but Fields believes it's worth some serious thought. His basic viewpoint is "why not" and who made it a law that the weekly program should dominate tv?

KHJ's 300G UA Post-'50s Buy

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

A block of 40 theatrical pix, 26 of them post-1950 features from United Artists, has been purchased by KHJ-TV for a figure in excess of $300,000, according to Mal C. Klein, veepee-g.m. of the indie station. Acquisition marks fifth such major purchase by KHJ since entering into its two-first-run-features-back-to-back-daily programming concept, total expenditure for which is now approaching the $2,000,000 mark.

Of the 26 UA post-'50 pictures, were produced in color. Station plans to telecast them that way. Channel 9 toppers claim they now have enough first-run film to continue current programming policy for three more years. Additional 14 features the newly-acquired package are 1948 Warner Br attractions.

The 26 UA pictures include "Baby Face Nelson" ('57), Mickey Rooney; "Bandido" ('56), Robert Mitchum; "Barefoot Contessa" ('54), Ava Gardner, Humphrey Bogart; "Big Boodle" ('57), Errol Flynn; "Crime of Passion" ('57), Barbara Stanwyck, Sterling Hayden, Raymond Burr; "Dance with Me Henry" ('56), Abbott & Costello; "King and Four Queens" ('56), Clark Gable; "Monkey on My Back" ('57), Cameron Mitchell; "Monte Carlo Story" ('57), Marlene Dietrich; "Saint Joan" ('57), Jean Seberg, Richard Widmark.

half-hour syndie field in the main still is a soft market. For example, CNP feels there are a number of big regionals around looking for a first-runner, but its production schedule just won't allow it to com up with a series for the winter-spring period. One of the major regionals out looking, incidentally, is Fallstaff Brewing, which for years has been riding MCA TV entries. Fallstaff wants a series for a fall start.

Some syndicators, burned with losses of previous seasons, blame the scarcity on stations. Prices, they say, have been driven down to such an extent that they're reluctant to take a chance today. That hold-back attitude is freely acknowledged, even though its admitted that the FCC ruling, no matter what the ultimate consequences, strengthens the possibility of opening time periods.

Other reasons range from a recessive situation in certain market areas to the lack of sufficient regionals for a winter-spring start.

ipating "any new problems" for its members in Europe, the market is growing so fast that the problems are inevitable, and some of the old problems, like the British quota, are of course annoying to the MPEA members.

"The commercial television authority 14% quota on foreign products is of course something that we don't like," Fineshriber said. He pointed out that actually while the 14% states "foreign" products, it is aimed mostly at the American suppliers, who now take about 99% of that limited quota.

"We are planning a strong campaign to increase this quota," Fineshriber said. He had meetings with executives and with "other forces like the British film producers who would like to cut down on our time, and some of the BBC officials who would prefer to keep British television strictly British."

British unions also oppose the American products because they feel that an American film replaces their opportunity for work in the medium, and hence favor the strict quota, he said.

In Italy and France Fineshriber found "no specific immediate problems. With France planning its second television network, he met with some of the officials who will be back of the new enterprise and found no specific limitations planned for the number—or age—of American films that would be offered.

In Germany, Fineshriber met with the officials of the Deutschland Fernsehen, the government-operated second channel which has met with much opposition but which may be in operation some time next year, and with executives of Freies Fernsehen, the private enterprise which is now getting ready to offer commercial television, via the second network, in January, 1961.

ended March 31, '60, records that the total number of homes able to view commercial programs grew by 2,000,000 to 9,750,000, that just under 70% of viewers' looking-in time was spent eyeing commercial programs, and that in the last month of the year surveyed the average size of the evening audience was 12,500,000 compared with 10,000,000 in March, 1959.

There's considerable reference to advertising, not least to its growth. "Month by month from October, 1959, to March, 1960, there was never less than 10% and sometimes as much as 30% more advertising a month than during the same months in 1958-59," says ITA, which then focuses on the resultant decision (announced in May) that the amount of spot advertising in the clock hour should not exceed seven and a half minutes from September, '60, and seven minutes from December.

On violence, the report declares that the Authority is satisfied that its existing system of supervision works well and implicity upholds the viewpoint that violence on the screen is okay if the moral context is good.

Imported films occupied 12.15% of total transmission time over the whole network, compared with 12.3% in the previous year, while "the overwhelming majority of live plays produced were written by British writers, as were the scripts of all light entertainment programs."

IT'S LIGHT TIME
With Jim Stewart, Kenny Bowers, Bud Stewart, others
Producer: Betty Barth

Distributor: National Lutheran Council
Filming: Fred Niles Studios

WBKB, Chicago (film)

National Lutheran Council is making a truly fine contribution to children's television with "It's Light Time," a 39-installment public service series which it is distributing on an exclusive market basis. Pitched on higher intellectual ground than most comercial kidshows, it's no less entertaining than the best of them and, with proper slotting, should enlist a following from the 8-12 year old group at which it's aimed. Offered free to stations, it's one of the biggest bargains in television, particularly since the NLC has thoughtfully tailored the segments to 13 and a half minutes, enabling stations to use the left over time commercially.

Considering what the Lutheran Council obviously has to purvey, the shows are remarkably restrained on the religious level, being neither evangelical nor sectarian. The sell is so soft it barely exists. Of the three outings caught for review, the series appears to have no heavier motive than to convey a sense of God, to promote Christian ethics and somewhat to encourage church-going, whatever the denomination—all this in an entertainment context, which is a neat trick.

What is especially commendable about the series is that it addresses the youngsters as morally impressionable, intelligent creatures with curious minds and distinct problems. One episode considered the problem of gift-giving, another took up the child's responsibility in the home, and the third concerned itself with daydreaming. Each was illustrated in a miniature drama, with the religious angle falling out in overtones. In all of them, the things implicitly valued were cultural, intellectual and wholesomely athletic.

The production is excellent in all respects, from the Walt Disney-ish animation in the opening billboard, with Sid Siegel's original music, to Tom Rook's light-handed direction. But the show succeeds chiefly in its star, Jim Stewart, who is an exceptional performer, handsome, avoncular, talented at the keyboard, and genuinely warm. He's abetted in most outings by comic Kenny Bowers, who serves as a foil, and in all of them by a cast of hand puppets manipulated by his wife, Bud Stewart. Les.

Aussie, New Zealand Blanket Buy As Brit. ATV Spreads Global Wing

London, Nov. 22.

Practically every one of the tv series handled by Incorporated Television Co. has been bought by Australia and New Zealand. Claim is made by Val Parnell, managing director of ITC's parent company Associated TeleVision Ltd., in a roundup of overseas sales activities which records that the latest Australian buys take in the live ATV originations "Deadline Midnight," "Probation Officer" and "Emergency-Ward 10."

According to Parnell, 30 countries have taken filmed skeins, with Finland grabbing 14 including "Danger Man," "Interpol Calling" and "The Four Just Men," Poland taking "The Four Just Men" and "Sir Lancelot" and Yugoslavia screening "Lassie," "The Invisible Man," "Interpol Calling" and "Cannonball." Thailand is another country mentioned, with 12 shows sold. "Other countries, and the number of our series they are showing," says the ATVemdee," include Austria (4), Belgium (4), Cyprus (15), Denmark (11), Egypt (12), France (4), Germany (7), Iran (2), Italy (4), Norway (9), Portugal (15), Spain (10), Sweden (10), Switzerland (7), Bermuda (12), Southern Rhodesia (14), Holland (2), Hong Kong (15), Nigeria (15), Luxembourg (4) and Monaco (4)."

The breakdown doesn't include North and South America, Canada or Japan since ITC has its own offices in N.Y. and Toronto handling sales there.

In the new programming area, indie Daily News station has set a new "live" basketball series, to be sponsored by Technical Tape Corp. Series, to start Dec. 16, and slotted 8:30 to 10 p.m., will feature top industrial teams in the National Industrial Basketball Assn. Sponsor has a team playing in the league. Series will run for 11 weeks, with station's sports director Jack Murphy controlling the camera shots.

In another development, Shulton has gone for "double exposure" on the station of its holiday half-hour pilot series. Five half-hour specials kicked off yesterday (21) with the Eddie Hodges starrer "The Wonderful World of Little Julius."

his board of directors because of the mixup and he feels WABC-TV should answer to the Federal Communications Commission for what he feels to be bad business practices.

Another version of events was obtained from Jim Szabo, sales manager of WABC-TV. He said it was on the strength of an understanding with General Toy, represented by Bernard Schiff of Webb Associates, that WABC-TV bought five pictures from National Telefilm Associates. After station locked in the pix, lo and behold General Toy liked the family classics of WCBS-TV better. WABC-TV then had the pix and no sponsor so it found Parker Bros. instead. Parker Bros., according to Szabo, really isn't competitive to General Toy. Parker specializes in kid games, says Szabo, and General Toy only has the Shmoe game.

There was a mix-up in an understanding of scheduling the two "Sawyers." Szabo said he meant one thing and Schiff understood him to say something else. WABC-TV, he added, was even willing to reschedule its "Sawyer" to accommodate Schiff, but couldn't pull "TV Guide" ads in time.

General Toy lawyers are looking into the matter. Tom Sawyer, when last seen, was escaping, floating down the Mississippi on his raft.

Oscar Brown Jr. (Columbia): "BUT I WAS COOL" (Kicks†) bows this talented performer-writer on a clever number in a hip special material groove. "DAT DERE" (Upam†) is a neat lyric workover of a modern jazz standard.

Andy Stewart (Top Rank): "A SCOTTISH SOLDIER" (Jaro†) is a charming Scottish folk number which could come out of left field because of this fine rendition. "THE MUCKIN' O GEORDIE BYRE" (Jaro†) is a bright novelty with a strong burr.

The Dreamers (APT): "I SING THIS SONG" (Figure†) is a swinging rocker with strong teenager appeal via this raucous workover. earn spi "DON'T TREAT ME THAT WAY" (Lois†) is a routi rhythm entry.

Charles K. L. Davis (Everest): "WHERE ON EARTH" (Paramount*) sends up the tenor's pipes with good balladeering impact. "ADVENTURES IN PARADISE" (Robbins*) serves as a neat showcasing for Davis' romantic vocal approach.

CHRISTMAS SONG

Brook Benton, on th Mercury label, delivers a classy seasonal ballad in "This Time of the Year" (Vanessa*) backed with "Merry Christmas, Happy New Year" (Play†) . . . On the same label, Johnny Preston turns up with a jumping tune, "I Want A New Baby For Christmas" (Starrite†), for the juve crowd. The novelty backing, "Rock 'n' Roll Guitar," is similarly slanted . . . Jim Ameche has an okay kidisk in his narration of the story of the "The First Christmas Tree" (Kartunes*) on the Del-Tone label.

Small Combo Review

PETE FOUNTAIN QUINTET
French Quarter Inn, New Orleans

Pete Fountain, New Orleans and Lawrence Welk alumnus, has opened his own bistro in the French Quarter and is providing a smooth and sophisticated type of jazz that differs markedly from the sound eminating from some of the other spots along the Bourbon-Basin Street circuit.

Backed by four firstrate sidemen (Stan Wrightsman, piano; Godfrey Hirsch, vibes; Paul Edwards, drums; and Lou Miller, bass), Fountai displays his wn special talents with the clarinet while giving each of the others ample solo opportunities with full credit. Although hampered by malfunctioning sound equipment, the group kept the opening night crowd on its toes with swift and sure changes of pace while never losing their professional aplomb in the handling of such numbers as "Poor Butterfly," "Dixie" and other dixie standards usually sociated with a driving beat and volume to match. In fact, Fountain's style is noticeable for its restraint and subdued, smooth delivery which makes for easy listening and toe-tapping without the necessity of ear plugs, which would be a welcome accessory at some of the other boites.

Fountain acts as emcee and does a good job of introducing the various numbers and medleys. Hi showmanship in the overall presentation is firstrate and while he lets the sidemen carry many solos there never any doubt about who is the main attraction. He handles his own musical chores with an easy display of virtuosity that is informal in appearance, but strictly professional in all respects. While his style may be subdued and smooth there is no doubt that he and his group are a topnotch attraction that can stay on for many nights to come. Syd.

Album Reviews

"The Unsinkable Molly Brown" (Capitol). Meredith Willson is a cleffer who has a simple way with a melodic line and a sincere way with a lyric angle. It's a combination that worked well for him in "The Music Man" and which he repeats serviceably for his latest legitimate effort. In this original cast album, he's got the zingy marches and the pleasant ballads working for him for okay results. "Chick-A-Pen" and "Dolce Far Niente" are ballad efforts that grow with plays and "I Ain't Down Yet" and "Belly Up To The Bar Boys" are brisk items that catch on right from the start. In the title role, Tammy Grimes offers an offbeat but persuasive vocal manner. She's solid on "I Ain't Down Yet" and "Belly Up To The Bar Boys," latter with a rousing male chorus, and in duet with Harve Presnell on "Chick-A-Pen." Presnell has a fine legit baritone quality and does extremely well on several of his solo stints. As with its "Tenderloi package of this season, Capitol has inserted a souvenir booklet, givi the set an added sales fillip.

Terry Snyder: "Mr. Percussion" (Ultra Audio). Terry Snyder, who was chiefly responsible for the current vogue of "sound" albums vi his percussion efforts on the Command label, n w is doing a bang-up job for United Artists new Ultra Audio line. In this set, Snyder heads a large orch in a solid program of oldies played for maximum stereo effect within swing i g format. It's striking all the way.

Benny Goodman Orch: "The Kingdom of Swing" (RCA Victor). This latest addition to the Benny Goodman story, culled from the Victor vaults from sessions cut in 1935, '36, and '39, doesn't add too much to what has already been heard fr m the early BG band. However, it does get a young Ella Fitzgerald on release on several songs and for the collector, that's enough of a reason to put the package on the market.

Lawrence Welk: "Last Dance" (Dot). This is another consistently listenable musical package delivered in the familiar weet and simple Lawrence Welk style. Orch and choral arrangements range over a flock of current, recent and past hits, including numbers like hi ow hit "Last Date," "The Green Leaves of Summer," "Chances Are," "Temptation," "My Heart Has A Mind of Its Own," "Misty" and "Melodie D'Amour," among others.

Joe Reichman Orch: "May I Have This Dance" (Decca). Deep in the heart of Texas at the Adolphus Hotel in Houston, Joe Reichman purveys a solid brand of society dance music which has been attractively packaged in this offering. The set spotlights Reichman's flowing piano style against straightforward dance arrangements played by a reeds-on-top orch. The music covers fox trots, waltzes and a couple of Latino rhythms for a well-rounded dansapation backgrounds.

Patachou: "Hit Songs From Hit Broadway Shows" (Audio Fidelity). This is an attractive songalog with a decided Gallic flavor. French chanteuse, backed by Joe Basile's orch, delivers a flock of tunes from the current musical, "Irma La Douce," using the original French lyrics for these and a couple of other French umbers. Her vocalizing in English is equally winning on such showtunes as "April In Paris," "I Could Write A Book," "Mack The Knife," "Just In Time," "I Could Have Danced All Night" and "Hello, Young Lovers."

Linus Pauling: "On Fallout and Nuclear Warfare" (Verve). This is a spoken word disk project with a deadly serious message about the effects on nuclear fallout on the human genetic structure. It's message to the world is clear: stop all atomic bomb testing. Widespread interest in this point of view may give this LP some commercial impact. But this set has no relationship to Verve's general run of and comedy monolog offerings.

Theodore Bikel: "Songs of Russia Old and New" (Elektra). Theodore Bikel has built up a strong rep as a multilingual folksinger and balladeer through disks and concert appearances. In this Russian excursion, he again shows his master of lingo and mood and develops an excitement that can grab even those who don't understand what's going on. Fred Hellerman arranged and conducted for Bikel.

Odetta: "Christmas Spirituals" (Vanguard). One of the brilliant new folksinging talents to turn up in recent years, Odetta turns her remarkably deep and sonant voice on a recital of fresh Christmas songs. Working to her wn guitar accompaniment plus a string bass, he projects powerfully on such numbers as "Virgin Mary Had One Son," "Ain't That A-Rocking," "Go Tell It On The Mountain" and "Rise Up Shepherd and Follow," mong others.

Willie Rodriguez & The International Stars: "A Bunch of Bongos" (Grand Award). The hand of Enoch Light is the dominant factor in this new package pegged for the audiophiles. Light has the current sound gimmickry down pat and he's engineered Willie Rodriguez's group through some exciting tempos in the Latino groove. The merengues, cha chas, mambos and sambas are audioed for top results. Herm.

Injunction Stands Vs. Local 802 Welfare Plan

Local 802, N.Y. unit of the American Federation of Musicians, lost another round in the U.S. Court of Appeals last week in its fight to launch its welfare plan for single engagement musicians. The appellate court upheld a decision by Federal Judge Edward J. Dimock that the welfare plan, which required the purchasers of music to pay extra coin to the welfare fund, was not a legal entity under the Federal labor laws.

Original suit to validate the welfare plan was brought by the Orchestra Leaders of N.Y., representing the top band contractors in the metropolitan area. The leaders contended that the union's plan to have Local 802 execs act as trustees of the fund was illegal.

Lara Disbands Orch In Mex Union Hassle

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

Agustin Lara has disbanded hi orchestra as a result of the long-standing union feud between the Venue Rey and Tirso Rivera factions in the Mexican Musicians Union. The composer-singer said his orch had elements from both camps. Last week there had been a "difference of opinion" when each faction attempted to expel the other from the band.

While Lara was featured as "director" of the orch, on hinterland tours and in recordings, musicians were led by Jesus Ferrer. The latter is attempting to reorganize the band and launch it under another name.

MGM Buys Out Verve Records for Over $2,500,000; Maxin Heads Pic Co.'s Label

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has purchased Verv Records from its wner Norman Granz. It's understood that the price for the label will not be less than $2,500,000 or more than $3,000,000. Figure based on a percentage of the amount Verve took in and expended in the last two-year period.

Arnold Maxin, who has been in charge of the MGM Recording Division for the past three years, will head the joint operation. Granz will be in charge of European activities of the merged enterprise and will continue recording activities with the present Verve artist roster.

In the buyup, Joseph R. Vogel, Metro prez, indicated that the Verve identity will be retained as to label, appearance, art direction and price structure. All of Verve's east coast pressings will now be made in MGM's own record manufacturing plant in Bloomfield, N.J. The present distribution relationships of both MGM and Verve will be continued.

Verve has been exceptionally hot the past several years with comedy albums by Shelley Berman, Mort Sahl and Jonathan Winters as well as releases by Ella Fitzgerald. Also in the catalog are LPs by "Jazz At The Philharmonic," which had been a Granz concert attraction for many years.

Other artists on the Verve roster ar Red Allen, Ray Brown, Dorothy Dandridge, Blossom Dearie, Roy Eldridge, Herb Ellis, Four Holidays, Stan Getz, Terry Gibbs, Dizzy Gillespie, Jimmy Giuffre, Johnny Hodges, Earl Humphreys, Gene Krupa, Elsa Lanchester, George Lew , Lewis Sisters, Fran Morocco, Edward (Kid) Ory, Oscar Peterson, Paul Smith, Randy Sparks, Sonny Stitt, Anita O'Day, Mel-Tones, Mel Torme, Margaret Whiting, Mary Kaye Trio, Menasha Skulnik and Gerry Mulligan.

The Verve buy is part of Metro's diversification program recently projected by Vogel.

Local 802 Faces Election Battle Via New Ticket

Local 802, New York wing of the American Federation of Musicians, is facing its first serious election battle in the last eight years with the entry into the field of a full-scale opposition, tagged the Members-Business Ticket. Latter slate is headed by Al Nano, candidate for the presidency; with Samuel Magazine running for viceprexy and Ellsworth Benson running for secretary. Elections will take place early in December.

The opposition is mounting its campaign against Al Manuti, Local 802 prexy for the past eight years who is running for his fifth term. Manuti came into office on an anti-incumbent wave and has since faced only token opposition from against him.

Manuti welcomed the opposition ticket to use the union's demo- isolated individuals running cratic procedures, but said he was confident of being reelected. He pointed out that contracts in all areas of the business now have been ratified by the working musicians and that indicated that the men were satisfied with his negotiating ability. He stated that Nano and supporters had no real issues

VICTOR MOVE BUILDS UP 33

RCA Victor's move into 33 rpm single production (see adjoining story) is seen as the major force towards adoption by the disk industry of a single-speed standard. As in the conversion from the old-time 78 rpm disks to the current double 45 and 33 rpm standard, there are expected to be considerable resistance at the outset to any changeover, but the final emergence of the 33 as the single industry speed regarded as a virtual economic inevitability.

With single sales way off in recent months, the intro of the 33 rpm single could be turned into a giant promotional hypo for the whole industry. It's known that Victor execs have long wanted a new phonograph, aimed at the teenage market, to be put on the market. The intro of the 33 single now makes it likely that new low-priced phonos, with a single-speed turntable, will now be coming out in volume soon.

The likelihood of the singles market existing on a double 45 and 33 rpm basis for very long is small. Retailers, who have enough headaches in stocking up monaural

STEVE SHOLES JOINS RCA 25-YEAR CLUB

Steve Sholes, RCA Victor's pop artists & repretoire topper, joined the RCA 25-year club last week along with three Victor execs at pressing plants. Sholes was feted at a St. Moritz party Thursday (17) together with A. L. McClay, general plant manager; Ernest P. Ruggieri, manager of the Rockaway, N.J. plant; and F. G. Sybbs, factory engineering manager at the Rockaway plant.

George Marek, Victor disk v.p. and general manager, presented engraved gold watches and scrolls to the four execs. Howard Letts, RCA v.p. and controller, was guest speaker at the dinner which was toastmastered by John Hendrickson, N.Y. area personnel manager.

Harem's Hot 40

Frankfurt, Nov. 15.

A 72-year-old oil millionaire from Arabia, the Emir of Gatar, who apparently has everything else, has just added the final touch to his harems—he's sent a diplomat to Germany to buy him some jukeboxes.

His diplomat explained that the Emir was using the automatic music boxes to entertain the ladies—they were bored with everything else.

N.Y. One-Stop Hit by $50,000 Forgery Suit

Bernard Lowe Enterprises, owners of the Cameo label, filed suit in N.Y. Supreme Court last week against Samuel Kleenholtz individually and Raymar Sales, a N.Y. one-stop and dealer, for allegedly selling forged Bobby Rydell's "Ding-a-Ling" hit. Suit, first to be made against a dealer, is an outgrowth of the seizure of counterfeit Cameo disks in New Jersey recently and the subsequent indicaments of several persons and firms by the Bergen County grand jury.

Lowe's complaint seeks a total judgment of $50,000, including actual losses by sale of the alleged forged disks and damage to the registered Cameo trademark. Plaintiff also requested an injunction to block Raymar from making future sales or purchases on the alleged spurious Cameo disks.

Suit against Keenholtz, Raymar's topper, was prepared by the Philadelphia firm of Blanc, Steinberg, Balder & Steinbrook, attorneys for the American Record Manufac-

The big push for the 33 rpm single will finally get underway early in 1961 with the entry of RCA Victor into this market. While other major companies, such as Columbia and Capitol, were first with 33 rpm singles, Victor is kicking off its single 33's with a massive campaign, in a tieup with the Dr. West toothbrush company, that'll probably cost around $750,000.

Borrowing a page from the auto industry, Victor is calling its 33 rpm seven-incher the Compact 33. It'll be released in two forms: as a two-sided single and as four-sided package, similar in concept to the 45 rpm EP. George R. Marek, Victor disk v.p. and general manager, indicated that at least 25 Compact 33s will be included in the initial release early in January.

The tieup with the Dr. West company, which will be bigger in scope than Victor's successful promotion with Remington Rand, will permit heavy saturation advertising in all media. Focus of the campaign will be a Compact 33 highlighter with a toothbrush attached and containing four complete selections from new LPs by Sam Cooke, The Browns, Neil Sedaka and Rod Lauren. Titled "Tunes For Teens," the sampler will have the four tunes in monaural on one side and in stereo on the other.

The toothbrush company, which will be selling the sampler with the brush for 88c, has already

Morris Pushes Advance 'Wildcat' Plugs; 'Camelot' Waits on Special Material

The tunes from the "Wildcat" score are open to everybody with no restrictions on performance dates or holdbacks of special material numbers. According to Sidney Kornheiser, general manager of E. H. Morris Music which is publishing the Cy Coleman-Carolyn Leigh score for the incoming Lucille Ball starrer, the days of keeping tunes from musical shows under wraps are over and the publisher should try to get as many disking and performances of the tunes that he can.

Kornheiser believes that restricting performance of showtunes until after the Broadway opening, as Frank Music did with Meredith Willson's "Unsinkable Molly Brown," is detrimental to the show and there's also no need anymore to restrict plays on the special material songs since each is an entity in itself and could take off with a proper outside rendition. One of the material songs sung by Lucille Ball in "Wildcat," "What Takes My Fancy," has already been out into the groove by Rosemary Clooney on RCA Victor.

Stereo Phono Sales Rise To 2,100,000 in Jan.-Sept. As Monaural Sets Drop

Washington, Nov. 22.

Retail sales of stereophonic phonographs, which have been rising spectacularly since last May, hit a snag in September, according to Electronic Industries Assn.

EIA reported that retail sales totalled 264,636 during September, only 7,055 more than in August. Factory sales, however, continued to soar with 384,289 sold in September, a healthy 76,772 jump over August.

The 1960 total through September for retail stereo sales remained well ahead of the 1959 pace. From January through September, 2,128,047 stereo sets were sold compared with 1,339,472 for the same 1959 period.

Monaural retail sales bucked the recent trend toward stereo and continued to rise. During September, 115,863 monaural sets were sold, 36,499 more than August. The cumulative total for the first nine months, however, was substantially below last

Inside Stuff—Music

Robert J. Burton, Broadcast Music Inc. viceprexy in charge of operations, came into the national news spotlight last week in his capacity of acting city judge in New Rochelle. Sitting in the case of eight Negro parents who were fighting to transfer their children to another school, Burton acquitted them of the disorderly conduct charges while rejecting the charge that New Rochelle schools were guilty of racial discrimination. Burton's decision was in the form of a 50-page decision, unusually long for an inferior court and also unusually outspoken in its defense of the defendants' right to protest. "At the present time," Burton said, "living in large urban communities, with a huge volume of daily news coming from all over the world and inundating newspapers, radio and television, it is frequently necessary for citizens to resort deliberately to the dramatic, the offbeat, and even occasionally to the poor-taste device in order to gain a measure of attention."

MGM Records is launching a special promotion campaign for Connie Francis' date at N. Y.'s Copacabana beginning Dec. 1. For the Copa tables, diskery is readying five-inch cutouts of the singer as souvenirs for the nitery customers. For dealer windows and store interiors, diskery with the cooperation of its N. Y. distrib, Ideal Record Products, is supplying full-length, life-size cutouts of Miss Francis. Circulars and direct mail pieces will be sent to the Copa [illegible]iling list, dealers, chain stores and department stores. Highlight of her appearance will be an on-location recording date for an LP to be called "Connie Francis At The Copa."

Capitol Records is blanketing the nation's deejays with the 1960 Christmas Seal song, "Mistletoe and Holly" with Frank Sinatra. About 3,000 jocks will receive the special promotion record to kick off the current drive of the National Tuberculosis Assn. Included in the promotional disk is a 15-second spoken intro in which Sinatra asks listeners to buy Christmas Seals. "Mistletoe and Holly" was originally recorded in 1958 for a Sinatra album called "A Jolly Christmas From Frank Sinatra."

"Rudolph The Red-Nosed Reindeer," Johnny Marks' Christmas classic, is going into its 12th season with 20 new diskings. This brings "Rudolph's" wax total up to 200 recordings for a sale close to 30,000,000 copies, including Gene Autry's 5,000,000 seller for Columbia. It's also sold 3,000,000 sheet copies.

Among this year's diskers of "Rudolph" are Paul Anka, Ella Fitzgerald, the Chipmunks, the Lennon Sister, Lester Lanin, Crazy Otto, and second versions by Sammy Kaye and Guy Lombardo.

Some of composer-performer Leo Edwards' oldies was spotlighted on "The American Musical Theatre" stanza on WCBS-TV last Saturday afternoon (19). Edwards, brother of the late vaude impresario-composer Gus Edwards, sang one of his earliest tunes, "That's What The Rose Said To Me" and "We Take Our Hats Off To You, Mr. Wilson," which he wrote for Nora Bayes more than 40 years ago. Songstress Adele Jivie and dancer Harlaud Dixon also performed on the show.

In a tiein with Metro's first anni celebration of the "Ben-Hur" pic, MGM Records has culled a single from the soundtrack set to be sent to 4,000 disk jockeys. The single, which will also be used as part of the label's Christmas sales drive, couples Miklos Roza's "Christ Thei[illegible]" with the "Love Theme" used in the film. Diskery will place special emphasis on new outlets such as stores that sell religious articles as well as place ads in religious papers.

"Stardust," one of the alltime most-recorded tunes with the estimated number of platter versions topping the 450 mark, now turned up 14 different versions on the RCA Victor LP titled "The Stardust Road." Package spans Wayne King orch's 1932 slice to a special vocal made by the tune's composer, Hoagy Carmichael, who, incidentally, marks his 61st birthday next week (22). Mills Music, which publishes the Carmichael-Mitchell-Parish copyright, has issued over 50 individual arrangements of "Stardust."

EMI Gross Sales Climb To $192,500,000; Profit Up 9% to $14,975,000

London, Nov. 22.

Electric & Musical Industries gross in the year ended June 30, according to chairman Sir Joseph Lockwood, increased by 2% to $192,500,000 over the year before and profits before tax were up 9% to $14,975,000. Platter sales showed a rise on the previous year.

Sir Joseph reckons that lowprice longplay disks do not represent a large portion of EMI sales, with normal-price albums still chalking up about 97% of total turnover in disks. The EMI topper feels that some low prices set by some newcomers may "in the short run" unsettle the market.

Record sales represent a major longterm problem for the group, according to Sir Joseph. About the future, the EMI chief is cautiously hopeful, though progress will inevitably slow down because the indications are that the economic climate will be more unsettled.

Group is declaring a 17½% dividend on capital stock, compared with th previous equivalent of 13½%.

Kaufman-Anthony Ink Morris Cleffing Pact

Paul Kaufman and Michael Anthony, writers of the current pop click, "Poetry In Motion," have been signed to exclusive cleffing deal by Meridian Music. The firm is E. H. Morris' BMI subsid.

The writers, both in their early 20s, also double as indie disk producers. Sidney Kornheiser, Morris' general manager, hasn't yet determined whether the firm will activate a record label for their platter productions or peddle the masters to other labels. Their "Poetry In Motion" click was recorded by Johnny Tillotson for Cadence.

Monte Kay Transporting Jazz Festivals to Japan

U.S. jazz festivals will be transported to Japan. Monte Kay, jazz manager-promoter, is planning a four-city fete early next year.

This initial festival, part of a series of four which Kay will present in Japan during 1961, will premiere at Sanakei Hall, Tokyo, Jan. 2 and continue through Jan. 15 with performances in Osaka, Kobe and Nagoya. In the concert unit will be Art Blakey & His Jazz Messengers and jazz singer Bill Henderson.

Subsequent festivals of the '61 are planned for March, May and September. Artists for the forthcoming events will be lined up later.

Music Advisory Panel Assists USIA Overseas

Washington, Nov. 22.

A Music Advisory Panel has been named to aid U. S. Information Agency in its efforts to acquaint people abroad with American music and composers.

The panel will be headed by Dr. William Schuman, President of the Juilliard School of Music in New York. Other members: Dr. Harold Spivacke, head of the Music Division of the Library of Congress, David Ritchie Robertson, director of th Oberlin (O.) Conservatory of Music, and John S. Wilson, jazz critic for the N. Y. Times.

Jazz Tribute to Buckley

Lord Buckley, the jazz comedian whose death Nov. 12 kicked off the current investigation of police handling of cabaret license cards in N. Y., will be given a tribute at the Jazz Gallery Dec. Buckley had been working at the Gallery when his card was lifted.

Among the performers set to perform at the memorial bash are Thelonious Monk and Dizzy Gillespie.

PACT GRECO, MONTOYA FOR ISRAELI CONCERTS

Israel promises to be an important outlet for concert bookings next season. Two promoters, representing the firm BROA Productions, are presently in New York lining up talent for tours in that country. Thus far they have inked Jose Greco for two weeks starting next Sept. 20 for weeks and Sept. 20 for two weeks and flamenco guitarist Carlo Montoya.

Details of the tours have not yet been worked out with the William Morris Agency which arranged the deals. However, it's known that there will be several variations of the orthodox type of jaunt including Friday instead of Saturday matinees due to the Sabbath observances on Saturdays.

ABC-Par Gets 4 Aces; Buddy Bregman To Fox; Kapp Gets Vi-Dels; Other Deals

The Four Aces are now recording under the ABC-Paramount banner. Group has been on the Decca label for many years. First platter for the Aces is a coupling of "Dolce Far Niente," for the legituner "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," and "Searching." Group is now on a one-nighter tour and night club tour through the country and will also hit Mexico and Canada.

20th-Fox: Buddy Bregman

Bandleader-arranger Buddy Bregman inked a longterm contract with 20th Fox Records, subsid of film company, first assignment calling for six albums.

Initial LP etching will be a double faced package comprised of Broadway showtunes and arranged with instrumental stress on percussions. Also on tap is a "Road Show" series to be drawn from Broadway show music like "Girl Crazy," "Babes in Arms," "Anything Goes" and "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

Kapp: Vi-Dels, others

The Vi-Dels, singing group from Rhode Island, have been added to Kapp Records. Also joining the label last week were Danny Jordan, Kris Jensen and Johnny Duncan.

Columbia: Maysa Matarazzo

Brazilian singer Maysa Matarazzo has signed with Columbia Records. She's currently appearing at the Blue Angel, N. Y. nitery.

MGM: Armando

The mono-tagged Armando has joined the MGM roster. His first sides for the label are "Transistor" and "Wonderful Time of the Year." The 19-year-old singer wrote the latter tune.

Trey: Sanford Clark

Sanford Clark, who clicked with "Dream Girl" on the Dot label, has switched to Trey Records. Trey toppers Lester Sill and Lee Hazlewood signed Clark to a fiveyear pact. He'll start recording his first single shortly and plans are under way to bring out an album by the first of the year.

CASALS IN ACAPULCO

Cellist to Conduct His Own New Oratorio at Mexican Resort

Cellist Pablo Casals, still an exile from Franco Spain, will lead a festival of music Dec. 10-22 at Acapulco, Mexico. This is supplemental to the Puerto Rican festivals appearances he's been making for several years.

Introduced will be Casals' own new oratorio, "The Manger," with orchestras and six soloists. The composer will conduct.

WTRY, Troy, Jumps Gun On Christmas Tunes to Test Pre-Thanksgiving Reaction

Christmas spins got off to an early start when WTRY, Troy (N.Y.) station started airing Yule platters last Monday (14). According to program manager George LeZotte, he wanted to test whether there would be any listener objection for beginning the Christmas season so early and to help the new disks which now need a longer airing time to break through.

Although the majority of stations around the country wait until after Thanksgiving to start spinning Xmas records, LeZotte felt that this was a self-imposed restriction that wasn't necessary. The station, which is aired in the Troy, Albany and Schenectady area, received only one phone call and one card objecting to the Christmas programming. LeZotte pointed out that the retailers in the area are already showing holiday window displays and that radio stations are already airing Christmas buying spots so that it was foolish to hold to the disk restriction.

Station started its first week of Christmas spins playing one every four hours. LeZotte indicated that they'll come on with more frequency this week. Among the early Yule tunes programmed were Bobby Darin's "Christmas and Auld Lang Syne," Ray Conniff's "Christmas Bells," Peter King's "Little Shepherd Boy," Ella Fitzgerald's "Jingle Bells" and Santo & Johnny's "Twisting Bells."

with which to attack the admin tration.

Meantime, Hy Jaffe, Local 802 secretary and a supporter of Manuti, repudiated the support given him by the opposition ticket. Jaffe indicated that h would run on the Manuti slate.

Underlying and permanent source of discontent in the ranks of Local 802 is the high proportion of unemployment among the local's 33,000 members. This has been a chronic condition since the advent of talking pictures and the decline of the use of musicians in theatres. A large roporti n of Local 802 members are, actuality, only parttime musicians, generally working at other jobs to earn living but occasionally filling weekend engagement as sidemen at weddings, confirm etc.

The Members-Business ticket is using the unemployment figures as their central propaganda theme. It is pledgi g a more efficie t, business-like administration and more flexible policy in negotiating with present and potential users of live music.

Nano has a longtime musician and contractor in Broadway legit theatres. Magazine, onetime bandleader, has been working for various business publications in recent years while maintaining his interest in Local 802 affairs.

FORD COIN FINANCES NEW YANKEE OPERA

Carlisle Floyd, who composed "Susanah" and "Wuthering Heights," both of which gave a jog to "American opera," gets one of two commissions being handed along (the money came from the Ford Foundation) by Julius Rudel of New York City Opera. As usual, the actual cash consideration is kept secret.

A second handout goes to Robert Ward who will fit music to Arthur Miller's dr ma of Salem witchcraft, "The Crucible," rendered into a libretto by Bernard Stambler. Floyd's libretto will be his own, dealing with the reconstruction period in the South. Not known whether this will bring up the Ku Klux Klan again.

Pathe-Marconi's Cross Studies U.S. Disk Marketing to Boost French Sales

In an attempt to clarify the marketing procedures in France, G. E. Cross, prexy of Pathe-Marconi, has come to the U.S. to study American disk merchandising techniques.

The disk biz in France is now about the $30,000,000 annual mark, Cross says while only one-tenth of the country's 45,000,000 population lives in Paris, 40% of the buying market is centered in that city. Cross says that, for the most part, the record customer outside of Paris doesn't know where to go, what to buy or how to buy. "It's a confused issue," he admits, "and the fact that there are too many labels which put too much on the market doesn't help the situation." There are now about 150 manufacturers in France.

For this reason, says Cross, Pathe-Marconi has started the first record club in France. It's an attempt to reach consumers who are not near retail outlets as well as a move to support the French disk dealer as well as augment his take. In the regular manufacturer-dealer relationship (there are no distributor operations in France), the dealer gets a 27.6£ discount. On the club operation, if a dealer introduces a member to the club, he gets 13% of what that member buys.

Pathe-Marconi represents Capitol and MGM as well as a flock of indie U.S. labels. Cross expects that RCA, which is handled by Decca, and Columbia, represented by Philips, may soon enter the club operation in France. In France, now, Pathe-Marconi has about 40% of the market, Philips 33% and Barclay and Decca sharing about 20%.

One of the big problems facing Cross, and one he hopes to find an answer to during his U.S. visit, is how to stimulate single sales in France. He says that singles present an economic and social problem. The teenager in France, he points out, does not have the same liberty as his American counterpart. The teenager stays home, and the adult buys the records. The disk market in France is primarily an extended play disk market. The 45 rpm EP gives the consumer four-to-six tunes for a price ranging between $1 and $1.50, while the singles sell for between 60c to a $1. The 10-inch LP offers 12 songs for $3.98 and the 12-inch LP has 16 songs for $4.98.

The future of stereo in France is still quite doubtful, says Cross. The disk manufacturers started making stereo records, but the phonograph player manufacturers, after somewhat of a start, have now virtually halted production on new stereo machines. "A wider interest in stereo m come," he says, "when more material is especially written for stereo."

After 5-Year Layoff, Marks Levine Is 'First' Concert Biz Consultant

Marks Levine, a founder and longtime head of National Concert & Artists Corp., after the five-year loaf dictated by his doctors and the terms under which he sold National to the former Metropolitan Opera basso, Luben Vichey, has become partially active in the area of concert management, though only as an elder statesman.

He may be the first and only "consultant" the concert area, though consultancies are common today in television, advertising and pictures. He is currently handling Thomas Scherman's Little Orchestra Society, the Herbert Barrett Concert Office, Entertainment Enterprises of St. Louis and the National Assn. of Concert Managers, which has some 95 members.

Levine was trained as a civil engineer. After graduation from Cooper Union, N. Y., he worked in the coal mines of Uniontown, Pa. —a roundabout route to longhair music. His entry to concert economics came via the fluke of having a violin virtuoso for an elder brother and accompanying him on a tour to Australia.

That led to a connection with the old Daniel Mayer impresari office in Manhattan, later to the NBC Artists Bureau, before NCAC was established as a separate entity at the "suggestion" of the Federal Communications Commission.

scored 1,000,000 copies of the disk and they will be sold through the thousands of dealers handling Dr. West's products.

Marek said that Victor is producing the 33 single "in an effort to broaden the singles market." He noted that the present four-speed instruments "offer a potential for playing 33 singles which did not exist years ago. The introduction of the Compact 33 enables RCA Victor to offer recorded music to the public in whatever form it prefers."

Marek pointed out that the new single "is also expected to attract the interest of the adult market," which has been using the 33 rpm speed for albums. Marek said that "a market can be created for those who like pop music but do not wish or cannot afford a whole LP." The Victor topper believes that there is a market for serious music on the Compact 33, such as the "Blue Danube" waltz of the Chopin "Polonaise." "Certainly, in the old days, we used to do a thriving business on such short works. With the increased interest in all classical music, the time may have come to try to revive this market."

Marek accented that Victor will "continue to merchandise and promote actively the 45 rpm singles." This market, he noted, "is a vast group and will remain one of the mainstays of the industry.

Marek urged that the name "Compact," be adopted by the entire industry as the best way to describe the new product to the public. Victor's suggested list price for the Compact 33 single will be 98c, the same as the 45 rpm single, while the Compact 33 double will go for $1.49. After the start of the new year, all Victor single releases will be issued simultaneously in 33 and 45 rpm form.

Single Speed

and stereo LPs, will be faced with additional inventory problems with the intro of the 33 rpm singles. There's question but that the stores will be happier with speed industry.

Probably the biggest block to the 33 m singles will come from the radio stations. However, just as the radio outlets were finally weaned away from the old 78s, they will swing over to the 33 rpm singles. The conversion will even be faster in this case since the 33 rpm speed is now universally used for the programming of LPs. It's understood that Victor is now conducting a study of radio station needs in light of the new 33 rpm single.

The move of the indie companies into 33 single production will depend purely on the market reaction. While the majors have the resources to make the pioneering moves, the indies will watch the sales figures and will get into the 33 single picture as soon as sales warrant.

coming "Camelot," differs with Kornheiser on the special material problem. There are several songs from "Camelot" being held back, but Rosemont says they'll have no meaning to anyone until the show hits Broadway and they're recorded in the original cast album.

Kornheiser, however, feels that the young diskers today care little about the song's origin and less about the composer. If they can see the value of the song itself, they'll record it.

Kornheiser is also after live play on the "Wildcat" tunes wherever he can get it. On this level, he's sending around copies of the complete score to every orch, big or little, playing in and around N.Y.

Meantime, the Frank Music restriction on performance of the songs from Meredith Willson's "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," was broken Sunday night (20) with a key plug on Dinah Shore's NBC-TV show. The Frank firm, which is publishing the score with Willson's Rinanier Music had blocked performance until Monday (21).

Miss Shore jumped the gun by close to three hours by doing a version of "I Ain't Down Yet." Incidentally, her Capitol single release of the song was released to deejays for plays beginning Monday. A Frank Music spokesman says the firm is "investigating" the release break but it's understood that Miss Shore received clearance to do the song.

An earlier release break was reported to have occurred in Philadelphia last Tuesday (15) when an indie station programmed the Four Aces ABC-Paramount disking of "Dolce Far Niente." Frank staffers took some steps to prohibit further play but no action against the station is indicated.

Meantime, with the restriction date lifted this week, the Frank Music staffers hit the deejay circuit with 17 singles and an original cast album out of the Capitol factory.

FED EXCISE TAX SHOW SLIGHT DISK BIZ DROP

Washington, Nov. 22.

Slight downbeat in the record industry is reflected by a drop in revenues from the federal manufacturers' excise on disks. Internal Revenue Service reported a yield of $4,480,000 for the three months ending Sept. 30 of this year—a decrease of $42,000 from the sam 1959 period.

The take from the tax on musical instruments also were behind last year's pace.

Talent Shortage Hits Provinces, Top Acts Have B.O. Pull But Won't Travel

Chicago, Nov. 22.

Talent shortage—quantitative in this context—reportedly is an increasing headache for nightclubs. Potent acts in too many cases, it's charged, are passing up saloons in favor of sticking close to home (N.Y. or the Coast) via clubdates and teleguestsing.

Till recently the anxiety was thought unique to the urban large-seaters, accentuated now and then by a policy overhaul or outright foldo, per the Chi Chez Paree demise for lack of elite names. But now the problem is becoming general in the provinces, as well.

Situation, as it disturbs many a class spot around the country, is reflected in the growing number of bookings turned down or cancelled by talent. And among other things, it's making life plenty hectic and aggravating at the agencies.

Coin Not an Issue

Only seldom, apparently, is it an issue of coin, according to the percenters. Most of the bonifaces are quite willing to go for the tall dough, but attractions are still reluctant. A variety of reasons are conjectured—point of no return viz. the income tax structure, for one. For another, some of the names, it's contended, just don't want to "lower themselves" playing hicksville.

Thus, frustration on the booking front has become a sharpened concern of late for major spots in such towns as Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Indianapolis.

Some embittered operators, assailing standoffish talent as selfish and shortsighted, would like to switch to cheaper formats but fear their patronage has too much marquee orientation. Other managements slap television and the industrial and concert circuits for allegedly having spoiled attractions, even lesser names, to the point where bistros are viewed as last-resort employment.

Meanwhile, there's the resultant cycle of spiraling show biz economics which looks to flatten some of the clubs and make for some drastic revamping at others.

MORT SAHL BOFFO AT BLINSTRUB'S IN BOSTON

Boston, Nov. 22.

Mort Sahl, who recently appeared in Boston on a concert one-nighter, has given Blinstrub's here one of its biggest weeks. Booked at comparatively the last minute, because of the fallout of Patti Page who was held over for an additional week at the Riviera, Las Vegas, timing was such that Sahl came in for the Harvard homecoming week, and during the Harvard-Yale game.

Result was a vast converging of collegiate crowds during the week. It was the first time that Sahl played a commercial room in the area. Operator Stanley Blinstrub is negotiating for another engagement for Sahl, for the current season. It's unusual for this spot to play the same headliner twice within the same year.

Seattle Saloons Pan Biz From Gold Rush Decor

Seattle, Nov. 22.

An epidemic of offbeat spots using jazz combos, Gay Nineties ideas and backwoods decor have sprung up in the Yesler Way and near skid-row section of the city, gravitating from Pioneer Square. Banjo bands predominate. Some of the spots have elaborate bars, used in saloons of the Gold Rush Days, for atmospheric impact.

Taverns boast such alluring names as "Jazz at Jack's" and "Blue Banjo." Latter is billed as the west's "most authentic 1890 eating spot right in the heart of old Seattle." Bavarian refreshments are featured. There's no cover charge and $1 brings the beer or wine. "The Bowery" is another spot which has come up with live bands and dancing.

Classier cocktail lounges are also using live entertainment. Gene Austin just wound up a month at the "Top of the Town" while Joe Venuti clicked in a five-week stand at Rossilini's 410. In other locations, there's a trend toward community sings.

Belafonte SRO, Toronto

Toronto, Nov. 22.

Harry Belafonte's two-weeker at the O'Keefe auditorium here has been sold out. It's expected to hit about the maximum $102,000 for the first week with a $6 top.

Belafonte's show opened Monday (21) and will run to Dec. 3.

$72,500 In Detroit

Detroit, Nov. 22.

Harry Belafonte's show scored a capacity $72,500 in six performances at the Riviera Theatre here. House seats 2,700.

Theatre was scaled to $5.50.

Cover Ban Lifts Mex Nitery Biz

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

The city administration edict which bans cover charges in local night clubs has, surprisingly enough, been a boon to club owners. These operators, who a few short weeks back were in anguish at loss of revenues, are now wreathed in prosperous smiles.

Talk of shutdowns, "discrimination" and losses has disappeared overnight as clientele has increased. Lack of a cover lures cash customers, even though they wind up spending much more than former minimums. But in some clubs, it is true, there have been insidious hikes for drinks and food, carefully spread so that boosts aren't glaringly apparent.

Instead of empty tables under the old minimum regime, smiling headwaiters tell queued up customers "sorry, no tables left." This is especially the case in spots offering international entertainment such as the Globos, which had planned to convert its site to a parking lot.

The Terraza Cassino, featuring Rolando La Serie and Lorenzo Lorry, is also doing boom business. And this is true of all spots down to those featuring but so-so national entertainers.

When the first shock of the no cover edict hit club owners, there

Ottawa's Chaudiere Club Inks 2 Outside Bookers To Pep Up Dwindling Biz

Ottawa, Nov. 22.

An effort to spark sagging business at the Chaudiere Club gets under way next Monday (28) when Harvey Glatt, Ottawa impresario and operator of The Treble Clef diskery, and Vivienne Stenson, Toronto impresario, takes over bookings.

Owner J. P. Maloney, who claims the show biz side of the Chaudiere is too much for his time, will continue to operate the bar and food side of the club. Deal will have Glatt and Miss Stenson handling acts and production on the gate receipts, Maloney running the rest on bar and banquet receipts.

The new booking duo told VARIETY they had no policy set yet but intend to give more attention to the production of the shows. Glatt, who has been bringing names for one-nighters in Ottawa for the past two years (Stanley Holloway, Josh White, Tom Lehrer, others), will handle the staging while Miss Stenson will be general manager.

They will cooperate on bookings and an attempt will be made to create an "atmosphere" attractive to customers. Since the Gatineau Club was destroyed by fire and the Fairmount Club lost its license during the past autumn, the Chaudiere is the only major nitery in the Ottawa area.

The Glatt-Stenson pact will run for at least a year and it is expected the Chaudiere will operate during the winter for the first time in its eight years' existence. Unless circumstances call for longer pactings, acts will continue to be booked for a week at a time.

SENNES NOT BOOKING RIVIERA IN LAS VEGAS

Las Vegas, Nov. 22.

Riviera execs are emphatic in declaring that Frank Sennes does not book the shows, pointing out that it is one of the chores of board chairman Elias Atol.

Sennes is entertainment director for Wilbur Clark's Desert Inn and the Stardust, group which was recently turned down in a bid to purchase 38% of the Riviera. There has been some talk that he may be the current Riviera show chief, even if in an anonymous capacity. Sammy Lewis recently resigned as Riviera show producer.

Paris Strip Impresario Bares Points Behind His Crazy Horse Saloon's Click

Paris, Nov. 22.

Alain Bernardin, whose striptease policy at his Crazy Horse Saloon parlayed the spot into a local and international tourist mecca, stresses that the technique and approach of his talent are not to be compared to the Yank mode of shedding. This, he adds, is usually quite vulgar and practiced by older women before all-male audiences.

Bernardin also gave nudity more aesthetic fillip in his new club, The Soho, which recently opened here. He adds that his clubs strip style usually attract as many women as men in the audiences. Most males, when queried, say their wives or femme companions insisted on seeing the show.

Primarily responsible for the success of his layout, Bernardin opines, is the overall atmosphere of sound production values and lighting plus specially selected young women who enact little strip rituals which manage to be erotic rather than out and out pornography. Webster defines the word erotic as pertaining to amat[illegible] desires. Pornography, of course, is a much baser term.

Started Decade Ago

Bernardin states he started the strip in his Crazy Horse Saloon 10 years ago by variations on the frou-frou types popular at the turn-of-the-century, that is girls taking a bath, th wedding night and others.

Then he slowly made them more sophisticated like the stripping, crying widow, poses done to blackouts, exotic aspects, a rope dance, etc., plus evocatively named peelers like Lily La Pudeur, Dodo De Hamburg, Lili Niagara, et al.

When this caught on Bernardi found his club shoehorned people in every night. But he kept up his incessant interviews and searches for the right girls as well as finding new strip skits.

He says that bodily perfection is not the top prerequisite for a good

Tax Cut Perks Niteries

Washington, Nov. 22.

Latest Internal Revenue figures reflect a sharp upsurge in nitery trade under the reduced cabaret tax bite. Take for the quarter ending Sept. 30 totaled $9,119,000 — only $2,658,000 below the same 1959 period when the tax was levied at double the present rate.

The cabaret tax was cut from 20% to 10% last May.

Cantors' Big Nite At Garden Dec. 5

The Jewish Ministers & Cantors Assn. of the U.S. and Canada celebrate 60 years in the vanguard of traditional liturgical music, with a gala concert at Madison Square Garden on Dec. 5. The American Jewish Literary Foundation, a non-profit organization, is the cosponsor of this concert.

Some 250 cantor clergy, serving congregations of the Orthodox, Conservative and Reformed tradition throughout the U.S., Canada and Mexico, will be on hand under the direction of choral director, Oscar Julius. Guest artists, include Cantor Bela Kerskovits, whose life story was given a "This Is Your Life" tv treatment several seasons ago; Cantor Michal Kusewitsky and his brother, Cantor David Kusewitzky.

Show biz names scheduled to appear at the concert include Ed Sullivan, Harry Hershfield, Joey Franklin as master of ceremonies, Joseph Szigetti and Shai K. Ophir, among others.

MILW. CAFE OP BANKRUPT

Milwaukee, Nov. 22.

Calvin A. Becker, former operator of the Club Aberdeen in nearby Greendale, filed a voluntary bankruptcy petition in Federal Court last week listing liabilities of $232,300 and assets of $2,059.

Some $3,312, according to the papers, are due in Federal, Wisconsin and Milwaukee taxes. Becker, who was president of the cocktail lounge, also listed liabilities of $111,134 as owed to secured creditors.

LOU WALTERS FACES ARREST ON N.Y. CLAIM

Lou Walters, producer at the Tropicana Las Vegas, faces arrest if he appears in New York on a charge of failing to pay $16,164 he owes the City of New York from operation of his defunct Cafe de Paris several years ago.

Walters, free $1,000 bond since February, was slated to appear in Magistrate's Court last week, but failed to show up. Magistrate Edward J. Chapman revoked the bail and issued a rant for his arrest.

Salvatore Alfano, Walters' attorney, said that his client was occupied in staging cafe shows i Las Vegas and Miami Beach (Deauville Hotel). He added that Walters had already spent more than $1,200 in fares to N.Y. in previous visits on the matter and couldn't afford further expenditures.

Philly Mummers' Parade Puts Tariff on Seats

Philadelphia, Nov. 22.

Out-of-towners visiting the Philadelphia New Year's Parade will be forced to pay a tariff for seats. It is the first time a charge has ever been made for the annual Mummers' parade, for which the city kicks in a healthy sum in prizes. The 2,500 reserved seats will be sold at $2 each. These will accommodate out-of-towners who keep writing for tickets, according to recreation commissioner Robert W. Crawford.

The bite will be put on the visitors only. Tickets for the regular unreserved seats around City Hall will be distributed free as in former years. If the plan proves successful this year, additional $2 bleacher seats will be added in future years.

was strong talk of "collective" action against the administratio to obtain a repeal. Now all is quiet along the night club belt, except for steady tinkling of the cash registers.

Some clubs here in the past had "table rights" charges tagged the minimum consumption tariffs. These, they claimed, were needed to meet expenses of international acts. Yet, during his brief three-day visit to Mexico Paul Anka did a nightery appearance at the Patio, for an undisclosed sum. And the Cuban "Tropicana" musical show has opened at the Senorial.

Club managements refuse to talk about bringing in top foreign talent at the moment. The lush Christmas season is coming up, when night clubbers go on the town no matter what entertainment is offered. But after the New Year, managers of poshiest spots intend to work out some means of luring boxoffice names to their clubs.

Nat'l Hotel Expo Gourmand's Joy

Recordwise, the National Hotel Exposition which ended a four-day run at the N.Y. Coliseum Thursday (17), had no peers in its 45-year history. There were 57,000 registrations and 850 exhibitors. Another record was chalked up in that there were more gratis comestibles than were available in probably any other kind of show around.

If were so inclined, and many were, several complete meals could be had by traversing the four floors of the exhibition hall. One could start with juices and even partake of cocktails before-hand, then run thr ugh to som hefty desserts.

The huge number of exhibitors were more than anxious for the boniface industry to taste their wares. Equipment manufacturers were also eager to sh w how excellent foods could be when turned out on their product.

It was a gourmand's holiday nd for free as well. However, if ne missed the wine with the meal, the major dish could have been tidbits of London broil, or frankfurters or hamburgers. And there were snacks such as pizza, Coke nd Pepsi galore, plus coffee, cream and cakes. It wasn't strange that the refreshment stands didn't are too well during this display.

Outside the adventures in eating, the exhibit was distinguished by a display of the culinary arts in which chefs of all types vied for the most elegant ice sculptors, occasion cakes and able display. There were also a model hotel room and model dining setups, all of which were sufficient to give bonifaces new ideas in decoration and service. What's more, the latest in kitchen equipm nt as well as room furniture were shown.

This display was probably one of the best sinc the show moved to the Coliseum. Thomas C. Charlotte Cooking With New Night Spots

Charlotte, N.C., Nov.

Charlotte is getting some supper clubs.

The Pecan Grove, which has been operating in a building designed only as an eating place, i erecting a theatre restaurant to show off its live entertainment. The Starlite popped up in a remodeled building to give the city an impressive new night spot. The Lodge moved out of its small location to a more commodious place.

Some of the clubs may have hard sledding, but there increasing evidence Charlotteans want that ty entertainment. Last summer promoter T. D. Kemp had an ingenious idea. He had s me entertainers that were between jobs and would play the Grove for a reasonable fee. The resp se was such that the Ink Spots, Charlie Spivak, Dean Hudson, a Lester Lani combo, and Gene Austin and group came along.

Lotsa New Employment for Talent With Diversification: Herb Shriner

Offbeat channels of promotion devised by performers have done much to expand the horizons of show business according to Herb Shriner. A performer, especially one who has had exposure in several media, is eligible for the hypoed activity, but the problem remains of tailoring the newly discovered showcases to his own particular talents.

Shriner is now busy most of the year on such offbeat stints as a harmonica soloist and commentator with symphonies throughout the country. He has also served as a parade marshal, has opened stores and has hit the concert route with a company of his ow Shriner feels that Americans, generally, are more than ready to go out and will do so for the right kind of attraction or one that is promoted correctly. He also feels that video is doing very little these days to keep viewers glued to the set. However, the fact that many towns are devoid of live entertainment media keeps many at tv or at an occasional picture.

Shriner's concerts, done with maestro Gustave Haenschen and folksinger George Alexander, have been consistently successful. Haenschen usually gets a crew from local symphony orchestras to back the concerts.

His Hoosier identification has served him well in promoting a homespun type of American humor. This identity has opened several avenues for him. One of the major items was his narration of a Colpix album concerning the Nautilus. Although not a big seller with the public, it served as an i - portant wedge for hi

Shriner pointed out that there were about 4,000 firms identified with construction of the atomic submarine. Each of these firms bought lotsa albums. But more importantly for him, it served to introduce him to executives of these companies many of whom later called upon his services in ne capacity or another.

Shriner feels that opening these avenue of new employment is more important than having your own video show. "After it goes off the air where are you?" But diversification of activity into areas of his own competence has given him a permanent lease on many avenues of work. He feels that many performers can ulate this activity.

There are some that have made a specialty of appearing on behalf of certain types of charities, other than telethons. Others are skilled at emceeing beauty pageants. Shriner prefers his own activities, which includes organization of harmonica clubs and is even toying with the formation of a harmonica symphony orchestra. He has made a deal with Hohner of Germany which makes Hoosier Boy Harmonicas for him.

Chi Exotics Urge AGVA End Cops' 'Harassment'

Chicago, Nov. 22.

Exotics working this territory are in a fresh stew over recent police "harassment" that has landed a number of them in court as "inmates of a disorderly house," the perennial rap. No convictions so far, as the judiciary tosses one case out after another.

But th strippers are incensed and demanding counteraction by the American Gulid of Variety Artists. First step likely will be to huddle with the mayor or an aide in an effort to learn whyfors of the alleged intimidation.

AGVA claims the cops have acted brazenly, invading dressing-rooms and even pinching several peelers sipping coffee in a restaurant across from one of the clubs raided.

Situation became so acute that the femmes (some 700 are working Chi area currently) staged a jam-packed rally last Wednesday (16) in a near-Loop hotel to protest and plan counterattack. Previous week, also, union's midwest executive board met to mull action, deciding initially on confrontation with the mayor.

Complaints by the garment-doffers stress that the cops have promiscuously pinched 'em, per the aforementioned coffee break roundup, and often have failed even to slap charges on many of the gals. That's harassment plain and simple, they claim.

Prominent surmise of motive is that the raiders are after payoffs. Many former such sources reportedly have been choked off since Coast criminologist O. W. Wilson assumed superintendency of the force less than a year ago in wake of the burglars-in-blue scandal that rocked the town.

Apparently, the bluecoats aren't finding the stripperies especially "cooperative," hence the tensified heat over alleged illegal doings.

Sammy Davis Grosses 22½G in Frisco Week

San Francisco, Nov. 22.

Sammy Davis Jr. opened at the Geary last Tuesday (15) night without incident, despite threats phoned to the theatre. Crank calls had threatened bomb and also Nazi-type picket line. Neither materialized and dozen plainclothes and uniformed cops around lobby wrote calls off as the work of harmless nuts.

Show grossed $22,500 in seven-performance week, with the 1,550-seat house scaled to $5.40-$5.95.

Calgary Exhibition Nets Record $331,918; Regina Exhib Racks Up $61,238

Calgary, Alta., Nov. 22.

The Calgary Exhibition and Stampede Ltd., showed a net surplus of $331,918 on the year's operations, as compared with $254,586 in 1959. General manager Maurice E. Hartnett termed it the best year in the organization's history.

Revenue for the six-day midsummer Stampede totalled $1,241,735, as against $1,199,493 last year. Gate and grandstand revenue hit a new high, totalling $590,313, up $42,000 over 1959, although the gate attendance was off because of a 25c boost in the admission price.

Midway, exhibits and concession revenue totalled $222,661, an increase of more than $7,500. Horse race revenue was up about the same amount, totalling $68,632 net. Betting topped last year, but expenses were higher.

Profit operation of the Stampede Corral, Big Four building, the Arena and the Agriculture building was $79,732, compared with $101,087 last year. Decline was due largely to a drop in profit on operation of the Stampeder hockey club.

Mervyn A. (Red) Dutton was re-elected president.

Indpls. Agency Opens Fla. Office, Eyes Coast Branch

Indianapolis, Nov. 22.

On a biz-building spree, Ross W. Christena percentery here recently opened Fort Lauderdale office headed by John Winn and hopes to staff a Coast office before the first of the year. Agency recently added Charles Worpell, formerly with MCA in Chi, to head up its cocktail division here.

Christena is dickering for the Ringling Bros. Barnum & Bailey circus to appear next May 28-29 in connection with the 500-mile auto-race festivities.

Barto, Marshall Fired by AGVA Exec Bd. for Advising Ex-Dissident

Dewey Barto, head of the outdoor department of the American Guild of Variety Artists, and Bob Marshall, an organizer for the union, were fired Monday afternoon (21) by the union's executive board for collaborating with opposition elements. The dismissals were the result of an affidavit by a former organizer, Joe Walt, who charged Barto and Marshall, having advised Walt to get in touch with the opposition.

The Walt affidavit was presented to the executive board meeting which was hearing charges brought by former president Penny Singleton about alleged election irregularities.

Miss Singleton, represented by attorney Henry M. Katz, requested a hearing by the union as a prerequisite to an audition of the charges by the Dept. of Labor under the Landrum-Griffin Act.

The hearing was stormy in sections especially when Katz demanded the answer to Miss Singleton's charges in writing as per Article 20 of the union's constitution. Katz also demanded that the executive board bar themselves from making an adjudication of the charges inasmuch as they would be in a position of passing judgment on themselves. Katz stated that to preceed under these conditions would be in violation of the AGVA constitution. The hearing broke up following the passage of motion to proceed despite Katz's charges.

Barto, a former national executive secretary of the union, has long been active in the union He was partially responsible in ousting former executive secretary Matt Shelvey following charges of corruption within AGVA, and was the first head of the outdoor division.

Miss Singleton, having filled the legal requirement of a hearing within the union, is now able to file with the Dept. of Labor.

Bachemin's Revue Gets Hotel, Nitery Dates

Dallas, Nov. 22.

Johnny Bachemin's "Point Blank" revue, featuring many of the young talent who appeared at the Century Room last summer, has been signed for the Monteleone Hotel in New Orleans and the Vapors in Hot Springs.

The show recently closed at the Plantation Club in Greensboro, N. C.

Row Over Police Payoffs May Kill N.Y. Work Permits

The current New York cabaret probe over the personnel licensing, which has projected names like Frank Sinatra, Sophie Tucker, Jules Podell, Ted Shapiro, Jack Silverman and Bea Kalmus as being among those who never got the necessary permits and/or had been working with lapsed permits, may achieve vicariously for the Gotham musicians and performers what they couldn't do for themselves. Or such is the hope.

Police Commissioner Stephen Kennedy persists that, because of the alleged shady backgrounds of some nitery operations, this is still the only way the New York authorities can keep tabs of personnel—from busboys to stars and possibly hidden owners, presumably of underworld character—in the niteries. Hence the fingerprinting and the $2 fee.

Fact that hotels are exempt and that bigtime stars playing legiti-

Kim Sisters (3); Emil Coleman and Theo Fanidi orchs; $4 corer.

Min-Ja. 19; Ai-Ja. 20, and Sook-Ja. 21, are the Korean-born Kim Sisters who have made impact on U. S. tv, in Las Vegas and other niteries, and who, on their first mission to Manhattan, give evidence that these three kids have nothing but talent, versatility and beauty.

They sing, they swing, they dance, they jive and they're a three-gal A'M wrapped in 's purty a bundle of song-dance-musicianship as one would want to please the eye and ear. They're a solid cafe act, zinging and swinging from the gong, erring perhaps only on generosity of their undeniable talents.

Opening in native garb at thos kingsize Korean harps (a 12-stringed instrument called the ka-un-gum), they soon segu into a repertoire of standards which, with progression of repertoire, tips off that they got their schooling off the disks.

Result is that "Jambalaya," "Tennessee Waltz," "Chicago," "Shanty Town," "Danny Boy," "Every Street's a Boulevard," "Lazy River," "Sing Sing Sing," "Sincerely," the Jolson medley; an oldtime medley, "Y'All Come," "Charlie Brown," "Bill Bailey" and "Saints Come Marching In," is a surefire albeit somewhat yesteryear ASCAP-BMI hit parade.

Quite patently the kids learned their stuff, as happens to be case-history, off the jukeboxes in GI installations during the Korean unpleasantness — history has never quite given it full status as a full-fledged "war." Between the platters and off the Armed Forces Network programing they mastered tempo and style and learned lyrics of which they didn't know the meaning.

Having a Korean show biz family background, they started also to learn playing the instruments—guitar, saxes, traps, clarinet, banjo, trumpet, trombone, harps—and the end-result is a slick professional threesome.

They are shiny-eyed, bright-faced lookers who must learn (1) some newer ditties; (2), editing; (3) how to control their profuse perspiring. If the latter is physiologically uncontrollable, they should devise some business with a kingsize kerchief for judicious patting of the generous beads that are born of their energetic antics.

The Kims are an attractive blend of the Oriental with their "occent" on the Occidental in tempo and repertoire. They could perhaps hark back a little more to their native idiom if only for change of pace. It might be refreshing although the sum total of the Kim cuties is more than sufficient unto the entertainment purpose thereof.

A captious footnote, however, may apply to this particular booking. The Waldorf's Empire Room is of a calibre geared to certain personalities (Piaf, Chevalier, Belafonte) and the Kims, even if perhaps curbed in the generosity of their wares were they slotted into the Copa of the Latin Quarter, would appear to be better adapted to a straight nitery rather than a hotel room.

Per usual Emil Coleman backstops the gals expertly, and later gets 'em out on the dance floor, spelled by the Theo Fanidi ensemble. Maitre d' Louis Siccardi says biz has been holding up well; predecessor attraction Frankie Laine handled his b.o. end of it very creditably too. Abel.

Shoreham, D. C.

Washington, Nov. 17.

Marty Allen & Steve Rossi, Bob Cross Orch. (14); $2 cover.

Zany frolicking by Marty Allen & Steve Rossi has collected such enthusiastic acceptance from customers of the elegant Shoreham Hotel Blue Room in the past that boniface Allan Bralove skeds them once a year for a two-week stint, the longest time he gives any act.

They are back again with a lot of material they used last year, which is just as good as it ever was, plus some topical new lines on the election which has punch and wit. Bralove has shown reserve about signing comedians for his big room, particularly since he objects to offcolor gags. But Allen & Rossi are funny and clean.

The team is necessarily compared to Dean Martin & Jerry Lewis because similarity exists. Allen is a completely original clown, who can make his face and body provoke as much laughter as the spoken word. Rossi, the straight man, is tall, dark, handsome and Italian, with a fine singing voice. He also does imitations of Harry Belafonte, Tony Bennett, Tony Martin and others.

Basic construction of the act's format remains unchanged from last year, with new gags sprinkled in and a fresh choice of music. There is a fine pace with all the foolishness. The reception at th Blue Room was big.

Bob Cross' orchestra does a fine job at showtime and dancetime. Carp.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Nov. 14.

Marlene Dietrich, Jay Lawrence, Don Chast in, Riviera Dancers (12), Jack Cathcart Orch (17); produced by Frank Sennes, $4 minimum.

Marlene Dietrich comes up with a carbon of an act she's done in Vegas before, but in this outing her rich, mystical charm is more evident, adding up to memorable impact. Her husky pipes, in their distinctively interesting way, breathe fascinating sounds into 13 songs, each of which got sincere applause from first-nighters.

She does a delightfully animated "Whoopee," a dramatic French "Marie," and a stirring "Lili Marlene," in addition to such Dietrich standards as "Boys In The Back-room," "Laziest Girl," "Johnny," and "I May Never Come Home."

Miss Dietrich gets top level assistance from the light man, and bows off in a brisk Sonia Shaw choreographed finale while doing some fancy footwork with 12 chorines. The Jack Cathcart orch (17) provides flawless backing. A full-length white mink supplements the glamorous Dietrich legend early in the turn.

Jay Lawrence, too long absent from the Strip, returns with some of the best standup comedy routines seen here in years. Lawrence, who says he just did a telethon for athlete's foot (". . . all the real good diseases were taken . . ."), is a handsome young man who gets booming yocks with his spoofing of tv commercials, boxing announcers, and celeb impreshes, along with a very funny assortment of situation stories.

Holdover production number features the singing of matinee-idol type Don Chastain; show, produced by Frank Sennes, is set for two weeks. Duk

Hotel Monteleone, N. O.

New Orleans, Nov. 15.

Nelson Eddy with Gale Sherwood (and Theodore Paxton), Nick Stuart Orch (7); $2.50 weeknight minimum; $4 Sats.

Marqueeing the names of Nelson Eddy and Gale Sherwood means big biz at Billy Monteleone's plush Swan Room. Eddy's format is unchanged in this playback, his third in the spot in as many years.

Eddy and partner, the well-proportioned Miss Sherwood, and Theodore Paxton, his longtime pianist-arranger-conductor, opened to a full and enthusiastic house and mid-week reservation desk was swamped.

Baritone, who seems timeless in plying his brand of romantic illusion, warbles all the tunes associated with his long career, including "Neath A Southern Moon," "Sweet Mystery Of Life," "Wunderbar," "Balalaika," "Falling In Love With Someone," "Rose Marie" and others — sometimes blending voices with his blond partner.

Eddy's pipes are as robust as ever, and after a few bars from each of the songs remembered in his films, the palm-pounding gathers strength. By show's end the romanticists are completely under his spell.

His satire and horseplay with Theodore Paxton prove an added treat via impreshes of such singers as Nat "King" Cole, Frankie Laine, Billy Eckstine and others miming Eddy's "Road To Mandalay."

Miss Sherwood comes on midway in show clad in a scant oriental costume that brings wolf calls and whistles from male contingent. She sings straight in a splendid voice that's tailored for musicomedy and light opera.

Crowded house, with many unescorted middleage and older femmes at ringside tables, begged for more. They came to hear Eddy sing the old melodies that he made famous and he didn't disappoint them. Liuz.

Pigalle, London

London, Nov. 15.

Jack Carter; The Barry Sisters (2); Tanya & Biagi; Pigalle Lorelies (10); Woolf Phillips and Tony Scott orchs. $6.75 minimum.

Al Burnett has a click talent lineup in his new Pigalle show and the ropes should be out for the four-weeks season. With Jack Carter providing the comedy and the Barry Sisters the vocals, it is a boff show from the start, and though somewhat overlong, adds up to the best type of cabaret entertainment. It is a twice nightly attraction, per the normal Pigalle policy.

Apart from a tv date which he played about a year or so ago, Carter was largely an unknown quantity to British audiences, but that is a state he'll be correcting in the next month with his fast and very funny routine. He is on stage for 40 minutes and in that time there is no letup in the pace, the gags, the humor—or the audience reaction.

He casts his net widely in his search for subject matter—and it all gets the same punchy, lively treatment. There is his interpretation of a UN debate, for instance, which he reduces to an uproarious cross talk between Khrushchev and a French delegate. Then he switches to television with pertinent and hilarious comments about a variety of programs, among them, of course, "This is Your Life." It is the same treatment, too, for the rock 'n' roll entertainers, the oldtime stars and their brand of showmanship and a host of other subjects.

The Barry Sisters are no newcomers to London, but once again impress strongly with their good looks, stunning appearance and fine sense of harmony. Their 33 minutes on opening night may have been a shade too long, but that is the only valid criticism that can be levelled against them.

Their numbers are carefully selected, and there is a sense of balance in the routine. Their opening interpretation of "Wild About Harry," sets the mood. Among their better entries are "Whose Sorry Now" (sung in Oriental folk style), "Dark Eyes" (introed as the number they sang the Ed Sullivan Show in Moscow last year), "Come Prima" and finally "Won't You Come Home Bill Bailey."

A comedy dance specialty by Tanya & Biagi is a mild and conventional opener to follow the resident dancing line of 10 girls who are on for one very brief appearance. As always, the entire presentation is handsomely showcased by the longtime resident Woolf Phillips orch which, with the Tony Scoot orch, shares the dais for the intervening dance sessions. Myro.

Trade Winds, Chi.

Chicago, Nov. 17.

Vic Damone, Allan Drake, Dick Stabile Orch (9), Joe Parnello Trio; $2.50 cover.

In his third stand here within six months, Vic Damone appears headed for another boxoffice romp as one of this spot's powerhouse attractions. And once the founders have been shoe-horned in, singer gives 'em a well-worth-the-effort show, wrapped some sock belting with crafty stagemanship.

Triumph that it is, there has to be credited again to cue savvy of Dick Stabile presiding precision-like over seven sidemen augmented by two houseband hands. The total is a choice complement in this intimate room, furnishing Damone the right instrumental dosage. Star himself, however, was almost sobotaged at show caught by some mike distorti

Be it evergreen, uptempo sh w tune or ballad, Damone is ever impressive as one of the smoothest technicians around, capable of pocketing, as he does here, audience affection with the ease of a baby-kissing politico. Yet, mindful of his stellar attributes, he sometimes loses the value of a tune—"September Song" for one, which he does with style but beside the point. It seems small, if any, concern out front, though.

Allan Drake is another in the category of jokesters without a concept, registering lukewarm with a diffusion of familiar one-liners. A fairly sympathetic quality is a saver of sorts abetting some tail-end characterization, and even helping for scattered yocks from the squares. Some fresher slants and gags are indicated.

Joe Parnello's threesome is well up to the show segments, and essays listenable entr' acte sets.

Pat Harrington Jr. and Peggy DeCastro open Dec. 14. Pit.

Camelot, N. Y.

Matt Dennis, Isobel Robbins, Derek Smith Trio; $5 minimum.

Although Matt Dennis doesn't bother to change his repertoire much from one date to another, he's still a refreshing entry on Gotham's nitery belt. In a 40-minute set he concentrates mainly on his own compositions and that of Rodgers & Hart and it adds up to pleasing musical nostalgia.

Dennis has a good voice for this kind of intime setup. He doesn't dazzle with any piping pyrotechnics but he wins 'em over with a straightforward vocal approach that's easy and rhythmic. For a break in the vocal pace, Dennis, who self-accomps on piano with a rhythm assist from a bass and drums, goes into flashy version of "Tea For Two," with a wild assortment of interpolated melodies. It's a lot of fun.

On the vocal end, Rodgers & Hart are represented by "Mountain Greenery," "Dancing On the Ceiling," "Little Girl Blue" and "Manhattan." R&H buffs can't quibble with that assortment. In the Dennis singing Dennis category, there are "Let's Get Away From It All," "We're Saving Our Pennies For Junior and Julie," "Everything Happens To Me," "Angel Eyes" and "Will You Still Be Mine" to bring back happy memories.

Midway in her 25 minute set, Isobel Robbins relates that on opening night (this show was caught on second night) the manager asked her why she doesn't sing some popular songs that people know. She doesn't have to. With a songbag of material from flop shows and special material writers, Miss Robbins is completely winning. She can let someone else sing "Over The Rainbow."

Miss Robbins has a warm ballad style but she doesn't let it go to her head. She approaches her work with an easygoing humor that's inserted in just the right places. It brightens the overall mood and keeps the aud smiling and listening.

In her variegated songbag are "The Ballad of th Sad Young Men," a melancholy piece out of the flop legituner, "The Nervous Set," but destined for big play in the intime nitery field; a lilting seasonal remembrance called "Summer Is," a bright "The Next Time You Fall In Love," a humorous ballad to a no-goodnik called "He's Got A Strange Fascination For Me," and a zesty "I Got A Lot of Livin' To Do," out of the current legituner "Bye Bye Birdie." Her garment center secretary's love lament serves as a fine laugh windup.

Miss Robbins is ably assisted by the Derek Smith Trio (piano, bass, drums). Group also opens the show with swinging renditions of "No Moon At All" and "Love For Sale." Gros.

Village Vanguard, N. Y.

Miles Davis Quintet, Bill Evans Trio; $4 minimum.

Vanguard's top name jazz policy continues with trumpeter Miles Davis. He's making his first U. S. stand after return from a continental tour that got a lot of criticism for his alleged more than cool projection and less than cool playing.

In this U.S. return opener, group is swinging fine, but Davis' individual approach to his audience could be improved. He blows his choruses and ensemb bits, then vanishes from the stand like an apparition.

No uestion, however, about Davis' jazz artistry. His work is sincere and skillful, and the backing glitters whether the others are making it alone or with their leader. Catalog includes standards like "All of Me," "Stardust" and a variety of jumpers, all in the fonky modern groove. "Walkin'," a virtual anthem with the fonkies, gets a warm, exciting upbeat treatment here.

Working with and without Davis are Wynton Kelly, piano; Jimmy Cobb, drums; Paul Chambers, bass; and Sonny Stitt, sax.

Alternating with Davis is brilliant jazz pianist Bill Evans, backed by Paul Montiun's drums and Scott La Faro's spastically exciting bass. Bill.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Nov. 15.

McGuire Sisters, Jack Durant, Kane Sisters, Art Johnson, Marlyn Mason, Donn Arden Dancers (16), Carlton Hayes Orch (12); produced by Frank Sennes; choreography, Donn Arden; $4 minimum.

Chris, Phyllis, and Dotti McGuire have breezed back into the Painted Desert Room with a pleasant musical package which is a delight to eye and ear. The girls, especially the animated sparkplug of the trio, Phyllis, also have developed just the right comedy touch which blends ideally with their stylized harmonizing.

Well-paced act, written and staged by Murray Kane, clicks from fresh opener, "That's a Plenty," and glides through such numbers as "Danny Boy," "Daddy," and songs with which the McGuires are identified.

The Kane Sisters, trio of 12-year-old "shadows" of the headliners, score in both chirp and terp departments, showcasing charm and humility seldom seen among theatrical youngsters. The Kanes are a fine balance for the McGuires, and work smoothly with their "elders." Burt Farber at the 88 gives strong assistance, fronting the Carlton Hayes orch (12).

Jack Durant is on bill, reviving his familiar routine which always pulls hefty yocks. Comic, recently hospitalized with an eye ailment, no longer uses his frightening falls to the floor to supplement his dialog, but he still emerges as one of the best laugh-pullers ever to play this room.

Holdover Donn Arden production number is curtain-raiser for this show, set for four weeks. Duk

Ritz Carlton, Montreal

Montreal, Nov. 16.

Fernanda Montel, Johnny Gallant, Paul Notar Trio; $1.50-$2

Perhaps the most elegant of all performers who pay a regular visit to Jean Contant's handsome Ritz Cafe, Fernanda Montel maintains the same top sophistication both visually and vocally on her annual swing through this Gallic center.

Miss Montel clicks with her well-established faves and intros several new items which have more relaxing quality than on previous stanzas in this room. The rather haughty approach to the ringsiders, which might to a certain extent have been caused by nervousness, is gone and the blond thrush evidences the polish and timing expected of one who works the top intimeries.

Backed by the okay 88'ing of Johnny Gallant, who is responsible for many of Miss Montel's arrangements, and the Paul Notar combo, femme runs the language gambit to score heavily on a bilingual interp of Ellington's "Mood Indigo" and, of course, "My Man." A specialty, teamed with a fast version of "Running Wild," seemed somewhat out of place with such a performer but was well received.

Between shows, Gallant and Notar split music sessions for customer dancing. Miss Montel is i until Nov. 29. Newt.

Carnival, Phoenix

Phoenix, Nov. 17.

Stylers (3), Rhonda Lane, Wilma Westcot, Hal Sunday tri; $3 minimum.

This is the third time around for the Stylers at the Carnival and from the strong personal following resulting from the two previous dates Edie Biale can safely predict a prosperous three week run.

Harry Borros, frer Lou and Tony Columbo, three elegantly tailored young gents, have developed an exciting, riginal blend stamping them as comers showcasing a surprisingly mature approach to the art of warbling.

With Lou Columbo on guitar, the trio markets a flexible songalog highlighted by "Up A Lazy River," "Dream Lover," "Come Let's Get Together" and "Clementine," was solid at the opener.

Rhonda Lane, a svelte stemmed terper, gyrates her bountifully endowed chassis to earn potent palming from the ringside baldies. Femcee Wilma Westcot moves the bill along at a brisk pace and scores nicely with her light comedics. Hal Sundays trio supplies excellent backing. O'Haf.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Nov. 17.

Milton Berle, Betty George, Leonard Sues, Jack Parker, Flamingoettes (12), Nat Brandwynne Orch (12); presented by Morris Lansburgh; choreography, Barry Ashton; $4 minimum

Milton Berle has streamlined his act, bringing back only Betty George this trip. Trumpeter Leonard Sues has been added; he trades some comedy lines with Berle and does an outstanding job on instrumental solos, impreses of famed hornmen such as Henry Busse, Clyde McCoy and Louis Armstrong, and fronting the Nat Brandwynne orch (12).

Miss George, the curvy canary, looks better than ever, sings well, and as ever is the perfect target for Berle's lechery.

Berle ties the turn together from all sides, and keeps the pace zooming. He has many familiar gags, but adds a very funny opening parody, and bows off with a session of reminiscing about his career in show bi. ("I was in a musical show once that was so bad the audience came out whistling th intermission." "I did n act so bad that it it were around today I wouldn't steal it.")

Th casino bosses should be happy during Berle's visit, as he a good lure for gambler.

Curtain raiser is a pleasing Barry Ashton production featuring terper Jack Parker and the dozen lovely Flamingoettes. Show runs through Nov. 30. Duke.

Edgewater Beach, Chi.

Chicago, Nov. 14.

"An Evening With Richard Rodgers," Betty Benee, Larry Douglas & Felix Knight, Kenny Black Orch (5); $2 cover, $2.50 Fri.-Sat.

In a noteworthy booking switch, Polynesian Village of this fancy resort-style hospice has tabled the ethnic format, pro tem, for more traditional supperclub recipes, incepting with the "Evening with Richard Rodgers" layout.

It's the package's local preem, and while a happy occasion for its inspired showtunery and impressive vocalistics, it's notably flawed on other counts in this outing.

The unfulfilling Stanley Melba-staged affair seems shorn here of whatever production values it previously had, leaving Betty Benee, Larry Douglas and Felix Knight to their own, albeit considerable, devices. Even where some inspired lighting might have compensated some, there too the technical verdict is routi

But this aside, the songfest turns out a patchwork of Rodgers-& eeffery, lacking continuity and a chronological build to a grabber finale. Predictably, it's all capped by "Oklahoma!" an intrinsic audience rouser of course, but the impact could be more so by having it peak a steady upcurve on the graph. In short, the dramatic muscle—call it libretto—is missing her

Nor is the presentation helped any by Kenny Black's five-piece crew. They labor adroitly, but the sound, minus string augmentation, is just too skimpy to do the soloists and the songbook justice. May be a matter of budget, but if so a decision that was penny wise and pound foolish.

Show stays through Dec. 10. with w revue in on the 11th. Pit.

Living Room, N. Y.

Betty Reilly, Bob Vin nt, Bobby Cole Trio; $4.50 minimum.

Danny Siegel's Living Room is ne of the hot eastside spots that is being booked in a manner to bid for all classes of trade. It's a room of hipsters, oldsters and anyone. He's setting well-rounded bills that provide a something for everybody type of ehtertainment.

The new bill has Betty Reilly, Bob Vincent (New Acts) and the holdover Bobby Cole Trio. The latter is a smart outfit with Cole at the piano and song with drums and bass to help him along. Cole has an unusual musical viewpoint that seems to take the better elements of orthodoxy and provide hep twists. He is a modernist with a respect for tradition and an ear for the offbeat that puts him in favor with the patronage.

Miss Reilly is a repeater here. She is a skilled singer with a flair for hipness and humor. Miss Reilly used to be known as the Irish Senorita but no longer seems to need that appellation although she continues to strum a guitar and still calls upon a few of the enchilada specials.

However, there is a constant change in her act. This time, she's doing some impressions as well as a refurbished catalog that hits its mark strongly. Jose.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, Nov. 14.

Somethin' Smith & the Redheads, Don Cannon Orch (6); no cover or Somethin' Smith & the Redheads (Major Short and Bill Fontaine) play to excellent returns here, indicating that intimate house such as this is perfect background for their banjo-beat rhythm and pantomime comedy.

When they pound out such numbers as opening "Alabamy Bound," "Somebody Stole My Gal," "It's a Sin To Tell a Lie" and begoff "Bill Bailey," they rock the joint. When Smith essays bit of vocal comedy, h wever, the joint nearly rocks the Plus factors are their recorded tune, "Ace in the Hole," done barbershop style, and pantomime of bus driver, a playboy getting progressively drunker, Leonard Bernstein and a pair of striptease-rs. On the other hand, "Casey Jones," ending in a parade in darkened room and with Smith wearing red tail light, seems to embarrass boy, and they appear happy when it's over.

The three men still have their trademark, red musical instruments, with Major Short very capable on bass, Smith good on banjo and guitar and Fontaine likewise on 88s, especially when numbers have a beat.

This also seems made for Don Cannon's boys, who are some of best jazz musicians around, and fit Smith's turn so well it could hardly be called backing. Smith & Redheads, joined for one night by John Gary, play for Thursday (17) birthday party it being second anniversary of club that already has developed flavor of its ow Skip.

Copacabana, N. Y.

(LOUNGE)

Kathy Keegan with Rudy Montey Trio, Glen Covington Duo; cover m.

The usual instructions for a lounge act are "Keep it loud, keep it fast and keep it coming." Working under these orders, 21-year old Kathy Keegan fits the bill.

With the Lounge show starting at 10 p.m. and running continuously to a near 3 a.m. closing, Miss Keegan has a tall order to fill. She's on 45 minutes and off 45 (Glen Covington takes over during her break) and she does about 10 numbers each set. That's a lot of singing.

However, Miss Keegan has the enthusiasm and the vitality to beat the rap. Sometimes the mike is off kilter, sometimes the Rudy Montey Trio seems to be challenging her to a decibel duel, but she manages to come across despite the obstacles.

In a Lounge setup, the big ones and the loud ones come through best. Th she's able to capture the late-hour tipplers with "Got The Whole World In His Hands," which had some of the crowd Friday ight (18) relinquishing their glasses and doing a clap-along, and such other rhythmic items as "Bill Bailey" and "S'Wonderful."

There's a ballad insertion every now and then, which comes off nicely, but it's her rhythm that lights up the lushes. Incidentally, she's set for a straight nitery booking with a date at the International couple of blocks west, when the Ritz Bros. go in March 8.

Glen Covington is a holdover, and he should be. Negro singer, now recording for Warwick, is a versatile vocalist who's got enough of a repertoire to keep his long set interesting. Ballads, pops and calypso fall easily into his vocal range and he makes 'em all bright and attractive. He self-accomps on piano with a bass assist. Gros.

TERPERS' ECUADOR DATE

Ottawa, Nov. 22.

Winnie Hoveler Dancers leave by air from Miami Nov. 28 for booking at the new Quito Hotel in Ecuador.

Delays in construction of the hotel postponed the booking since spring. terpers working Chaudiere Club in Ottawa and New Lotus in Washington meantime.

Beverly Hills, Cincy

Cincinnati, Nov. 18.

George Gobel, Dolores Perry, Moro-Landis Dancers (8) with Charlie Hines, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3-$4 nimum, $1-$1.50 cover.

Current two-weeker at this Kentucky plushery is George Gobel's first and his initial Greater Cincy exposure since his tv career. His previous date hereabouts was in 1947 at the old Lookout House. The funnyman's partner, for musical embellishment and femme charm over a delightful 60-minute route, is carrot-topped Dolores Perry, click soprano.

Headliner makes known at the outset that he strives for moderate hah hahs at even flow rather than occasional ribrockers. In boyish manner, his slow and easy telling of personal problems and experiences has listeners reliving them with Gobel.

No slouch as a singer, Gobel scores with a high ending of "Old Irish Mother of Mine," and soloing of "Soon I'll Wed My Love" while strumming a guitar. Miss Perry has the spotlight alone while selling "Granada" in Italian. "Over the Rainbow" and the "One Fine Day" aria. She joins Gobel i "You Are My Sunshine" for a smash finish and bowoff.

Proceedings open and close with "Fan Blues" and "Oriental" production numbers by the classy Moro-Landis line. Slick backing per usual by Gardner Benedict's combo. Jimmy Wilber Trio inspires intermission ankling. Larry Vincent sings at the lounge 88.

Roberta Sherwood returns Dec. 2. Koll.

Boulevard, Rego Park, L. I.

Damita Jo, George Kaye, Audrey Sisters (2); Johnny Morris & Chiquito Orchs; $5 minim m.

Arturo Cano & Abe Goldstein, although having converted nearly completely to the banquet trade, still seek personalities not only as an inducement to the partying public but to nab a larger segment of the transients.

On this outing the toppers are Damita Jo and George Kaye with the Audrey Sisters (New Acts) as a starter.

Damita Jo is enjoying a vogue at this point through her chirping on Mercury's "I'll Save the Last Dance for You" which serves as the focal point at her act here. She's a potent singer who moves nicely on the floor and makes a strong indent.

Long with the Red Caps Damita Jo is now a strong single turn who has also done well in the Vegas lounges. On this date at the Boulevard, she brings in her own rhythm section and trumpet to augment the Johnny Morris band. With this powerhouse and her own strong performing instincts, she's a tremendous hit here.

Kaye is a strong comedian with a clever assortment of lines. He can either go into character, with his high point being the daffy psychiatrist, or show an essentially good taste with his one-liners. Night caught was one of those sessions which some of the hep lines weren't as readily understood. However, once he went into his screwy medico, he wound up strongly.

Audrey Sisters are under New Acts. Jose.

Sahara, Las Vegas

(FOLLOWUP)

Las Vegas, Nov. 15.

Ray Bolger, in for a special two-week stint to replace Donald O'Connor who ankled early for a pre-dated overseas film commitment, has an act that is basically the same as that he had recently here at the Flamingo. However, the turn is socko stuff, and flawlessly fits the program that surrounded O'Connor. Bolger adds his famous "Sad Sack" routine to this outing, and reprises his applause-pulling impreses of other great dancers and types of dancers.

Gretchen Wyler understandably omits her "Amy" impresh of Bolger, which is, as always, his big bowoff number.

In addition to Miss Wyler, holdover acts are The Ashtons and Shirley, and a Moro-Landis production salute to George M. Cohan. Show, admirably backed by the Louis Basil orch (17), was produced by Stan Irwin, runs until the Nov. 29 Nelson Eddy opener. Duke.

BOB VINCENT

Songs
15 Mins.
Living Room, N. Y.

Bob Vincent is a British import who sings well but is primarily interested in a new electrical device of his ow design which creates some unusual vocal effects on the flo Vincent's mike setup permits sound chamber effects that are highly unusual in a cafe. Perfection of this device may change the face of the cafe singing. It will be possible to achieve on a cafe floor the sound that made a hit record. At the same time, its implications are frightening.

Vincent's device wasn't working perfectly when caught at the Living Room and there is also the possibility that he doesn't yet fully comprehend the full effects of which his invention is capable. These matters tend to effect his own offering, which becomes secondary to the device. During the moments when he was on his own, he showed a smooth voice and a knowledgeable delivery. Jose.

STAN WORTH & HIS GROOP

Vocal, Instrumental
45 Mins.
Saddle & Sirloin, Tucson

Former King's IV member Stan Worth and his new Groop (as he chooses to bill it, show some indication the outfit may develop into one of the better acts. The young musician-singer gets his best mitting with his skillful instrumentals, namely "Hora Staccato" on valve and slide trombone and "Dark Eyes" on piano.

Although the act is billed as "Stan Worth & His Groop, the show is more Worth than "Groop." With the exception of some standards by an ample femme singer, Allie Flannery, the program is dominated by Worth, while the "groop" does little more than sideman chores.

Worth's obvious talents should be doled out more sparingly, since this early in his career he lacks the stature of a single act. There's nothing wrong with this "groop" a little comedy writing and a "gang's all here" attitude wouldn't cure. Ale

GARY MILLER

Songs
14 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Here's a typical English warbler in romantic mood, with an act attuned to intimate atmosphere of niteries and also for tv. Slanting is strong in favor of distaffer appreciation, too.

Blond, youngish and good-looking, Miller has an easy style, gives out pleasantly in romantic ballads, and wins strong audience reaction for his "Gigi." Act has no gimmicks via its simplicity.

Opens with "Face the Music and Dance," segues with "Somebody into "Gigi" and other romantic numbers. Dons a strawhat for a paunty "Pretty Baby," gathers in more heavy palming (despite smallness of house at show caught) for "Street Where You Live" and winds in similar romantic style with "Good-Night," Sweetheart."

With intimate lighting and cabaret atmosphere, singer would click even further in contrast to his nevertheless good reception in Thinks You're Wonderful," then coldness of a vast vaudery. Seems useful bet for restaurant and nitery trade, and is okay for most markets. Gord.

AUDREY SISTERS (2)

Songs, Dance
12 Mins.
Boulevard, Rego Park, L.I., N.Y.

Audrey Sisters, apparent newcomers, have what appears to be homegrown act, which seems to have worked out in getting them started. They are shapely and lively lookers, but their material is lacking.

They open in song, do some dancing, thence a bit of rustic comedy. Prime promising bit is in the field of tapstering. They have a good conception of a tapdance while seated in emulation of a typewriter. It's the one bit of their act that should be retained as they rewrite and reed their stuff. Jose.

JEAN SHANNON

Comedy, Songs, Dancing
30 Mins.
Frontier Room, Vancouver

Jean Shannon, formerly of Jean Shannon & Brooks Bros. (2), has come up with a top drawer single that should carry her further than when the looker was in the trio. She blossoms forth now with comedy, songs and terping for solid results. Her standup delivery style and material is fresh. Situation and oneliners get bellylaughs.

Blonde works hard and has good pipes. Enters spotlight from the audience with special opener and gets the customers off their mitts early. "Like A Mink" is best. "Roaring 20s" bit would be better if she did not take time to change costumes. Stint okay for any media. Fere.

THE AVONS

Song Harmony
10 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Already known via radio and waxings, this coming trio need some more pep to instill act with necessary appeal but are, as of now, an attractive threesome, and a worthwhile booking for vaude and tv.

Consisting of two distaffers, both lookers, and one male, threes e have youth on their side, and attend will to both garbing and lighting effects. A setting of disks as background to act is hackneyed and n.s.g.

Repertoire is varied, including the frisky tune "sitting in the Back Seat" and the ballad "Put Your Head On My Shoulder." Trio also score with "Four Little Heels," a number they've recorded. Wind with a lively version of "My Old Man's A Dustman."

Once sharpened, act has potential for most media. Gord.

VERONICA MARTELL

Juggling
8 Mins.
Empire, Glasgow

Petite and shapely juggler shows considerable skill in manipulation of balls, but a novelty twist is needed to act to lift it further from the routined pattern.

As is, she shows agility and sense of timing, and presents a well-balanced act, billed as "a juggling cocktail." From balls she switches nimbly to top-hats, tossing latter around with same aplomb.

Okay for general run of vauderies. Gord.

LA CHUNGA & CO. (9)

Dance
30 Mins.
Berlitz, Paris

La Chunga is a Spanish flamenco dancer with the ability to transfer the fire, earthiness and frenzy of this dance to house boards. Whether barefoot or shod, she displays a solid temperament and a flair for translating her inner flame to terp terms.

With flying hair, akimbo arms and supple control over her well constructed chassis, she is an infectious performer who gets solid mitts. She is helped by a group of dancers, including a girl of nine, who are as active and dynamic as she is.

A zingy guitarist and throaty singer fill out this adept group who would be a fine bet for U. S. boites, tv, or specialized concertizing. La Chunga, who appears to be still in her teens, did a one-shot appearance here with a new French pic, "Terrain Vague" (The Waste-Land), of Marcel Carne at the first-run Le Berlitz. Mosk.

CHRISTOPHER DOBSON & ALLAN SCOTT

Comedy
55 Mins.
Little Theatre, Ottawa

This English-born pair—Dobson a recent McGill U. grad, Scott graduating next year—have already had some pro experience and have a potentially good nightclub act. At least 20 minutes of the midnight show they did at Ottawa Little Theatre Saturday (12), to 125 invitees, is smooth and hilarious and could go in many intimeries. Some of the rest could be shaped up. Audience reaction was very strong. Performance was

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

Jackie Wilson, King Coleman, Charles Jackson, Dolores Coleman, Johnny & Joe, Etta James, Harvey Fuqua, The Spaniels (6), Reuben Phillips Orch, "Crime & Punishment" (AA).

The Apollo has quite a retinue of singers this bill. Many varieties of songs and styles are evident, but it's one of those situations in which it's difficult to tell the players without some additional form of identification.

An exception is Jackie Wilson, who is a fave at this house. Wilson is an energetic youngster with a flair before audiences. He is an intense chap, works hard, goes through a multitude of contortions, but the audience digs him and digs him hard. In the closing spot, he provides a rousing finish to this all-Negro bill.

There is also a hard drive by Etta James, a big biondined girl, who shouts out a number for good audience effect. She's joined by Harvey Fuqua in one tune, "Spoonful," and they make out quite well with this house.

There is also one group on this display, The Spaniels, five voices and a guitar. They seem to do very little that's different than most similarly constituted organizations. With their two mike setup, they show a good brand of harmonics, but not too much excitement. A duet is by Johnny & Joe, a boy-and-girl twain who make a nice impression with a pair.

The rest of the singers are singles. Charles Jackson is a pleasant singer, and also Sugar Pie De Santo, who comes on in a silver lame pair of overalls and works hard for a good hand. Dolores Coleman goes out into the audience with "I'll Never Walk Alone" and gets a lad to accompany her down the aisle. The audience liked the bit.

The emceeing is by King Coleman, an energetic dancer who shows a good brand of eccentic terping. He also has the virtue of making the show move a little more rapidly than it might have otherwise.

Reuben Phillips provides the howbacking. Jose.

Alhambra, Paris

Paris, Nov. 10.

Henri Salvador, Lucette Raillat, Michel Magne Orch (26), Gimma Boys (5), Rudy Horn, Rosita, Limbo Dancers (3), Gill Crocco; $1.

With singer-comedian Henri Salvador in fine form, and backed by a selected group of acts, this is the best vaude buy in town at a $1 top. It should be in for sock biz in its month's stay at the large Alhambra-Maurice Chevalier.

Salvador is an exuberant, infectious performer who can sing a soft love lyric and then go into a zany slapstick sketch or belt out jazz or rock and roll takeoffs with enough power and rhythm to make them pleasing musically as well as caricatures.

His sketches delve into insomnia, wish fulfillment, takeoffs on Hispano singers and bullfighters and other things. Whether using recorder sounds or simply miming, Salvador shows a timing, perception and understanding of material that make him one of the top all-around show figures here.

Lucette Raillat does special songs on little dreamers and her milieu is mainly the Paris lowlife. A piping voice, knowing thespic underlining and good material make her one of the better specialized chantoosies here. She looks ready for selected spots abroad where there are audiences for her wry, shoulder shrugging comedics and pathos.

Gimma Boys are a dynamic, bounding acro group who do hand to hand bits and pyramids with aplomb and dash leavened with a good dose of comedics. Rudy Horn is a brilliant juggler who mounts a unicycle to foot six cups and saucers, and then sugar and a spoon, atop his head. It is a sock filler.

Rosita is a Hispano teenager who gives out flamenco-like songs adapted to more pop needs. This waters down her style but she has an insight into the songs and a good voice. Sometimes overdoing arch mannerisms, she nevertheless shows possibilities when she settles down to a definite outlook and does the more settled songalogs. She has poise and can play a guitar effectively.

Gill Crocco is an eccentric dancer who also can do uncanny contortions in a dexterous, evecatching manner. He is a solid filler and well mitted. Michel Magne Orch does good backing and also some interludes of slick medleys plus some tricky clowning that pay off and give an okay production dress to this fine show.

Limbo Dancers are a Trinidad trio who manage to flow under continuously lowered horizontal bars while terping. It is a colorful asset. Mosk.

taped for an album on Laurentian, a Montreal label run by Colin Kerr, who recorded McGill-sprung "My Fur Lady" score three years ago for good sales in Canada.

Their specialty is ribbing Americans and Englishmen — equally sharply—as in their two best numbers: a war movie a la U.S.—"This is about a bunch of ordinary guys named Joe"—and a la U.K.—"I wish I could shake the hand of each of you fine chaps, but as you know I lost both of mine in the little affair last night"; and two boys—one American, on English—making dates on the phone. Another nifty is "Frankie and Johnny" with explanations ("She pulled out a little 44"—"That is not an anatomical statistic but a firearm"), historical data on Nellie Bly and grammatical corrections.

Jowly Dobson is a frequently razor-keen comic, skinny Scott—who looks like a young Yves Montand—a firstrate foil with a good song style, self-accompanied on guitar. Both have poise and very good timing. Pag.

Bogus Newhart

ing in the same room with a murderer but he should get what I wish him for what he did to the priest."

The Jaye brothers said that they were invited to a party at the Hilton on Monday night where they met a man who was introduced as "Bob Newhart." He was tall, balding, around 35 but with brown hair.

"Say, man," said Phil, "ain't you supposed to be blonde?"

The con man dismissed this with a remark about photographers and then moved into action using the boys for a three day play against the hotel. He entertained lavishly both at the Hilton and the Holiday House and even took a bow at the nitery when the boys introduced him as the star.

Aroused Suspicion

The hotel was suspicious and on Wednesday (16), its officials called Arnold Zeitlin, tv editor of the Post-Gazette, who in turn referred them to the Pitt VARIETY man who had interviewed the real Newhart two weeks before in L.A.

They were told that Newhart was at the Crescendo, L.A., and that VARIETY had him in its columns as being at the club and he certainly would not be spending five days in a hotel when every concert promoter in the country was trying to get a date on him.

On this same day, Norman Weiss, MCA exec, was in town to set details for the forthcoming Marlene Dietrich engagement at the Syria Mosque. No one informed him about the spurious "Newhart" but agent George Claire, with whom he was with most of the day, told many localites that Newhart was in town for some college dates.

The VARIETY rep gave the hotel the phone numbers for Frank Hogan, Newhart's manager; the Crescendo and MCA. Al Kennedy, assistant credit manager of the hotel, couldn't get through to any of them before "Newhart" walked out of the hotel. He didn't get back to his room that night since he was staying with the Jaye Brothers.

His suite was then checked and hotel officials found one suitcase filled with dirty laundry and a few letters addressed to Gene Palmer, Charlotte, N. C.

The luckiest people in the whole caper were the Platters and Vivienne della Chiesa who never made the party. The Platters had a flat tire on the way to the affair and Miss della Chiesa didn't feel like making it although she was in on the big scene when "Newhart" sobbed out the story of his mother before the priest.

Ed Marshall, the hotel's assistant manager, was the first to become suspicious and ultimately led to "Newhart's" exposure.

However, none of the Pittsburgh papers went for the story that Marshall released as of Sunday, because Marshall said that the bill had been paid. VARIETY learned that the bill had not been paid and the thief was on his way for further misuse of the star's name.

To top the whole thing, the grieving "Newhart" told the priest and the Jaye Brothers to call him in Philadelphia at his home as soon as they could. They did when the checks bounced, and the operator said, "Good Morning, this is the Evening Bulletin."

Police officials and the American Hotel Association has been notified.

mate establisments like the Copacabana, Latin Quarter, the International Casino, etc., must be subjected to the fingerprinting, has always irked both the American Federation of Musicians, Local 802, and the American Guild of Variety Artists.

AGVA president Joey Adams states he has been in powwows with Mayor Robert F. Wagner, who is an honorary AGVAite.

Adam reiterates the credo that if all branches of industry were fingerprinted there would be no question. He states he knows dozens of haunts where known gamblers, bookmakers, junkies and other undesirables congregate but the accent is only on the cabarets. Why not poolrooms? Or fight clubs? Or why not Macy's and Gimbel's employees—why only vaudeville actors and musicians, he argues. Adams reiterates the inequity of the regulation, especially "where a musician has paid his debt to society" (marijuana, etc.).

He mentions the many juveniles whom AGVA and AFM personnel have attempted to rehabilitate and, in fact, "there are 30 kids from tough neighborhoods who have become AGVA members; they're pretty good too—you know, harmonica groups, acrobats, a vocal quartet, and now after this program of rehabilitation, in which the City of New York collaborates on the cost with Local 802 and AGVA we insist that these kids be fingerprinted like criminals."

The phoney agent who allegedly served as go-between on an alleged $100 payoff bribe caused the Citizens' Committee probe into the Police Dept. Meantime Commissioner Kennedy is adamant on enforcing the regulation requiring police permits for cabaret employees.

him no breaking in spot and without the background that provides more force at the concert boxoffice.

On the other hand, Berman feels a responsibility to cafe operators. For example, following a concert in Minneapolis, he went to Freddie's, where he formerly worked. Peter Karelis, Freddie's operator, pointed out that his concert drained off his entire patronage. Berman therefore promised him a 10-day date to compensate.

Berman wound up his concert tour last Thursday (17) with a one-night at the Bushnell Memorial Auditorium, Hartford, which scored over $7,700 for the benefit of the Mark Twain Foundation. Berman donated his services with expenses taken out for the payment of the Cumberland Three which worked with him.

George Murray, Toronto tenor and ex-husband-manager of thrush Shirley Harmer, is building a nightclub act with Denyse Anger, French-Canadian chirp from Montreal.

Click of 'Birdie' Ignites Project For Legit, Telepix, Concert Production

The Broadway click of "Bye Bye Birdie" has had a chain reaction, from numerous subsidiary editions of the musical to the formation of a new corporation designed to nurture talent for the development of new legit properties. The corporation, Padula-Brow , Inc., has been formed by "Birdie" producer Edward Padula and L. Slade Brown, who gets "in association" managerial billing on the tuner.

According to Brown, the firm, a private Delaware corporation with 400 shares of no par stock, has extensive financial resources. Brown, a Texas businessman (tugs, barges, oil and gas, ranching, farming, etc.), is responsible for a large investment in "Birdie." He's the bankroller and business director of the corporation, with Padula handling the artistic end of the operation.

The firm will start with an operating capital in excess of $250,000, but Brown says that substantially more coin, if needed, is available through commitments to the enterprise. Brown doesn't feel that large sums should be tied up in the corporation if there's no immediate need for the revenue. As he puts it, if the corporation decides to purchase a theatre, which is within its scope, financing for the transaction would be available.

The primary purpose of the firm is to create and/or develop properties in all fields of the performing arts, notably legit, but also television films, concert, etc. Under its financial setup, th corporation will not be under economic pressures and consequently will be able to work on a property until Padula feels it's ready for production.

When a venture is considered ready, it'll be offered to investors, principally those who backed "Birdie," under a regular limited partnership arrangement. The production aus ices, as in the case of

Theatre League Not To Engage Regular Lawyer; Pick New Exec Director

The League of N. Y. Theatres probably won't appoint a regular counsel to succeed Milton Weir, who retires as the organization's attorney the end of this year. It's understood the producer-theatre owner group will hereafter retain counsel for specific cases or assignments, as it did when Burton A. Zorn was brought in as chief negotiator for the organization's contract negotiations with Actors Equity last spring.

A successor has been appointed for James F. Reilly, who also retires at the end of the year as the League's longtime executive director. Set to take over Jan. 2 is Irving W. Cheski , executive director of Film Producers Assn. of N. Y., an organization involved in non-theatrical films.

Both Reilly, who's been with the League since 1938, and Weir, who's been in ill health for some months, will receive pensions.

London 'Mousetrap' to Be 8 Years Old Friday (25)

London, Nov. 22.

That fantastic "sleeper" show, "The Mousetrap," is in the news again. Agatha Christie's detective yarn enters its ninth year Friday (25) at the Ambassadors Theatre. Beginning next Monday (28) for the 3,319th performance, the play will get seven cast changes, with Gordon Whiting taking over from Anthony Oliver as leading man.

Peter Saunders, the producer, long ago inserted a "get-out" clause in all cast contracts. But two old-stagers will still be around. David Raven continues in the role that he has played for three-and-a-half year. The company manager, Anthony Gordon, also remains. He's been with the show since the start of rehearsals in 1952.

Meanwhile, plans to film "The Mousetrap" lag. Shooting cannot be started till the play ends its West End run. Richard Attenborough, the original lead, was set to play the role on the screen, but withdrew the ground that he'll probably be too old when filming finally starts.

Thurber to Repeat Role In 'Carnival' in London

James Thurber will repeat his current role in "A Thurber Carnival" when the revue is presented in London next February. The presentation, a collection of Thurber pieces, will end its return Broadway engagement at the ANTA Theatre next Saturday (26). The West End production, which Donald Albery will present in partnership with Michael Davis, Helen Bonfils and Haila Stoddard, co-producers of the Main Stem venture, is to go into rehearsal in mid-January.

Joan Anderson, another member of the Broadway cast, is also set for the West End production, and British comedy star Wilfred Hyde-White is being sought for one of the principal roles.

Kill Tax Change On Partnerships

Washington, Nov. 22.

Legit producers and investors can stop holding their breath, under a ruling issued last week by the Internal Revenue Service. The edict rescinds a proposed Federal on certain limited partnerships. Most Broadway shows are produced under such financing setups.

The previous ruling changed the language relating to limited partnerships, so that many such ventures would have been classed as corporations and thereby been subject to higher tax rates. Joel Fisher, Washington attorney representing the League of N.Y. Theatres, called the new ruling "great news."

Under the proposed change, a producer would have been required to have "substantial assets" before a limited partnership would have qualified as such for tax purposes. Since the tax on corporations is heavier than on limited partnerships, it was feared that the earlier ruling would have a dire effect on the financing of Broadway shows, especially those of pro-

Krellberg Drops $202,000 Suit as Gregory Settles

Sherman S. Krellberg has withdrawn his $202,000 fraud action against Paul Gregory. The suit related to Krellberg's association with Gregory in the production of "Pink Jungle," which folded during a pre-Broadway tryout tour last season. Ginger Rogers starred in the production.

The withdrawal of the suit calls for Gregory to settle on behalf of his partnership with Krellberg all outstanding claims against "Jungle," which started off as a play with music and at the time it folded was a full-scale musical.

Becket Recoups 70G on 186G Tab

"Becket," currently in its eighth smash week at the St. James Theatre, N. Y., was capitalized at $162,000 and cost $185,814 to open on Broadway. The David Merrick production, costarring Laurence Olivier and Anthony Quinn, recouped around $70,000 thus far, leaving about $115,814 deficit.

At the St. James, which usually houses musicals, the potential capacity of the Lucienne Hill translation of Jean Anouilh's drama is $59,114. Weekly receipts have been generally close to that mark. The production, which was booked into the St. James on an interim basis, exits there Dec. 17 and reopens Dec. 21 at the Royale Theatre, which will be vacated Dec. 17 by another Merrick entry, the long-run French revue, "La Plume de Ma Tante."

Percentage deals with the costars, authors and director Peter Glenville, who received a $5,000 fee, cannot be figured on the basis of the initial auditor's statement, covering the period ended Nov. 5. The theatre's share of the gross is apparently 30% of the first $20,000 and then 25% up to a $52,000 cutoff, at which point the house's take is $14,000.

A breakdown of the production costs also reflects payments of $5,000 to scenic designer Oliver Smith, $2,500 to costume designer Elizabeth Montgomery (the U. S. partner in the costume-scenic firm, Motley), $1,250 to lighting designer Jean Rosenthal and $2,000 to music arranger Laurence Rosenthal. Among other itemized production costs is $4,143 living expense for Olivier.

Small-Change 'Angels' Form Clubs, Pool Stakes to Back B'way Shows

The backing of Broadway shows by groups of pocket-money "angels" appears to be gaining new momentum through the establishment of theatrical investment clubs in New York and surrounding areas. The clubs, with an average membership of about 20, comprise individuals interested in investing in legit, but not the extent of the minimum contribution required by most Broadway producers.

The members of the club pool their funds for a single investment in a show. The organizations are thus able to offer producers an investment which can be handled without the involved bookkeeping that would be required if the producer were to accept individually small contributions of say $25 or $50. By pooling the antes, members are also able to spread their investments among a number of shows.

The establishment of the investment clubs is being spurred by Theatrical Investor, a four-page publication, issued twice monthly as a guide for legit backers. Seymour Vall is publisher and president of the operation, which was a year old last week. Ed Partikan is a vice-president and associate publisher. Paul Libin, another v.p., is consultant, and Boyd Clopton is director.

Vall and Partikan have been active in setting up the clubs, which in turn schedule subscribe to their publication at the regular $50 yearly fee. Around 25 clubs have been formed since last May and all have stakes in Broadway shows this season.

The financial resources of the in-

'Toys,' 'Best Man' Back To 7:30 Wednesday Curtain

Broadway producers Kermit Bloomgarden and Roger L. Stevens aren't giving up on the 7:30 Wednesday night curtain. Each is putting one of his current Main Stem shows back on the early midweek ringup schedule starting next Wednesday (30). The move follows the recent collapse of an experimental 7:30 Wednesday night curtain for all Broadway shows.

Bloomgarden's early Wednesday night entry will be "Toys in the Attic," at the Hudson Theatre, and Stevens will be represented by "Best Man" at the Morosco.

Gross Mark For L.A.'s CLO Season

Los Angeles, Nov. 22.

The local Civic Light Opera Assn. established a record for its 23 years of operation with a $1,982,855 gross for the recently-ended 1960 season at the 2,670-seat Philharmonic Auditorium. The take represents the combined receipts for four musicals presented over a 26-week period.

The prior CLOA high here was registered in 1957, when the gross for a 25-week season hit $1,875,100. Three of the four entries presented this year were post-Broadway touring productions, also booked for the CLOA season in San Francisco. The other entry, produced specifically for CLOA presentation here and in Frisco, was "Show Boat," which closed Nov. 5 in Frisco.

The three ex-Broadway presentations were "Redhead," "Flower Drum Song" and "Destry Rides Again." "Flower," currently in Chicago, was the top coin-getter with a $638,831 gross for an eight-week run. The other three shows ran six weeks each, with "Show Boat" nabbing $468,414, "Redhead" $449,210 and "Destry" $426,400.

"Redhead" closed July 16 in Frisco and "Destry" is current there, but concludes the CLOA season at the Curran Theatre next month, with Anne Jeffreys as femme star.

Old Vic Has 10th Anni. At Its London Theatre; Planning Aussie Tour

London, Nov. 22.

The Old Vic marked its 10th anniversary last Tuesday (15) with a performance of "Romeo and Juliet." The former Old Vic was put out of commission by enemy action in May, 1941, and for a time the company occupied the Victoria Theatre, Burnley, in Lancashire, and from 1944 to 1950 operated from the New Theatre, London.

From the time of its reopening until the 10th anniversary, the Old Vic company played 3,182 performances in London to audiences totalling more than 2,750,000. A total of 84 productions have been presented by the Old Vic, an average of one every six weeks.

Five major overseas tours have been mounted, among them three to the U. S. and Canada and one each to Australia and South Africa. Performances have also been given in 10 foreign countries, including Yugoslavia and Lebanon.

Apart from its activity at its London headquarters, the Old Vic company has also given more than 500 performances in various parts of the United Kingdom. A company is currently on the road with a repertory comprising "Macbeth," "Saint Joan" and "The Importance of Being Earnest."

Plans are being completed for another extensive overseas tour by a company to be headed by Vivien Leigh. It is expected to begin in Australia next summer with a program that will include "Twelfth Night," and also a new adaptation of "La Dame aux Camelias" to be commissioned.

Michael Bryant to Exit 'Five Finger' Next Week

Pittsburgh, Nov. 22.

Michael Bryant, who plays the German tutor in "Five Finger Exercise," will leave the show Dec. 3, at the end of its Detroit engagement. He will return to London to replace Alec Guinness in the title role of the long-running "Ross," Terrence Ratigan's play about Lawrence of Arabia.

Guinness is due to leave the show after the first of the year to co-star with Rosalind Russell in the film version of "Majority of One."

An interesting and occasionally gripping melodrama has been made of Allen Drury's Pulitzer best-seller, "Advise and Consent." As adapted by Loring Mandel, it opened last Thursday night (17) at the Cort Theatre, apparently a box-office hit and a prospect for a lively film, for which the rights were sold in advance to Otto Preminger.

For anyone who hasn't read Drury's book, there's [illegible] speculating on what libert[illegible]ve been taken with the story of [illegible]e bitter struggle over Senatorial approval for an unnamed President's appointee as Secretary of State. And probably only an insider or very close observer could say how accurate is the picture of dirty political intrigue between the White House and the upper legislative chamber.

Perhaps significantly, there was considerable disagreement about the play's authenticity during the recent tryout engagement in Washington, where Dru[illegible]'s a political correspondent. Tr[illegible]diences with no special backg[illegible]or knowledge of the original book, the show suggests sensationalism, a sort of "Capitol Dome Confidential."

In terms of a Broadway production aimed at popular appeal, however, "Advise and Consent" tends to be what used to be called a rattling good show. Despite its lack of anything resembling a romantic theme and its questionable draw for the femme trade, it has the fundamental impetus of the original novel (which has been on the best-seller list for 67 weeks), plus topically urgent subject matter, clearly drawn principal characters and sharp conflict.

Perhaps it's to some extent inherent in the Drury book, but this dramatization has to overcome an awkward general form, with thick-fingered stagecraft and a ponderous physical production to capture and hold audience interest. At the very start, the presentation is needlessly complicated and verbose, and repeatedly through the three acts the story is jerkily episodic.

Even after the action gets under way it keeps being interrupted by seemingly haphazard jumps of locale and excessive shifting of scenery. Nevertheless, it does gradually gather momentum, rising to an arresting second act curtain and, despite an inevitable let-down thereafter, a fairly compelling final scene.

The President appears to be a composite of several recent Chief Executives. Although his motivation isn't entirely clear, he's represented as an egocentric who identifies his desire with the national interest and before long with divine will. An end-justifies-the-means individual, he unhesitatingly uses scurrilous methods to get his own way.

One of the principal Senators, a partial portrait of the late Joseph R. McCarthy, is a recognizably villainous character who willingly resorts to unscrupulous tactics, primarily character assassination, to gain his Fascist-like ends except that in this case he's drawn as advocating a "realistic" groveling attitude toward the Soviet Union as a rabble-rousing appeal.

'Advise and Consent," despite any exaggeration, probably does offer a certain amount of enlightenment on how practical politics works behind-the-scenes in Washington. Increasingly through the play, and especially in the tensely theatrical third act, where a grimly high-minded Senator refuses to be bribed with a promise of future support for the Presidency, and a shocked Senate rejects the President's opportunistic appointee, the emphasis is on stubbornly patriotic duty on the part of the opposing group.

Just as knowledgable playgoers are likely to have a field-day identifying the possible real-life counterparts of the leading characters, there may be angry react[illegible]n from observers who see variou[illegible]tical slants in the drama. Mo[illegible]ertainment seekers probably won't be concerned on any such grounds. It may be fairly observed, however, that even admitting the play's tone of cynicism, it ends on an affirmative note as justice and right triumph over ruthlessness and evil.

A number of players stand out in the unusually large cast. Ed Begley has rugged conviction, variation and drive as the incorruptible Senatorial veteran who refuses to let personal disappointment interfere with statesmanly responsibility, and will not be diverted from conscience even by the chance for future Presidency. Richard Kiley is believable in the difficult role of the idealistic Senator who is reluctantly pushed into the middle of a power struggle and is destroyed by an almost forgotten moral lapse in his youth.

Chester Morris conveys the troubled uncertainty of the Majority Leader who has to carry out White House orders he disagrees with and use methods he despises. As the wily, crotchety southern Senator who knows when to use oratory or guile to defeat an enemy, Henry Jones gives a performance that's approximately as hokey as a Dixiecrat solon appears in real life—and just as effective with his audience.

As the venomous Senator who combines demagoguery with blackmailing, Kevin McCarthy gives a swashbuckling characterization that cannily suggests his late namesake from Wisconsin. Staats Cotsworth is expertly unctious as the Presidential appointee whose chief qualification for Cabinet office is personal ambition. Judson Laire is pompous, with a credible suggestion of willfulness as the President, but lacks the unconscious authority a seven-year occupant of the White House would presumably have, or the requisite magnetism to have won a national election.

Sally Kamp and Joan Wetmore have little to do in the ill-defined parts of the respective wives of the young Senator and the Majority Leader, and Tom Shirley, Woodrow Parfrey and Barnard Hughes are acceptable in secondary roles. There are approximately two dozen [illegible] players and extras, including Warren Caro, executive-director of the Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society, who reacts with busy earnestness as Senator with no lines.

Frank Schaffner's staging is pretty much constricted by the unwieldly production scheme (for which he is presumably at least partly responsible). Rouben Ter-Arutunian has designed the elaborate, distracting system of sliding and raised and lowered panels and balconies, and Klaus Holm has devised the tricky and occasionally unworkable lighting.

"Advise and Consent" is cluttered, rather synthetic and spuriously theatrical, but as a project for boxoffice impact it "works"—and there's no use knocking success. Hobe.

Under the Yum-Yum Tree

Frederick Brisson & Roger L. Stevens presentation of comedy in three acts (four scenes), by Lawrence Roman. Staged by Joseph Anthony; setting, Oliver Smith; lighting, Peggy Clark; costumes, Ray Diffen. Features Gig Young, Sandra Church, Nan Martin, Dean Jones. Opened Nov. 16, '60, at Henry Miller's Theatre, N.Y.; $7.50 top Friday and Saturday nights, $6.90 weeknights.

Irene Wilson	Nan Martin
Robin Austin	Sandra Church
Dave Manning	Dean Jones
Hogan	Gig Young
Cab Driver	John MacKay

It's just possible that "Under the Yum-Yum Tree" could be the answer to the perennial producer wail for a simple, one-set, small-cast comedy and the frequent public cry for romantic plays without a "message." If there's any substance to this two-fold craving, Lawrence Roman's farce, which opened last Wednesday night (16) at Henry Miller's Theatre, should do nicely, not only for Broadway and the road, but also for pictures and years of stock revivals.

But to figure the Frederick Brisson-Roger L. Stevens production as a likely hit isn't meant to suggest that it's any cause for elation, except as a commercial prospect. It is, to use a shopworn but serviceable word, contrived. The basic plot must have been hackneyed even in the theatre of 40 years ago, and was a lightweight staple on the screen back in the innocent 1930's.

If the essential story is a chestnut, there are enough synthetic situation twists to have kept a persevering writer sweating for months. In fact, the amount of room-pacing, cigaret-puffing and tepid coffee-drinking that must have gone into the script of "Under the Yum-Yum Tree" would probably choke an IBM machine.

But if grouchy playgoers find the whole evening unbelievable, only occasionally diverting and never really funny, it's only factual to report that the opening-nighters seemed convulsed by it. Partly for that reason and to some extent on the basis of discouraging experience, the show appears likely to attract and delight a sizable public. After all, remember the irresistable popularity of "The Moon Is Blue."

"Yum-Yum" is located in an attractively modern, if manifestly uninhabitable, apartment on Telegraph Hill, San Francisco, with an expansive view of the bay and bridge. The story is that standard old wheeze about the nice, spirited girl who wants to be sure that she's really in love and not merely infatuated with the right-thinking young lawyer, so she asks him to live with her for several weeks, platonically, of course, so see if they're compatible.

The one fresh element in the situation is the landlord, an amusing wolf who has a disconcertingly out-of-focus way of looking at everything, and a manner and line of conversation that is disarmingly self-deprecating, wildly illogical and curiously plausible. Having had a succession of amours with the lady tenants of the dual-apartment setup, using frequent bouquets, stuffed animal gifts, various ingenious methods of peeping and eavesdropping, as well as an unlimited supply of pass keys, he goes into immediate action to seduce the new arrival.

As played by Gig Young with an infectious combination of bland frankness and experienced guile, he the one genuinely entertaining character in the show. The part is excellent and the legit-film actor gives a skillful, winning performance. Sandra Church is visually personable and animated, if a mite self-assured, in the sort of ingenue role of a quarter-century ago.

Nan Martin, previously seen on Broadway only in emotional parts, succeeds in giving individuality and a hint of humor to the for-plot-purposes character of the previous tenant who keeps leaving throughout the three acts and only makes it at the final curtain. Dean Jones is commendably intense in the workhorse role of the incredibly moral would-be-husband.

Joseph Anthony's staging seems intelligently worked out and properly paced. Oliver Smith has designed a handsome two-level apartment interior setting, with a graphic backdrop of San Francisco Bay and the bridge. Peggy Clark has devised adroitly suitable lighting and Ray Diffen has provided becoming costumes.

"Under the Yum-Yum Tree" is the sort of smutty-minded but carefully respectable sex-tease piece that Hollywood used to concoct to satisfy the standards of pre-World War II censors, and it could conceivably have at least a fraction of comparable popularity. Hobe.

The old Preston Sturges "Hail the Conquering Hero" script has been taken out of storage for this musical version, titled "The Conquering Hero." Although there's still a smell of mothballs, enough favorable new material is present to justify the necessary effect to bolster the weak elements and bring the show in a winner. In its favor is the fact that the musical improves as it progresses, with a good ending already achieved.

A present flaw is the lack of standout voice to emphasize the score highlights. Solo contributions are adequate, but the ensemble singing comes to the rescue in good fashion. The impression is that the score values could receive a decided boost through better individual rendition.

There are potential song hit candidates in "I'm Beautiful," "Kiss on Tip of My Lips," "Hail the Conquering Hero," "Only Rainbows." Also, "One Mother Each," done as a quintet, is a good comedy number. "Wonderful, Marvelous You" scores via a novelty delivery and "Truth, Thou Art the Door" is a powerful, all-too-brief scene-closer. The lyries are serviceable, if not distinguished.

Comparatively little solo dancing places the terp burden on the semble, a challenge that is well handled by the fast-stepping hoofers. William Guske scores nicely, heading a battle scene ballet, and Jane Mason does a diverting strip-tease in what seems to be a reprise of the "What Lola Wants" come-on dance in "Damn Yankees." The production numbers are lively and a novel note is introduced in a combination dialog-dance scene labelled "The Campaign."

The book concerns improbable incidents revolving around a medically-discharged Marine who has laid an egg in his one month in the service, but who is sold to his hometowners as a hero. It's a mixture of contrived situations, but manages to hold the song and dance segments together.

Tom Poston in the title role of the Marine short-termer, acquits himself okay histronically, but just about gets by as a vocalist. Lionel Stander rasps his gravel-voiced way through the role of a tough sergeant with the proverbial heart of gold. First-nighters liked his work. Cherry Davis gets a nod as a plain girl who lands her man and Miss Mason is decorative as a fickle blonde native daughter. Fred Stewart registers as a crooked small-town mayor.

The production goes to town on visual flash. The costumes are largely on the garish side. The settings introduce novel effects, and range from the bizarre to handsome tapestry motif. Bob Fosse's staging has set a generally break-neck tempo, with emphasis on the blatant, and Sherman Frank's musical direction has diligently kept things moving on this basis. Bone.

Legit Followup

Take Me Along

(SHUBERT THEATRE, N. Y.

Having undergone several important cast changes and the wear of a year's run, "Take Me Along" is now a modified treat, but is recognizable and still good enough to satisfy an audience. As to its further staying power, that's a question involving not only the reaction of current showgoers but also the revised marquee draw.

William Bendix, returning to Broadway after neatly 20 years as a film, radio and television star, has succeeded Jackie Gleason in the fat role of Uncle Sid, the wise guy souse of the Joseph Stein, Robert Russell and Bob Merrill adaptation of Eugene O'Neill's "Ah, Wilderness!" Being a different personality with a different style, he gives the musical a sharply altered quality.

Where Gleason played the character as a bumptious but generally likable clown who would do anything for a laugh and usually succeeded in getting it, Bendix is more serious and, by contrast, almost subdued. In the early portion of the show the effect is unfortunate, for much of the comedy flavor is missing, and Bendix lacks Gleason's knack and assurance in putting over the musical numbers.

In the latter scenes, however, Bendix is more legitimate and more believable, not only giving greater dimension to the story but even lending increased credibility to the other characters. His Uncle Sid is less a cut-up and more a person, which may lose some of the festive impact of a musical show but adds a touch of sympathy and even poignance.

Sidney Blackmer, succeeding Walter Pidgeon in the fairly straight part of Nat Miller, the shrewd local newspaper editor and perplexed father, also brings a different quality to the overall performance. As an old pro he is plausible, authoritative and vital, but lacks the essential, infectious humor that made Pidgeon's playing enjoyable. The fact that he talks the songs and doesn't attempt much dancing is inconsequential, however, for he looks and acts th character.

The only other principal change is Doris Dalton as the eternally maternal Mrs. Miller. She's more direct and less fluttery than her predecessor, Una Merkel, getting about as much comedy in the role and perhaps a shade more believability. Gershon Kingsley, succeeding Lehman Engel as conductor, directs the music proficiently.

Eileen Herlie, the sole remaining original star, still provides the warmth and heart of the story in the role of Sid's persistent old flame, Aunt Lily. As the only good singer among the principals, she's the vocal core of the show. To a remarkable degree, her performance is still free of exaggeration, and has a good deal of the original illusion of spontaneity.

Robert Morse, top-featured the juicy role of the agonizingly teenaged Richard, is even hokier than when last caught several months ago. He now mugs, draws out the pauses and "takes," eyes the front rows and, at one performance last week, appeared to be having a private joke with batoner Kingsley or someone out front. It's only fair to note, however, that the audience lapped up every bit of it. Hobe.

...edly "Little Darlings!" is ...g given a four-week West End fling prior to Broadway presentation, but it is questionable whether it will stay the course at the Adelphi for the month, let alone travel across the Atlantic. In its present form it's a trite and ineffectual comedy, partly redeemed by a graceful performance by Faith Brook.

"Little Darlings!" has been adapted into English by Worthington Miner, who adapted it from the original French play, "Les Choutes," by Pierre Barrillet and Jean-Pierre Gredy. It ... a pseudo-sophisticated comedy with what's apparently supposed to be frank talk about sex, but the show is really little more than sniggering schoolgirl lark.

Miss Brook plays the eldest of three sisters who h... a flat in Paris. Just as she is successfully dating a colleague from her newspaper office, one of her sisters arrives and takes him to the ballet. Then in comes the youngest, most-precocious sister, and there is a considerable amount of romantic maneuvering by the sisters, but the outcome is as dull as it is predictable.

Miss Brook adds distinction to the proceedings, but neither Dawn Greenhalgh or Sally Smith gives her much help. Alan White, Roger Dann and John Gray are defeated by the material and have little or no chance to make an impression.

Richard Bird has staged the comedy on the lines of a racy bedroom farce. Michael Weight's attic set is bright and decorative.

"Progress to the Park" is further evidence that Alun Owen is one of the most perceptive, talented and agile young British writers, but it reveals that he hasn't mastered the technique of writing for the stage. His writing is often lyrical, invariably apt and amusing, his observation shrewd.

With its ragged direction, this slice of Liverpool life meanders untidily and aimlessly. It is cluttered up by extraneous comic business, and there is heavy padding. Despite all these faults, however, Owen has the merit of claiming audience attention and of holding it. In its present form "Park" seems unlikely to make the West End, but it is still a more stimulating and provocative evening than many seen there.

Owen has provided a tenuous story line, the ill-starred romance of a young Liverpool lad, a Catholic, and a young merchant seaman, a Protestant. Set in Liverpool, most cosmopolitan of British ports, the clash of the two religions is fiercely debated and Protestant prejudice and Catholic bigotry are both treated. The play is performed mostly for laughs, despite th... essential seriousness of the theme, and although some of the fun is vaude stuff, a good cast serves the author well.

Billie Whitelaw, though at times difficult to hear, gives a moving performance as the girl, and Sean Lynch, as th... puzzled young lover, also impresses in a difficult role. But of the three leads, it is Tom Bell who keeps the stage alight with his expressive voice and relaxed yet vital playing as an amiable, cynical young Welsh writer returned from London to watch with concern, yet detachment, the religious-political conflict of his neighbors.

Harry H. Corbett, an actor making his first stab at direction, might have been well advised to choose a better ...nstructed play. John Bury's two exterior settings are simple and adequate.

William ...royan's lyrical drama, "My Heart's in the Highlands," struck a sour note last week as the second Equity Library Theatr... presentation of the season. With little of the Saroyanesque el...quence, this showcase offering is not likely to be much help to its participants.

A difficult play to stage, "Highlands" requires the services of acutely perceptive talent in all areas of production. It is a minefield of traps which must be carefully circumvented if the result is to be anything but dull.

One of the biggest such dangers is pace. If Saroyan's highly poetic imagery is not presented with cohesive and flowing unity, the drama becomes a collection of platitudes and insignificant, irrelevant incidents. Such is the uncomfortable case in this ELT production. M. David Samples' direction is neither cohesive nor flowing, with the result that the relatively short play seems almost interminable.

Another of Saroyan's traps is casting. The role of Johnny, a seven-year-old boy who often speaks and behaves in a manner more befitting a 47-year-old, is a particularly tough problem. ELT has failed to come up with an adequate moppet, but has chosen Calvin Waters, an attractive nine-year-old who seems confused and snowed under by the role.

Johnny's father is a complex part and Scott Edmonds fails to get beneath the surface of it. As the poet who craves respect and understanding for not only himself and his poetry but for poets and things poetic the world over,

Fish... librettist-lyricist Alan Jay Lerner and N.Y. attorney Bertram A. Mayers argued at hearings here last March that the proposed IRS ruling would be discriminatory against small investors, who are essential to the theatre. The effect, they said, would be to force control of the stage into the hands exclusively of the rich.

The tax change was actually not aimed at the theatre, but was drafted after a group of doctors who could not incorporate and sought to form a limited partnership as a means of easing their taxes. Their move led the IRS to make a study of all forms of limited partnerships, and to change the rules governing them. Last week's decision cancels the proposed change.

THE CRITICS CHEER TENNESSEE WILLIAMS' NEW COMEDY HIT "PERIOD OF ADJUSTMENT"

New York Herald Tribune

FIRST NIGHT REPORT

'Period of Adjustment'

By Walter Kerr

THE NEW, milder Tennessee Williams has now made his appearance on Broadway. He's just as talented as the old one. "Period of Adjustment" is, of all things, a dramatized column of warm-hearted advice to the married lovelorn, with a lonely wife saying a prayer to the Infant of Prague as the second-act curtain comes down in a hush, and with a still lonelier wife standing out in the snow on Christmas Eve calling to her husband to let her back in before that third-act curtain can fall.

Sound unlikely? That's underestimating the strangeness of the evening—it's positively frightening how fond our playwright has become of the addled and angry and really admirable human race. You're also underestimating the playwright if you think he can't bring it off.

Nearly every thing is made funny and touching as Dr. Williams ascends to the chair of human wisdom, and it is the most difficult things that are done best. The play chooses to concern itself, for instance, with two very paltry related marital problems, one balancing the other with an almost intolerable neatness.

James Daly's wife has bounced back to mother, taking the baby along, on the very same sentimental holiday that finds Mr. Daly's old war buddy, Robert Webber, ringing the doorbell with his brand new wife. But he and the brand new wife aren't speaking, or at least aren't speaking reasonably: that was a bad honeymoon night they had last night at the Old Man River Motel.

How does Mr. Williams get 'round the bridge-table symmetry of his marriage counseling? He laughs at it, savagely and heartily and with some mutual sneering as the two men cry into their beer-cans. Mr. Daly nearly chokes on his own virtue as he points out to the scratchy newlyweds that they are going through a period of you-know-what. This is immediately followed by a stunned frown that turns his face into a knot (beautifully done, Mr. Daly) as he realizes that the problem is real and that he's got some small adjusting of his own to do. The play pokes fun at itself as it makes its point, which means that you can swallow the lecturing and respect its truth at the same time.

There's also the matter of that title. Mr. Williams keeps using it again and again as the two couples make strangled efforts to straighten each other out, and it's something of a wonder how the laughs get bigger each time the too-helpful phrase turns up. Those who admire the author's technical mastery of his line-rhythms are apt to be open-mouthed, too, as his whining and bawling and swift-slugging Texans build mountains of humor out of hypnotically-repeated phrases: the piteous insistence with which Barbara Baxley reports having spent her wedding-day driving in a "funeral hack," and her stunned admiration as she studies a horror of a Spanish-ty low-cost dwelling (a "sweet little home" with a "sweet little bedroom" and a "sweet little bathroom") make for delectable comedy, delectable character-writing, and quite honest social reporting with a faint ache behind it.

Director George Roy Hill has discovered just the right itching rate for each of these friendly, frustrated people. In Robert Webber's case the term "itch rate" is literal: Mr. Webber begins with a tremor—that this tremor is not precisely sexually induced is one of the gradual discoveries of the entertainment—and goes on in quiet, a spectacular display of jiggles, twitches, and steely-jawed tics. That Mr. Webber remains enormously likable with each successive failure of his nervous system is a handsome indication of the sympathy and understanding that are being paid out on all sides.

Miss Baxley is most endearing as she listens, wide-eyed, to a row between a couple of childish males in the next room, and she is even more fascinating when she turns her pekinese snarl and her caterwauling vocal chords on both the "grounded bombers" in question. (If there is one thing that neither she nor Mr. Williams can quite get past, it may be that all-out bit with the Infant of Prague.) Mr. Daly is dandy as he finds at least one source of delight left in his life (sending a toy rocket off its Christmas-tree launching-pad) and remarkably adroit as an open emotion shatters him in the final scene. It has taken some extraordinary doing to make Rosemary Murphy as homely as she is helpless as the wife who comes back home; but she is very touching indeed, and the author has been canny in wrapping up a romantic play with so unromantic a happy ending.

It's true that once in a while the sex chatter between two boastfully articulate men becomes rather more obsessive than plausible; and you may find yourselves wondering, now and then, whether Mr. Williams hasn't gone after a good thing—sober sentiment—with too much of a whoop and a holler. But never mind. It's a believable evening. It's probably even a wise one. And the heart, which the author has plainly got, is wonderfully protected by humor.

TWO on the AISLE

By RICHARD WATTS Jr.

Charm and Tennessee Williams

In "Period of Adjustment," which opened last night at the Helen Hayes Theater, Tennessee Williams has written a warm-hearted and charming romantic comedy. It would be the cruelest irony if people who have been complaining that he dealt only with violence, perversion and sadism were dissatisfied with the quiet, almost sentimental mellowness of his new play, but I refuse to believe there is any such peril. What he has given us is so brightly winning, and it is so splendidly acted, particularly by Barbara Baxley, that its sympathetic mood is most becoming to him.

"Period of Adjustment" has its amusing speeches and scenes, but its status as a comedy arises from its philosophical point of view. In a spirit of wry detachment, Mr. Williams looks at the world with surprisingly tolerant humor. It may be a kind of vast hospital for mental cases, rocking on a volcano, but quarrelsome men can be just spoiled children and the fear of love, which causes them to do outrageous things, can be touching as well as foolish. And it entertains him to observe that people, who can give the wisest advice to others, are often foolish about themselves.

Use of a Symbol

For all the mellowness of his current mood, Mr. Williams has not deserted his dark vision of existence completely. It comes out chiefly in his use of one dramatic symbol. His characters are residing in a house in a Southern suburban town, but the house is perched above a cavernous hill that is slowly sinking and may one day pitch into the pit beneath. Meanwhile, though, they go on stubbornly existing, and the two men and two women who are his central figures reach a solution of their troubles, but there is no reason to believe it is more than a temporary one.

But even the touch of symbolism is used with a suggestion of humor, as the householders keep pointing with pride to the growing creaks in their roof. And the story the author has to tell is simple and uncomplicated. Two men who have been pals since their war days in Korea are planning to spend Christmas together, but both of them are having wife problems. One has a bride who had fled from him on their wedding night, and the other wants to get away from his wife because he cannot stand her parents. Both men are fountains of good council to the other fell

Pleasant Characters

Nothing especially dramatic or hilarious ever happens, but the play is consistently interesting because Mr. Williams is observing his two couples with such humorous sympathy and understanding, such tolerant appreciation of their weakness and their strength. They are also fundamentally nice people, although this doesn't make him look on them as dull. They are drawn with an insight and appreciation which makes them alive and likable, and the portrait of the frightened young bride must represent the most engaging characterization he has ever set down.

With her combination of foolishness, sensitivity, loquaciousness and wistfulness, she is a charming girl, and Miss Baxley plays her with enchanting humor and sympathy. James Daly is excellent as the experienced husband filled with wisdom for others. Robert Webber is equally expert as the pal who is actually as frightened by sex as his innocent bride. Rosemary Murphy is admirably moving as the other wife, and Nancy R. Pollock and Lester Mack are fine in their one scene as her angry parents. George Roy Hill's staging and Jo Mielziner's set are most helpful. "Period of Adjustment" is delightful.

'PERIOD OF ADJUSTMENT'

Tennessee at His Best

By JOHN McCLAIN

THERE IS NO POINT in trying to be cute and inventive about a review of the new Tennessee Williams job, "Period of Adjustment," which opened last night at the Helen Hayes Theatre.

It is, quite simply, a resounding success. It has warmth and good wisdom and hilarious humor, and it has in addition a pleasantly earthy and uncomplicated attitude toward the relationship between boys and girls which has not been featured in his previous efforts.

The secret of its brilliance, as before, is the author's exceptional artistry with the language and with his ability to make his people come to life and grow before he allows them to take their first faltering steps into the plot.

Here he has considered the case of two wartime pals. One has married the plain daughter of a Nashville tycoon on the promise that he will inherit the old man's dynasty.

The other has just yelled-up with the nurse from the veterans hospital, a virgin who had aided in his treatment for a case of severe shakes. On Christmas Eve they meet when the bride, emerging from an unfulfilled honeymoon night in a motel, is deposited in the home of the son-in-law who has just quit his job and lost his wife in the bargain.

Reassures Her

There is an immediate rapport between the newlywed [illegible] who has been left alone while her groom is out buying a bottle of champagne, and the old chum who is faced with a lonely evening with a tree, presents, but no wife and son. He tries to assuage her grief with the oft-repeated remark that all this is part of a normal "Period of Adjustment."

It seemed to me that Mr. Williams was on his best ground when dealing with merely the three people most prominent in the cast.

The scenes between James Daly, the admitted fortune-hunter, and Barbara Baxley, the neophyte wife of his chum, are rich in wit and understanding. Then there are a couple of prolonged exchanges between the two men, Mr. Daly and Robert Webber, which are comparable as perceptive stagecraft; both in conception and execution.

The only time in the evening when I was less than transported was the interlude in which the father and mother-in-law invaded the premises with a police officer to remove their daughter's belongings. This had an aura of burlesque which was somehow phony, and I wonder if the whole episode was really necessary.

Delighted, Amused

But we come back to Mr. Williams' gift and power with the spoken word, and so we are delighted and amused, even though we may have known few people quite like these violent Southerners.

Naturally, the laurels are not all the author's. Somebody, maybe Cheryl Crawford, the producer, was responsible for an immaculate bit of casting. Miss Baxley, Mr. Daly and Mr. Webber were so superbly right, although it might not have seemed so at first consideration. So, as it turned out, was Rosemary Murphy, as the rich wife to Mr. Daly.

And there was George Roy Hill's contribution, as director. Here was an instance in which one felt that the staging had a great deal to do with the essence of the scenes, that each one was improved by ingenious maneuvers.

Jo Mielziner's single setting of a Spanish-type house in Suburbia added its complicated yet workable donation to a joyous evening.

Mr. Williams has come full cycle, from the diffuse and dissolute, to the comedy (which is also a tragedy) as represented by "Period of Adjustment." He may still not be thoroughly adjusted, but he's awfully good right now.

Daily Mirror

'Period' Is Touching Comedy

ROBERT COLEMAN'S THEATRE

We have seen few men enjoy comedy in the theatre as much as Tennessee Williams, yet it took him a lot of years to get around to penning one. That would be "Period of Adjustment," which Cheryl Crawford brought to the Helen Hayes last evening. It is packed with laughs, and they are often tender and touching.

At the curtain's rise it is Christmas Eve. A middle-aged war veteran sits in loneliness before the fire in a house slowly sinking into a cavern. He's quit his dull job. His wife has left him, taking their small son along with her. In bursts a highly nervous service buddy, feuding with his unhappy bride of a day.

THE MALADJUSTED war heroes, dissatisfied with their lots in life, are like the blind trying to lead the blind. They eventually decide to flee to Texas and promote a ranch on which to raise longhorns for TV Westerns. And by the final curtain's fall, they're on their way toward adjustment with their respective spouses.

In all his plays Williams has struck a note of frustration. The current one does, too, but it also holds out hope. It is his idea that the world is a big psychiatric hospital, with most of the people in it seeking an adjustment to life, seeking to make the best of what fate has dealt out to them.

It is a human play about real people. Its leading characters have strengths and weaknesses. They are confused, more than a little disillusioned, yet they are doing their darndest to grope their way through the problems that beset them. They talk at cross purposes. They repeat themselves because they are fumbling for expression.

Williams uses repetitive phrases for emphasis, to score points and probably to achieve a semblance of reality. The technique in his gifted hands is effective. He garners chuckles that have a warming glow. He serves notice that he can handle comedy as well as drama with a shock in it.

George Roy Hill, who made his directorial bow with "Look Homeward, Angel," has staged "Period of Adjustment" with insight. He has gotten especially moving performances from James Daly, Barbara Baxley, Robert Webber and Rosemary Murphy. Daly is just right as the husband deserted by a [illegible] wife on the eve of a holiday. He's bitter and yet compassionate.

MISS BAXLEY is quite wonderful as the young bride who has found marriage less felicitous than she expected, and wishes she were back home with her folks. Webber is very good, too, as her high-strung, frightened husband who has to learn how to be gentle. Miss Murphy has pathetic moments as the plain wife who allows her parents to almost wreck her marriage.

Nancy R. Pollock and Lester Mack are a bit sticky as a meddlesome, stuffy father and mother. But Williams has written their parts that way. After all, they are just brought on to cause a ruckus when the author figures one is needed.

"Period of Adjustment" has heart and it's calculated to endear yours if you'll give it a chance. It's a small play, this initial Tennessee Williams comedy, but it rings as true as life itself. It proves that Williams can make you laugh as well as cry.

Williams' 'Period of Adjustment' Is an Affectionate Little Comedy

By JOHN CHAPMAN

To demonstrate that he has not type-cast himself as a narrator of doom, horror and confusion, Tennessee Williams has written an affectionate and rather charming little domestic comedy, "Period of Adjustment," which Cheryl Crawford presented last evening at the Helen Hayes Theatre.

Outwardly, the play [illegible] a little plot, for it is an incident which occurs on a Christmas Eve in a modest house in a Southern suburb. Inwardly, though, it shows Williams' interest in people and his ability to create them for the stage.

His people are, chiefly, four in [illegible] have been married one day and another pair who have been wed six years. Each pair of mates faces the same problem—an inability to get together. The six-year couple have fail[illegible] to make a go of it and their marriage has been sun[illegible]dered; the miserable newlyweds [illegible] they are ever farther [illegible]

Close Harmony

[illegible] Williams' [illegible] and purpose [illegible] the quartet, and he does so without recourse to such an obvious trick as spouse-switching. With considerable humor, he lets each pair reach an understanding of themselves, and the ending is a placidly happy one.

There are charming performances by Barbara Baxley as the one-day bride, Robert Webber as her jittery husband, James Daly as the man whose wife has walked out on him after six years and Rosemary Murphy as the wife who has walked out—but who comes back.

Papa loves Mama. Williams loves people and I think Miss Baxley is an excellent comedienne.

Following are available parts in upcoming Broadway, off-Broadway, and touring shows, as well as ballet, films, industrial and television shows. All information has been obtained directly by the VARIETY Casting Department by telephone calls, and has been checked as of noon yesterday (Tues.).

The available roles will be repeated weekly until filled, and additions to the list will be made only when information is secured from responsible parties. The intention is to service performers with leads provided by the managements of the shows involved rather than to run a wild goose marathon. This information is published without charge.

In addition to the available parts listed, the tabulation includes productions announced for later this season, but, for which, the managements, as yet, aren't holding open casting calls. Parenthetical designations are as follows: (C) Comedy, (D) Drama, (MC) Musical Comedy, (MD) Musical Drama, (R) Revue, (Rep) Repertory, (DR) Dramatic Reading.

Angel Clubs

dividual clubs, vary, according to Vall. He figures the club's combined investment in Broadway productions thus far this season between $20,000 and $30,000.

Theatrical Investor gets no payoff from the clubs it establishes, other than subscription to the publication. However, in cases where two or more clubs combine an vestment so that it's acceptable a producer, the transaction is contractually handled by Theatrical Investor for a flat fee based on th amount of th vestment. Under such an arrangement, Theatrical Investor handles the bookkeeping for the clubs.

Vall, who anticipates an extension of the clubs throughout the country, points out that a nationwide string of investi clubs could provide a substantial chunk of the total coin invested in legit productions. The clubs also have a social function in that the members usually get together to discuss their investments and the theatre in general. A number of producers have already agreed to reserve investment units in their productions for club contributions.

The pooling of funds for legit investment is not new. There are a number of backer syndicates and occasionally corporations are formed for just that purpose. As for the Theatrical Investor, the publication classifies shows in four categories indicating the probability of profit to investors based on an analysis of Broadway productions of the preceding five years. The analysis takes in the type of producti (comedy, drama, musical, revue, etc.) and the track record of those connected with th venture.

H. Allen Smith's Projects

"How To Write Without Knowing Nothing," dealing with semantics and the American slanguage, is the first of H. Allen Smith's next six book commitments which include first-time attempt at a juvenile and also "To Hell In A Handbasket" which he calls "a patchw rk autobiography."

"Knowing Nothing" is for Little, Brown and precedes the Doubleday autobiog. Accent on the initial will be "use and misuse of language with many hilarious' examples." A chapter will be devoted to Sime Silverman, founder-editor of VARIETY, and the paper itself.

The memoir will cull autobiographical chapters and bits out all Smith's earlier, out-of-print books, rewritten and in some cases embellished. "Jemmy" is the juvenile. The other three projects are a travel book (Little, Brown); "The Cheese Box" (tentative title), book of unrelated essays and articles, including those Smith has written for the VARIETY Anniversary Number; and "A Journal of a Tour of the Republic." This book was suggested to him long ago by the late H. L. Mencken, accent on the Pacific Northwest and Alaska. Smith has written about the length and breadth of the U. S. excepting this to him new territory.

Pepe Romero's 2d Book

Pepe Romero, columnist on the Mexico City News and former VARIETY stringer there, in New York last week to close a deal with Doubleday publication of a book tentatively entitled "Mexico City at Midnight." It'll be his second one, first having been "Jumping Bean" published in 1953 by Putnam.

Romero just closed a successful one-man show of his paintings at the Misrachi Galleries, Mexico City, which featured a series of abstract paintings with Mexican themes.

Stop A New Wave?

The object pres mably of a dust cket is to lure a book-buyer into buying a book, but this one is a repellent. The title in giant type "How To Write 10 Different Best Sellers Now In Your Spare Time And Become The First Author On Your Block Unless title continued n back) There's An Author Already Living On Your Block In Which Case You'll Become The Second Author On Your Block And hat's Okay Too And Other Stories." It's by George Kirgo, a tv playwright who has looked at too any stills of Ernie Kovacs.

This windy and dull gag is repeated four times before the book gets under way and all but ruins a fairly lively and funny book. Obviously nobody gets fired around Simon & Schuster the Eisenhower administration but somebody ought to get a severe letter of reprimand before this dust jacket nonsense sweeps the country and becomes as repulsive as 1960 campaign "literature."

Texas' 'Obscenity' Indictments

A Federal Grand Jury, seeking to keep pornography out of north Texas, indicted two out state paperback distributors and a phonograph record supplier. It charges Newport News (Va.) and Chicago concerns with transporting obscene paperback books to newsstands in Ft. Worth, Tex.

The phonograph man, Irving W. Kregal, Hollywood, who does biz as "Hollywood Jokers," was charged with mailing advertisements for his goods to Dallas last May.

The book distributors are Max A. Goldstein and Dominion News Co., Inc., of Newport News, and th W. F. Hall Printing Co. and Joseph Burten of Chicago.

The Virginia concern was cited for sending at least 460 copies of "filthy" books to this area. Hall Printing and Burten, whose home is in Oxford, N.J., are charged with sending similar books.

U.S. Attorney W. B. Best 3d, said the publishers of Fabian Books Ltd., Saber Books and Vega Books, all of Fresno, Calif., had already been indicted.

Student Papers' Fellowship

Brandeis U., Waltham, Mass., has announced establishment of a unique $25,000 fellowship to further techniques of printing production in student sponsored publications. The Fellowship was created by the family of Mr. and Mrs. Abraham Weisberg of Brookline, Mass., in honor of the couple's 50th wedding anniversary. Weisberg is business manager of the Jewish Advocate, Boston.

Known as "The Abraham and Sarah Weisberg Fellowship Endowment Fund," the fund will subsidize a graduate student or faculty member. He will serve as technical adviser to the student-sponsored publications on the campus. The Weisberg family stressed the fund will not be used to alter or in any way influence the editorial content of Brandeis student publications. It will, they id, be employed only to assist in the technical aspects of the publications concerned.

Trib's 'Lively Arts' Bow

N. Y. Herald Tribune integrated its Sunday entertainment section and Book Review into a single Sunday section titled "The Lively Arts" and unveiled the new department Sunday (20) the accompaniment of heavy advertising the preceding week in competing newspapers.

New secti tab-sized, covers theatre (Walter Kerr), films (Paul Beckley), music Paul Henry Lang), dane (Walter Terry), art (Emily Genauer), records (Herbert Kupferberg. Also features by John Crosby, Joe Hyams, Art Buchwald, Kenneth Tynan fr m London and others. Television is treated lightly, since Trib is continuing its pocket-sized Sunday tv supplement. John K. Hutchins continues as chief book reviewer.

Judith Crist, yet Trib reporter, heads up the overall section with title. Editor of the Arts.

Tom Weatherly's Poems

Broadway publicist-producer-poet Tom Weatherly, whose show biz verse has appeared regularly in VARIETY, is puttin m between covers. Book will be titled "Broadway Ballads."

New Yorker cartoonist R. Taylor is doing the illustrations. Literary agent Jan Foley arranged the collaboration.

Musmanno's Eichmann Book

Marrae-Si ith will publish "The Nuremberg Trial of Eichmann's Murder Battalions" written by Pennsylvania Supreme Court Justice Michael A. Musmanno.

Justice Musmanno presided over the trial of 23 leaders of the "Einsatzgruppen," the Eichmann handpicked organization charged with killing 1,000,000 men, women and children by firing squads. Fourteen of th Nazis were put to death and the remainder to long jail terms.

Books' Byproduct Values

An example of the byproduct values of book publishing (serialization, paperbacks etc.) is pointed up by two show biz memoirs, the Zsa Zsa Gabor (by Gerold Frank) and Marilyn Monroe (by Maurice Zolotow) books. Both have been just fair sellers, "Zsa Zsa" perhaps a shade more, claiming three printings (World Pub.), while "Marilyn Monroe" (Harcourt, Brace) is only around the 10,000 mark although, with the recent marital split of the Arthur Millers, there has been evidence of some sales upbeat.

However, both were serialized in advance in McCall's and both have had strong byproduct incomes from other rights. Fawcett paid $67,500 for the paperback rights to the Gabor book and Bantam Books gave an advance of $30,000 for "MM." Latter fetched $3,500 from the German serialization rights alone and has been sold to book houses in Germany, England, France and Italy, with the Scandinavian countries probably to follow. McCall's mag paid $100,000 for the "Zsa Zsa" digest (reportedly only about half that for the Monroe rights) and the Gabor biog will also get wide foreign distribution.

Gehman's Homecoming

Richard Gehman, prolific slick mag contrib, returns home to Lancaster, Pa., this week (25) to launch his latest book, "Let Not the Heart Be Troubled" (McGraw-Hill) with autograph party at downtown L. B. Herr & Co. booksellers.

Latest volume is result of joint effort by Gehman and Richard K. Reinhold, chief photog for Lancaster Intelligencer Journal, who flew around the world last year, taking an objective look at religious missionary efforts and effects, particularly in the Far East.

Gehman and Reinhold are old school buddies. The former went to freelancing after a brief reportorial career on Intell-Journal. Reinhold has been the daily's chief lensman since his return from World War II service.

Montpelier's 2d Foldo

The Montpelier (Vt.) Post has ceased publication for the second tim since it was founded last July. Thus Montpelier once more becomes the only state capital in the United States without its own daily newspaper. A previous daily, the Montpelier Argus, was merged with the Barre Times before the Post started its short and rocky career.

Henry F. Evans, publisher, was not immediately available for comment, but Sanford F. Harrington of South Barre, co-owner of the Post, indicated the new suspension of publication w "final."

Bobbs-Merrill Expands

Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis, has acquired the elementary school publishing properties of Charles Scribner's Sons. Ronald P. Hobbs, formerly executive vicepresident of Rinehart, became exec veep.

Other new members of the executive staff include Dr. Leo Gans, formerly vicepresident and editor in chief of American Book Co.; Lucius Lamar, formerly manager of the educational division of Scribners; William H. Y. Hackett Jr., formerly executive editor of the Rinehart college department; and Claude Baldwin McCaleb, former chief editor of John Wiley & Sons.

Plugging H-T's New Mag

Besides the display advertising taken by the N. Y. Herald Tribune to project its new Lively Arts Sunday supplement, under amusement editor Judith Crist's direction, the paper's Broadway columnist and editor of the TV Magazine, Hy Gardner, did a whirlwind 10-shots tour around the radio and tv circuit in Gotham. As a seasoned hand in the medium, with his own Saturday night video program (he also subbed for the ailing Walter Winchell in recent weeks, doing part of that program), the management asked Gardner to do the mike shilling.

Meantime Robert M. White 2d, who is returning to the Mexico (Mo.) Ledger as co-editor and co-publisher of his father's paper, resigned as president and editor of the N. Y. Herald Tribune in anticipation of Ambassador to Great Britain John Hay Whitney returning to assume that post actively. Jock Whitney is dominant owner of the paper.

'Americanize Canada Reading?'

The circumstances and status of the magazine publishing business in Canada is being probed by a Commission on Publications, set up in Ottaw by the federal government. Chairman is M. Grattan O'Leary, editor of the Ottawa Journal.

Chief beef of Canadian briefs seem to be that United States publications, via Canadian editions, Canadian inserts, or just plain bigness on Canadian newsstands, are "to Americanize Canadian reading habits." Hearings of the commission are continuing.

CHATTER

Milt Machlin promoted from article editor to managing editor of Argosy magazine.

Oscar Fraley, UPI columnist and author of "The Untouchables," will have a new book on Eliot Ness called "Four Against the Mob" to be published by Popular Library. Fraley, with Mrs. Stella Crater, has authored a book, "The Empty Robe," the story of Judge Crater to be on the Doubleday list.

Belmont Books will publish "Meet the Mob" by Frank Mullady, ex-New York detective, and William H. Kofoed; consists of a series of profiles in depth on some of America's biggest mobsters.

Dick Groat, captain of the Pittsburgh Pirates, and Bill Surface have sold a book on the Pirates to Coward-McCann.

The "Ninth Life," a hush-hush project by Milt Machlin and Billy Woodfield, is on the Putnam list.

Popular Publications, entering the pocketbook field, has a book on a famous show biz personality scheduled and written by Bill Surface. At the moment, the name of the personality is being kept under wraps. "Putting on the Dog," a collection of dog photos by Mary Eleanor Browning, with captions by Paul Keyes, head writer for Jack Paar will be a Citadel book. The dog pictures are used regularly on the Parr show.

Leo Guild has a book in work on gambling called "How to Win a Million Dollars in Gambling."

Al Ostrow, of the Cleveland Press, doing a book with Doc Gerber, coroner of Cleveland, called "Medical Detective." Agented by H. W. Kellick.

OBITUARIES

CLARK GABLE

Clark Gable, 59, Metro stalwart and one of the top stars of the screen for a quarter of a century, died Nov. 17 of second presumed heart attack in his h spital bed.

He had suffered a first coronary thrombosis on Nov. 6 at his home, but swift action in rushing him to the Hollywood Pres yterian Hospital for emergency treatment is credited with having saved his life at that time. His wife, former actress Kay Williams, moved into his room while doctors and day and night nurses attended him.

Gable's tenure as a star had extended nearly 30 years, dating from the time he appeared opposite Norma Shearer in "A Free Soul" in 1931, until the present. His most recent picture was with Marilyn Monroe in "The Misfits," which he completed Nov. 4, only two days before he was stricken. He stated when he left the set on final day's shooting that he would make n more appearances until after the birth of the child his wife is expecting in March.

Born William Clark Gable Cadiz, O., actor became a call boy at an Akron theatre. He drifted to the oil fields near Bigheart, Okla., working as a tool dresser, but abandoned this to join the touring Jewell Players Kansas City.

JACK CARNEY

NOV. 27, 1956

Later, he hit the road with Jane Cowl's "Romeo and Juliet," played Sergeant Quirt in "What Price Glory," and attracted film producers' attention with his performance in "Th Last Mile" in Los Angeles.

During the middle '20s he had made several extra appearances in Hollywood films but left after failing to make an imprint.

After making his film bow in Pathe's "Painted Desert" a heavy in 1931, Metro signed him for "The Easiest Way," with Constance Bennett, and he remained at this studio until early 1955, when he left to freelance. During the last five years he made such films "Soldiers of Fortune," "Band of Angels," "Teach 's Pet," "But Not for Me," "It Started in Naples."

At a time when his first peak of popularity was waning in 1934, Frank Capr, called him to costar with Claudete Colbert in "It Happened One Night," at Columbia, which subsequently won him an Oscar for Best Actor, and launched the po ularity that marned thereafter.

During World War II he enlisted in the Air Force as a private, was

MIAMI BEACH BETS ON SHOW BIZ

N.Y.'s the Place to Live, Says Behan, But He Wouldn't Want to Work Here

By JESSE GROSS

Being a character is paying off for Brendan Behan. The Irish playwright, whose scorn of convention is evident in both his writing and personal behavior, figures he's earned around $100,000 in the last couple of years from his play, "The Hostage," and his autobiography, "Borstal Boy."

Behan, whose living quarters have included digs in Dublin and London, as well as reform school and jail, has been residing in recent months with his wife, Beatrice, at the Algonquin Hotel, N. Y. He's probably the liveliest personality to hit the hotel since the old "round table" had its celebrated lunches there when the late Frank Case was the owner.

There's one aspect of Behan's character that could be a problem for the Algonquin's present owner, Ben Bodne, who took over following Case's death. That's the Anglo-Saxon profanity which the loquacious writer uses freely, generally in an audible voice during interviews in the hotel lobby-lounge.

Behan has been in Manhattan about three months in conneection with the Broadway production of "Hostage," which opened Sept. 20

Anti-Theme Song

Paris, Nov. 29.

Marcel Aymont, pop French singer-composer, has roused the ire of the Castro government with his newest song, "Don't Go To Havana."

Cuba has beefed to the French government, but no action. Song has no political implications.

Chicago Spreading, Theatres Included

Chicago, Nov. 29.

Reversing the trend, Chicago is starting to come by some new theatres. A new hardtop opened recently in suburban Skokie. A 5,000-seat theatre is part and parcel of McCormick Place, the new lakefront exposition centre just unveiled, to which the Metropolitan Opera will go.

A third showcase, seating 1,250, is planned as part of Marina City, the $36,000,000 housing-commercial project just north of the Loop, for which ground was broken last week.

Downtown legit earlier lost the Selwyn and Harris theatres, since converted to films as (a) Cinestage and (b) Michael Todd, respectively. The Erlanger, another legit dome, is slated for demolition next year to make way for a new Federal office complex.

The Marina City development is sponsored by the CIO-AFL Building Service Employes Union, and projects twin 60-story circular towers, lower stories for commercial tenancy, uppers for residential. Also blueprinted are a marina for 700 boats, year-round swimming and skating facilities, a 54-lane bowlery, and restaurants.

Direct Call to Mr. K Paves Way for Oatune Combo's Tour of USSR

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Personal manager Jim Moloney thought a Soviet tour by folk balladeer Stan Jones and the Sons of the Pioneers would be a good idea, but the U. S. State Dept. held out little hope the Russians would ever agree. So Moloney took matters into his own hands—with State Dept. permission—and put through a call to Nikita Khrushchev. He admits it was a fluke and a bad connection at that, but he got through.

Moloney said he talked to Khrushchev at midnight Los Angeles time, doing most of the talking with K's interpreter. Said Moloney: "Mr. Khrushchev was most cordial, was receptive to the

Mails Clark Gable Brandy Tieup Despite Demise

Jack Poust & Co., sales agent for Stock's Italian brandy and vermouth, sent to dealers last week a mailing piece that hit the nadir in bad timing. Promotion featured Clark Gable in a scene from "It Started in Naples," with the brandy set out in front of him.

Mailed ad was postmarked Nov. 23, Gable died Nov. 17.

Kennedy's Press Confabs May Be at Night & on TV

Washington, Nov. 29.

Possibility exists that President-elect John F. Kennedy may hold some of his press conferences at night after taking office and make them available for live television coverage.

Kennedy's press secretary, Pierre Salinger, today (Tues.) confirmed that such a change in White House procedure is "under discussion" but stressed that it is "a long way from a decision." He said he has had no conversation yet with the tv networks on such a possibility.

BOOSTS TALENT COSTS TO $3-MIL.

By LARY SOLLOWAY

Miami Beach, Nov. 29.

This resort's hotel-cafe entrepreneurs have increased talent budgets for this winter despite uncertainty of the effects the current "national recession" may have on their "big season."

To insure a steady flow of vacationers during upcoming weeks the bonifaces have added more "free extras" to all-inclusive rates already loaded with giveaways, and the prime item, per every annum at this time, is the nightlife programming around a hotel, not only for the guests, but in order to attract patronage from rival inns. Thus, the take-home bag of dough for performers and musicians will tote up to an estimated $3,000,000 for the 16-to-20 weeks of an extended season.

The hoteliers are placing their faith in the potentials of promotional literature and national advertising that sings a song of show biz, with buildups of the nighttime divertissments they have planned for guests stopping at their inns. The majority offer not only the shows set for their cafes, but one-night performances on a

N.Y. Cabaret Rule On Fingerprinting Relaxed by Mayor

The first break in the battle to relax Police Dept. fingerprint requirements came Monday (28) when New York City Mayor Robert F. Wagner agreed to permanent fingerprinting in a central mid-Manhattan location to replace fingerprint renewal every two years. He also said that he had written Gov. Nelson Rockefeller that he was in favor of easing the ID card requirements. This concession came following a confab between the Mayor and representatives of culinary and bartenders unions plus those of the American Guild of Variety Artists and Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians. The Mayor also said that if Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy did not agree to the changes, he would drive the reforms through the City Council.

This concession came after the Mayor declared that charges of corruption in the Police Dept. levelled by the Citizens Emergency Committee were groundless, according to the findings of Investigations Commissioner Louis Kaplan. He also defended the diversion

Looks Like AFTRA-SAG Strike Will Be Averted in Upbeat Talks

Atmosphere of the negotiations by the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and Screen Actors Guild with advertising agencies and networks changed this week from poor to hopeful. Management and union sources agree that the contract dickers look "optimistic," and the feeling is that all the major obstacles to a new two-year agreement might well be cleared up before the week is over.

The key obstacle to easy settlement throughout the extended negotiations has been the wide gap between offer and demand on tv blurb fees. However, on Monday (28) as the negotiators closeted themselves for informal meetings in a N.Y. sidestreet hotel, the representative of the agencies from the Assn. of National Advertisers and the unions' leaders, according to observers, each "bent a little."

While they are too general to be meaningful in terms of actual gains for labor, the following percentages are offered to show how close in principle, if not principal, the negotiators are: The agencies were offering increases in spot commercials of 23 to 25% and AFTRA and SAG demands were

Lipton's Early Bid On '64 Conventions

So satisfied was Lipton Tea with its share of sponsorship in NBC-TV's convention and election coverage this year that the bankroller—four years early—has asked for what amounts to the right of first refusal on the 1964 treatments by the network.

Through its agency, Sullivan, Stauffer, Colwell & Bayles, Lipton wrote sales a "formal request (that Lipton) be given the opportunity to participate in the 1964 convention and election coverage on NBC-TV." Request is by no means binding to either the sponsor or the network; cycles and enthusiasms change in tv in less than a season, so certainly they can change within four years.

But the Lipton note elicited a guarantee from NBC-TV, according to a web spokesmen, that the sponsor, who is undoubtedly the first to assert "strong interests," shall be entitled to the first crack at purchase. Selling should start in 1963.

Meyer Davis Has Steady Date at D.C. Inaugurals

Washington, Nov. 29.

Presidents come and they go, but Meyer Davis keeps right on waving his baton. For the seventh successive time, covering a period of 24 years and four different Presidents, the maestro has been commissioned to deliver the music for President-elect John F. Kennedy's inaugural ball on Jan. 20 at the 15,000-capacity Armory here. He'll be conducting a 50-piece orch for the occasion.

While the Armory has been the site of the last three inaugural balls, the 1956 affair launching Pres. Eisenhower's second term also had auxiliary balls at the Statler, Sheraton Plaza and Mayflower Hotels. That proved too confusing for ticket-holders last time and cued the decision to confine the

Pittsburgh Pirates' Win Of '60 World Series Gets Immortalization on 2 LPs

Pittsburgh, Nov. 29.

The World Series victory of the Pittsburgh Pirates has been recorded in story and song on two albums and will be placed on sale throughout the country for the Christmas trade.

The first entitled "The Incredible Pirates," is strictly for Pirate fans and baseball buffs and deals with the team through its 60 years of existence. Using the Ed Murrow "See It Now" technique, the record was produced by Peter Thornton, public relations director at KDKA-TV, and Ed Beachler, who writes most of the special events material at the station and is a former sports writer on the

Mexico's 3d World Fest Preems On Sked Sans Prelim Bally, Many Stars

Mexico City, Nov. 29.

Minus any preliminary fanfare or publicity ballyhoo, sans bikini-clad foreign or national starlets for glamour, and with only a token turnout of foreign star and film delegations, Mexico's Third World Review of Film Festivals at least preemed here on schedule and in Acapulco. Inaugural deadline of Nov. 18 at the San Diego Fortress was a race with time, with completion of the open air theatre, housing 2,000, just under the wire.

Bayonets of federal troops, strategically dispersed in unobtrusive locations in Acapulco kept factions wishing to depose Guerrero's Governor Raul Caballero Aburto at bay. Politicos also called back deposed reform Mayor David Joseph Piedra for a month so that public peace can be maintained during the fest and the following Pablo Cassals festival.

There wasn't much of a public turnout either for the Acapulco inaugural or the festival preem here two days later, on Nov. 20. Despite the fact of weekend open-

Cutback of U.S. Military Denendents Abroad Gets Mixed Show Biz Reaction

Tokyo, Nov. 29.

Interested show biz officials are registering mixed feelings on the impact that will be felt here from President Eisenhower's edict to cut back U.S. military dependents overseas, beginning early next year.

The big nightclubs in downtown Tokyo would hardly be affected is is believed, since bulk of their patronage comes from resident Japanese and foreign expense accounters, other businessmen and tourists. These cabarets are beyond the spending power of most GI's.

Phantom Recital

Paris, Nov. 29.

These things keep happening. Paris-Presse, one of the largest Paris dailies, printed a fine review of a concert the other day. Pollini, the Italian pianist, said the criticism was excellent, in top form et cetera. Unfortunately, however, the pianist had become ill the day before the concert and did not play.

P.S.: don't bother phoning this particular music critic at his newspaper any more; he's "on vacation."

CASTRO REGIME POISON FOR HAVANA NIGHTLIFE

Visitors returning from Havana report that nightlife under the Fidel Castro regime is virtually non-existent. The casinos, still attempting to operate, are almost empty. Most Habaneros have neither the money nor the inclination to spend in niteries. They are also forbidden to be seen gambling unless they can prove a certain level of income. Casino operators would like to close, but are forbidden by law to take any step that eliminates jobs.

The tourist business is virtually nil and there are only a few Americans now left in Cuba. Another factor that many Americans contend with is the possibility that their mail may be checked.

Thurber Rests for London

James Thurber has been ordered to cancel speaking engagements and ease off generally because of a throat virus until he and his wife sail in January to open "A Thurber Carnival" in London in March.

He will be in the West End cast along with Joan Anderson, the English girl who plays his secretary at the ANTA, on Broadway.

Xmas Lull For Stars' 'Benefits'

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Talent Authority Inc., which sifts requests for star appearances at benefits, has handled between 200 and 225 applications this year and now starts a Christmas lull.

The Authority, of which the AMPP and all talent unions and guilds are members, customarily approves better than half the applications, permitting top talent only to work for nothing, if they elect to do so. Non-stellar talent is required by union rules to charge for services.

Reason for the Christmas lull, it's explained, is that stars try to schedule their benefit appearances at times other than the holiday season since—aside from family and other personal considerations—there's a greater demand at this time for appearances at parades, hospitals, etc.

Friars Break Sod For New Coast Monastery; Robed Jessel Officiates

Beverly Hills, Nov. 29.

Grounding-breaking ceremonies were held Thanksgiving Day for the new $750,000 Friars Club of California near the center of this star-populated hamlet. Janet Leigh turned the first shovel of earth, with Abbot Frank Sinatra heading turnout of celebs for the event.

George Jessel, donned in a friar's robe, declared club was making way "for the building of a house—a good house—wherein men will laugh and drink and dine and tell a story and cut a card—all in goodwill."

Plans include a wing for a Friars-Town Hall of Fame to honor the creative achievements of actors, producers, directors and writers of the motion picture industry. Gary Cooper will be the first honoree, at fund-raising ceremonies Jan. 8.

SHOOTING LUCIANO—ON FILM

Glassman-Gosch Plan Gangster Biog For Naples.

Barnet Glassman, in association with former rodeo official Martin Gosch, has set plans to produce a film dealing with the life of Lucky Luciano. According to Gosch, Glassman acquired the rights to the former ganglord's story. Luciano, who has been living in Naples since his deportation from the U.S., is said to have received an advance payment and is also down for a piece of the picture.

The picture, Gosch stated, will be "100% based on fact" and will "tell what has happened to Luciano since he left the United States." Plans are to shoot the film in Naples, with May as the tentative starting time.

According to Gosch, major company financing and a distribution arrangement will be sought after the screenplay is completed.

Monks' Disappointment in 1926 Proves Boon for 'Francis of Assisi' Film

Assisi, Italy, Nov. 29.

The Lateran Palace anno 1209, complete with Pope Innocent III and his colorful entourage, came to life again here this week in a huge Papal apartment in the monastery of the Basilica of San Francesco. The occasion was the filming of a key scene for "Francis of Assisi" which is currently locationing at Assisi.

Sequence involved the day in April of 1209 when Francis and his group of 12 followers faced Innocent III and obtained his approval of their role of absolute poverty. The moment marked the start of the Franciscan order which from then on spread rapidly through Italy and the rest of the world.

Since it wasn't possible to film inside the Vatican, producer Plato Skouras and director Michael Curtiz were hard put to find a suitable substitute. Then one of the Franciscan monks mentioned the Papal apartment at the Basilica,

Cover Up Belly Dancers

Cairo, Nov. 22.

Belly dancers performing their traditional ageless art in Cairo niteries are now being jeered and booted at by enraged Egyptian oglers.

The reason is a new edict by Nasser's Ministry of Culture that bars bare midriffs. Unhappy dancers now must sport their traditional bows, spangles and veils atop old-fashioned all - concealing high-necked evening dresses. The effect is bizarre and distressing, and ringside patrons aren't sparing their derisive comments.

JUDY GARLAND TOPS ROYAL CHARITY BILL

London, Nov. 29.

Judy Garland headlines a royal charity gala bill at the Palladium on Thursday (1) to be attended by the Queen Mother. The show is organized by the Variety Artists Benevolent Fund as a show business tribute to the St. John Ambulance Brigade. Tickets range from $30 top down to $3.

Apart from Bruce Forsyth, former emcee of tv's Sunday Night at the London Palladium, the rest of the lineup will mainly come from the current Palladium revue. Among artists set for the royal show are Edmund Hockridge, David Kossoff, Joan Regan and Cliff Richard.

The Smithsonian Institute has formally requested all television cameras, sets and props used by CBS-TV in the first of the four Kennedy - Nixon "Great Debates" in September for recreation as a permanent exhibit in the museum in Washington.

Request went to Dr. Frank Stanton, president of CBS. He hasn't made a decision in the matter yet, since the cameras are expensive, working equipment.

Rooneys' Pop-Son Act

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Mickey Rooney and his 13-year-old son, Timmy, will both be in Allied Artists' "The Big Bankroll," Samuel Bischoff and David Diamond's biopic of N.Y. gambler Arnold Rothstein. Paul Robeson 'Top' With Aussie Public in His 1st Down Under P.A. Tour

Melbourne, Nov. 29.

Paul Robeson, previously only known here through recordings and films, is tops and his voice "as good as ever" according to Aussie opinion.

Robeson, touring Down Under and New Zealand, has already given one concert in Brisbane and four in Sydney. He is giving three here, then does two in Adelaide and two in Perth. He's playing to capacity or near-capacity houses.

At his Melbourne debut last week he got the cheer treatment—even before beginning his recital. These demonstrations are usually reserved here for teenage warblers. A large percentage of the capacity audience in the huge Melbourne Town Hall was made up of older age groups.

Robeson, with great ease, goes through Beethoven, Schubert, Negro spirituals, quotes poetry and gives an excerpt from "Othello." Interspersed are references to "peace," "injustices," "brothers under the skin" etc., which gain much applause—for it is applause for a great and superb artist.

At one point in last week's performance Robeson said he had been made "an honorary member of the "Wharfies' Association." This was in reference to a current strike here of wharf workers and public's sympathy is definitely not with them. Yet this statement too, said half jocularly, half seriously, received wild applause.

Robeson says he hopes to be back Down Under next year and appear with an Aussie cast in a production of "Othello."

'I'll Never Rival Tony Curtis But Films Now Give Me Fat Parts'—Nisei Actor

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, Nov. 29.

Patience and well-calculated crossings of the Pacific have paid off for Jimmy Shigeta, who returned to these shores last week to star as the late Japanese diplomat Hidenari Teresaki with Carroll Baker in MGM's "Bridge to the Sun."

Since leaving Japan almost two years ago for Nipponese edition of the "Chevy Show" with Shirley MacLaine and Louis Jourdan, Shigeta has become a hot property. He headlined the "Holiday in Japan" show in Las Vegas for more than six months and has had leading roles in "The Crimson Kimono," "Walk Like a Dragon" and "Cry for Happy."

His first LP (Silver Slipper) recently hit the market and the kick-off number, "I've Got Somebody to Love," is acting like a hit.

After "Bridge to the Sun," the actor-singer rushes into the film version of "Flower Drum Song." And a leading role in the adaptation of "Diamond Head," set in his native Hawaii, is among the heavy count of future possibilities for Shigeta.

Hailed in Hollywood today as the first romantic Oriental leading man, the Nisei had a standoff with films when he first banged on studio doors years ago. He declined to accept the houseboy and sinister soldier types of parts that were then the lot of the Oriental actor.

Although he had worked a number of the plushier clubs in the States as a singer, he decided, after his discharge from the Marines, to spend his waiting period in Japan. For five years he performed here, mainly as a singer, in night clubs, theatres and on tv until the States beckoned. Then he crossed the Pacific once more, his journey again timed to find a greater reception in the land of the departure.

INVESTORS EYE FLICKERS ANEW

By GENE ARNEEL

What with the Thanksgiving holiday and the usual year's-end doldrums, the New York Stock Exchange was hardly a robust trading post last week—except for the picture business issues. After a brief period of neglect investors came back with renewed affection, sending five film business stocks to new highs for 1960 and for the most part supporting others with just a little less enthusiasm.

Thus again has come about a situation that has marked downtown bear and bull runs frequently during the course of 1960. It's been a case of offishness for all listings except a few groups, with motion pictures among the favored few.

Analysts probed below the corporate surfaces of pic outfits again and found attractive assets. They and the man-in-the-street portfolio holder also seemed impressed with the blockbuster pictures presently on exhibition and upcoming. (The inside-pix opinion is not so optimistic, there being some doubt about the fiscal outcome of at least a couple of the new b.b.'s and trade reports that "Ben-Hur" is tapering off.)

But if "Ben-Hur" indeed is going at a slower pace in the lesser runs than in the showcases, there's no mistaking the obvious; this epic has proved a major klondike for Metro. Going hand in hand with this is the fact that the M-G common issue jumped $4.12½ last week, hit a high of $41.37½ and registered volume of 71,400, or beaucoup spirited trading in an otherwise dull week.

M-G also was given a helping hand by Hayden, Stone & Co., which put out a recommendation for the film company and forecast 1961 earnings at a big $5 per share.

Also endorsed by the Hayden brokerage: United Artists, Decca and Columbia for capital appreciation, and Warners and Paramount on a long-range basis.

UA last week, with 57,100 shares exchanging hands, went to a high of $34.62½. Year's low was $23.62½. Columbia, which had a low of $14.62½, went to a high of $25.50 on a 42,000-share volume. Col preferred climbed to a new peak of $71, from a low of $60, and American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres hit a high of $42.50 from a low of $25.75.

Active, too, was 20th-Fox with a volume of 47,700 shares and a gain for the week of $3.75 per share. Closed at $42.50, or within inches of the year's high. WB and Decca also were very close to high marks.

Disney Out of Slump?

Is Walt Disney making a comeback on the New York Stock Exchange? Producing company's common stock jumped $3.12½ per share last week, for its best showing in many months.

Disney used to be a highly favored attraction downtown, with a high of $59.50 last year, $49.50 this year, and then also this year a spectacular fall to $20. Last week's activity got the price up to $26.87½.

Britain-France-Italy Could Lure Stars Under New Close Contacts, Further Crimping Hollywood Studios

By HY HOLLINGER

Hollywood's already - depleted feature film production program could conceivably take a further dive if negotiations in Europe, involving subsidy payments from three countries, are completed. At the same time, the tripartite subsidy arrangement is seen as seriously affecting the bankrolling activities of at least two major distributing companies which are prominently involved in arranging financing for independent producers.

A film treaty between Britain and France or Britain and Italy, both in the negotiation stage, is the key to the new arrangement which could have a revolutionary effect on American film production. Since a treaty between France and Italy already exists, a Franco-Italo co-production can qualify for subsidies from both countries. If Britain makes a deal with either France or Italy or both, the possibility arises of a three-way co-production involving British Eady Plan funds, and French and Italian subsidies.

As outlined by a N. Y. film attorney well versed in the foreign subsidy technique, a picture costing $750,000 or less could be completely financed with subsidy coin from the three countries if the main producer, who could be a

Theatre Owners' Own Toll Data Vs. Paramount's

Only one family in seven watched a Telemeter home toll program in the West Toronto area covered by this Paramount system during the average weekday evening. The average expenditure was $1.22 per installation per week, which contrasts with the Telemeter claim of $2 weekly.

These are among the findings of a survey conducted by Elliott-Haynes, Inc., Toronto rating firm, according to Theatre Owners of America.

TOA, which is violently opposed to fee-tv, relates that the survey further showed:

44.1% of Telemeter families viewed only one show in the previous week; 19.1% saw two programs; 2.5% caught three shows; 34.3% did not see a single Telemeter offering; the average family is spending 80c of the $1.22 total on features; 726 sets, of a total of 5,500, were tuned in for Disney's "Sleeping Beauty"-"Grand Canyon" combination, meaning the biggest audience so far; "Ice Palace" had 87 family tuned in, the smallest.

Concludes TOA: "All the figures point up the fact that without firstrun movies, pay-tv hasn't much attraction after the novelty wears off."

It's to be noted that sources aligned with Telemeter have said right along that new films ultimately will be only a part of the programming and not the entire bill.

TOA says Elliott-Haynes called 286 housewives over a three-day span last month and from this drew the conclusions

Bob Ryan, Sid Harmon Set 'Octopus,' Railroad Melo

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

"The Octopus," which Robert Rossen was going to produce for 20th-Fox two years ago, has been acquired by Robert Ryan and Stoney Harmon who'll partner with Rossen in producing the film next summer—Harmon being producer, Ryan starring, Rossen writing and directing.

Property, a novel by Frank Norris dealing with turn-of-the-century railroad conflict in California, was first of three-picture deal Rossen and 20th dissolved two years ago. Ryan and Harmon have formed Carolwood Inc. as canopy for their part of the venture. Plan is to seek releasing deal after casting is completed and to make film, in color, on a $2,000,000 budget.

James Woolf's Innings Due on British Boycott; Writs Reach Defendants

London, Nov. 29.

Writs are being issued on behalf of James Woolf against the top brass of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn., arising out of a letter sent by the CEA to Jack L. Warner earlier in the year. Also being named in the action is John Davis, deputy chairman and managing director of the Rank Organization.

Among the recipients of writs are the CEA's immediate past prexy, J. D. Richards, the reigning prez, Alfred Davis, vice-president Sydney K. Lewis, general treasurer Lord Westwood, and general secretary Ellis F. Pinckney.

It was last May when the exhib body wrote to Warner in regard to reports which were then current that James Woolf was negotiating to make a picture at Burbank. The letter recalled the CEA's "recommendation" that members should not book films in which John Woolf or his companies were concerned, following the sale of a package of features to television.

The letter explained that while the recommendation did not extend to brother James, he was a director and shareholder in Romulus Films and the CEA General Council might wish to extend the scope of the resolution to give "full effect to the original intention which was undoubtedly in their minds."

UFA Quitting Pic Distribution; Now 50% Owner of DFH; Joint Slate of 18 Features Yearly

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin, Nov. 29.

Germany's UFA and DFH (Deutsche Film-Hansa), top pic producing and distributing companies here, have been amalgamated. UFA gets 50% of DFH's shares. Its new board of directors has yet to be composed. It's believed that Theo Osterwind, the head of DFH, will become chairman of the new committee. UFA's Helmut Meyer probably will also belong.

UFA quarters at Munich and Duesseldorf may be dissolved. UFA's administrative home will remain in Berlin, while Hamburg will be its provisional seat.

DFH will take over distribution. The 1961-'62 lineup will run around 18 German-language features of which six each are UFA and DFH productions and six independent productions. Films are to be shot in Berlin's UFA studios and at Goettingen, W-Germany, where much DFH product has been produced within late years. Goettingen and DFH will be more closely associated in the future.

UFA, divorced from distribution, will concentrate on production, including newsreels and its theatre chain.

Agfa will remain, within its 15% participation, an associate of UFA.

Theatres Reduce 'Featherbedders'

Minneapolis, Nov. 29.

Three-month-old stagehand strike against the State Theatre, which spread to the Orpheum when Ted Mann purchased that showhouse (and the Pan) from RKO Theatres two weeks ago, has been settled with the main issue decided in favor of Minnesota Amusement (United Paramount) and the Mann Theatres, exhibitors involved in the fracas.

Under terms of the agreement, number of stage employes will be reduced from five to two at the 2,200-seat State, from four to two at the 2,800-seat Orpheum and from two to one at the 1,800-seat Pan. Single stagehand at the 1,000-seat Lyric, MAC's second theatre in downtown Minneapolis, will be retained.

Lengthy disagreement had been termed a "lockout" by the union while exhibitors referred to the point-at-odds as being a matter of "featherbedding." Exhibitors refused to retreat from the position that the work involved at the three showplaces didn't warrant the number of workers previously employed.

KUDOS & DATES TO CASSAVETES 'SHADOWS'

Paris, Nov. 29.

Though still not released here, John Cassavetes' freelance Yank pic "Shadows" received one of the top film critic awards, the Prix Jean-Georges Auriol. Film got the nod for its script, direction, acting and its anti-racist theme. Pic was improvised and made in 16m and then blown up to 35m to go on to win an award at the last Venice Fest and released in London for sock results and outright sale to British Lion for the English speaking marts for $200,000.

Nico Papatakis is handling the pic in France and it is due for a firstrun release soon. Private showings have garnered the pic good work of mouth and even fine critical appraisals. It concerns a white-looking brother and sister with a Negro brother and their lives and tribulations. (Pic was reviewed in VARIETY Aug. 31, '60.)

'The Canadians' Under Eady Plan

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

"The Canadians," Robert Ryan starrer filmed through Robert Lippert's Associated Producers Inc. for 20th-Fox, has become an Eady Plan picture, one of the few Yank pix to be filmed in Canada under the British program. Additionally, it's the first 20th film to be lensed in Canada since "River of No Return" in 1953.

Burt Kennedy wrote and directed the film, involving Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and Herman E. Webber produced it in CinemaScope and color. Webber has planed to London where the film is being edited and scored for a Feb. 15 world preem in three Canadian cities.

Crews which worked on the film were either Canadian or British.

Republic's Bright New Outlook; Carter Quips About Old Nepotism

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Republic Corp.'s net earnings for fiscal year just ended are approximately $1,600,000, more than three times the net profit for fiscal 1959, prexy Victor Carter told L. A. Security Analysts last week. It's the company's largest net in at least 14 years.

The $1,600,000 is equivalent to 80c per common share compared to $484,882 or 24c per share last year. Both figures are computed after provision for taxes and dividend payments to a large block of preferred stock and in both cases there were 2,004,190 shares of common outstanding.

Carter attributed the rosy financial position of the company 25% to its plastics operation, 25% to its tv distribution of Republic Pictures' feature backlog, 15% to rental of the studio facilities and 35% to operations of lab subsidiary, Consolidated Film Industries.

Since revelation early this year of a plan to finance production, Republic has bankrolled two teleseries and four features, Carter said. These productions have outside money guarantors and use both Republic studio space and CFI lab facilities, but they give up no ownership to Republic.

Republic, Carter said, has $2,000,000 worth of contracts with various tv stations for televising of films out of the 850-feature backlog and expects to write another $15,000,000 in contracts over the next

Plead for 'Alamo' In Mexico City

Mexico City, Nov. 29.

Now its the United Artists local distributorship which will attempt to convince an inflexibly opposed Film Bureau head to change his mind about granting an exhibition permit for "The Alamo" in Mexico.

A copy of the film is being imported by United Artists, with this allegedly including cuts of more blatant scenes pinching national pride. The UA office here wants Jorge Ferretis to look over and give a final formal decision in the matter.

Ferretis is the film official who strenuously opposed filming of picture in Mexico on grounds that script was "defamatory" to Mexico. He won his point and producer Wayne switched to a Texas location site.

Scared of Reds, Rail Chief Forced To Help Tremper

Berlin, Nov. 29.

German pic director Will Tremper needed for his currently producing "Escape to Berlin" a railway-train and applied to Federal German railway authorities. Latter, however, didn't like the idea after hearing that "Escape" is an anti-Commie pic. "They told me," Tremper said, "that they couldn't do it because such assistance would annoy the Communist railway authorities in East Germany."

"Those cowards!" shouted Tremper. "The East German DEFA is getting every help it wants from its authorities. But we West Germans encounter difficulties because our authorities are afraid."

Tremper ultimately applied to the Federal Press Chief in Bonn who intervened with Hans-Christoph Seebohm, the Federal Minister for Traffic Affairs, and finally got the train needed.

Mike Curtiz In Italy: 'Hollywood Stars and Unions Caused Runaways'

Assisi, Italy, Nov. 29.

Unions in Hollywood crying the blues because of "runaway" production have only themselves to blame, says director Michael Curtiz who's currently piloting the film "Francis of Assisi" on location here.

"The combination of unions and stars, with their sky-high demands, are driving production abroad," Curtiz maintained. "It's a shame to watch what is happening. There is no reason for it, except that some of us are just too greedy. If people were more reasonable, and recognized that they are destroying the wonderful machine that was—and still is—Hollywood, the Europeans today would not be reaping the rich harvest of American production investment."

Curtiz, vet of some 100 films, says European technicians and crews have by now caught up to the point where they are as efficient and skilled as their Yank colleagues, and possibly more so. "This Italian crew we have on 'Francis of Assisi' works fast, they don't argue about who does what or when and they seem genuinely interested in the job," he said. "They no longer run a poor second to our Hollywood people."

Parenthetically, Curtiz noted that the Italians are willing, and used to, working on Saturdays, which gives the production an extra day each week. That pays off heavily on a short sked.

"We were spoiled in Hollywood," he commented. "We put ourselves into a position where we thought nobody could compete with us. Well, they can compete here. What's more they've been smart enough to equip their studios with the latest and the newest machinery. And the pool of American actors in Europe today is astounding. What is so tragic is that all this didn't have to happen. In fact it shouldn't have happened. But nobody can run a business properly under the conditions that prevail today in Hollywood. Your stars are asking these fantastic salaries and union demands bear no relation whatever to final revenue."

Curtiz, who dates back to the early days on the Coast, obviously yens for some aspects of "the good old days." But, says he, "I think we made a terrible mistake. There were a lot of good things about the 'old' system. Only it didn't grow. It didn't develop. I think the system today is better because it gives opportunities to more people. I think the system today is better because it gives opportunities to more people. I am just heartsick that our unions and stars are managing to kill off Hollywood as we've known it. They didn't have to drive out production."

Director opined that many pictures had to be shot overseas in this wide-screen era, but that many others could just as well be made on the Coast. "That's where the American film industry belongs," he said, "but you can't expect production to stay home if costs abroad are actually half of what they are in Hollywood, particularly in films where large numbers of extras are required."

Curtiz, who is directing "Francis of Assisi" for producer Plato Skouras, emphasized that the picture actually had to be made on location. "We couldn't have gone anywhere else," he said.

"Francis" presents Bradford Dillman, Dolores Hart and Stuart Whitman. It's a Triton-20th Century-Fox production in color and CinemaScope. After completing its Assisi location, the film moves down 275 miles to the Cinecitta Studios in Rome where 18 interior sets have been prepared. The big Crusade battle scenes will be shot near Rome and probably also in Spain.

"This is an extraordinarily difficult film to make," Curtiz opined. "We are creating a picture about a Saint. He was easily the most fascinating figure of his era and he completely dominated the 13th century. Yet, we can not permit the spiritual values to completely obscure the fact that Francis was an extraordinarily romantic and heroic figure. Fortunately, we have an excellent script which emphasizes the great personal story of the founder of the Franciscan order. He was a man of great vision and great courage who also had a wonderful and subtle sense of humor."

With a view to balancing the values in "Francis," Skouras is assembling a whole army of extras in Rome to reenact Francis' extraordinary excursion to Egypt in the early 1200s when he sought to bring an end to the Fifth Crusade by converting the Saracens.

'Show Our People and Customs, Not Our Jungles': Brazil Plea

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

A new frontier for the American filmmaker is about to open in Brazil, according to Ruy Pereira da Silva, director and superintendent of ProCine Productions in Rio de Janeiro. "We're prepared to make it attractive for Hollywood producers to make pictures in Brazil," da Silva explained here, "providing the films say something about Brazil and its people instead of its jungles."

Da Silva noted the new Brazilian government, under President Janio Quadros, has indicated its desire to promote two specific aspects of the Brazilian economy—tourism and cinema. Plans include bank credit for producers, relief in customs regulations to lure outside filmmakers and complete cooperation in the making of motion pictures.

While in Hollywood da Silva set up ties with Persson/Serrano Enterprises, production-personal management firm which will represent him here. Brazilian producer initially is seeking co-production deals with American producers. He's prepared to put up studio facilities, actors and as much as $300,000 in financing, with U. S. partner to provide the above-the-line costs of script, stars and director.

Da Silva noted that some Yank filmmakers have produced pix in Brazil but that the results were far from admirable. "Now we want to make first class films, something the Brazilian industry itself has not done," he explained. Producer declared a film which would cost $3,000,000 to produce in Hollywood can be done in Brazil for $800,000. As representative of the Companhia Cinematografica Vera Cruz Studios in Sao Paulo (he says they are the largest in Latin America), da Silva said the facilities can be rented for $200 per day.

"Inflation, which is hurting Brazil, is a help to foreign producers," da Silva stated. "Some years ago the rate of exchange was 19 cruzeiros to the dollar. Today it is 190 to the dollar."

As part of Brazil's new concentration on film, the state of Guanabara (which encompasses Rio) will organize an international film festival in 1962. Program will involve construction of a 2,000-seat festival hall.

Da Silva is in the United States with Victor Boucas, Guanabara's secretary for tourism. Pair are working together, for it's the government's feeling that good films depicting the real Brazil—pictures that are good enough for the world market—are the best stimulus for tourism.

Brazil has come a long way, da Silva explained. Former President Kubitschek built a new capital—Brazilia—and more roads in four years than were built in all of Brazil's preceding years, da Silva said. "He developed the automobile industry and power, and now the time is ripe for the motion picture industry. French producers are making films there ('Black Orpheus' was a French-Brazilian co-production) and German producers are there. We're interested in Hollywood."

FORDHAM'S FILM STUDY CLUB STRESS: MORALS

Fordham U.'s Communications Arts Department is underway with a film study club designed to throw attention on prominent American and foreign features in terms of Catholic teachings.

Program will comprise an appreciation of a given picture by a professional critic in terms of sociological and moral aspects, screening of the film and then an open forum discussion Cultural and artistic values also will be considered.

These film classes will be available to the general public.

'Butterfield 8' To Posts First; TOA Eyes Precedent

Theatre Owners of America is keeping a watchful eye on the film companies which release pictures to Army and Air Force theatres ahead of commercial houses. Latest "A" to play the service theatres before it reached regular houses was Metro's "Butterfield 8."

Metro, TOA says, indicated that this is the first "A" film it has given the military ahead of commercial theatres since the exhibitor organization made an agreement with the Army Motion Picture

PARIS OFFICE PAIR WALK OUT

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, Nov. 29.

Indie producers, go home.

This is a possible, if unused, rallying slogan of two Columbia Pictures executives who have quit that organization to set up here for themselves. Norbert Auerbach and George Pilzer, who will hereafter be A&P Films International, grumble that life has become very trying for Paris representatives of American companies now mostly composed of, and catering to, "independent" producers.

These indie producers love to travel and to "opinionate." They always know better than the people on the spot how best to handle and exploit their one picture. Pleasing these multiplying operators is very difficult indeed.

Other motives figured in the Auerbach-Pilzer decision to do it themselves. Overseas branches may, in the aggregate, account for 50% of the American distributors' annual gross rentals but compensation and incentive continues, as traditionally, to favor the home office gentry, whose end of the sales totals may be on the slump, but they control the salary and bonus arrangements.

Pair do not object to the independent producers seeking to force attention on their individual releases. That's to be expected. But as they travel more and build up pressure more against the overseas branches of their distribution company they become a nuisance.

"A man working in Paris for an American major today is converted into an office boy. Time and energy is diverted from main issues to shopping chores, hotel reservations, cafe crawling. Today's conditions flood us with visitors, who demand we drop our regular work and service and service them. Much of the service is private, though in the name of business."

Decamping pair aver that there is still too much front office hierarchy pressure at a time when foreign income means the differ-

Clagett Warning: 'Adult' Features Facing Attacks

Presidents and other key officers of the major film companies were told point blank at a New York meeting of the Motion Picture Assn. of America that more and more picture censorship is threatened and their support is needed to stave it off.

Manning (Tim) Clagett, MPAA's governmental rep in Washington, told the meeting, held the past week, that numerous state legislatures have in their respective hoppers bills for either straight blue-penciling of theatrical production or classification in terms of adult or family fitness.

There were no "announcements" as to decisions taken at this session. In fact the meeting itself wasn't even heralded.

But apparently it was almost unanimously recognized by the film industry leaders, according to ad-

Technamation, New Process, Aims To Minimize Physical Movement

Technamation Films Inc., a firm which has developed a new animation process, has been organized by Martin H. Poll, president of N.Y.'s Gold Medal Studios, and Stanley Schwartz, head of Technical Animations Inc. The new corporation is jointly owned by Gold Medal Enterprises, a subsidiary of Gold Medal Studios, and Technical Animations.

Technamation, which is described as applicable for entertainment films, tv commercials, and industrial and training films, is "a new technology directed to the creation of visual motion through a minimum of physical movement." The process is further stated to stem from an extension of the principles of rotary polorization combined with new optical research first investigated by Naval Research.

The company points out that because of the boom in animation and the lack of sufficiently trained technical personnel, the animating companies have been faced with serious production and delivery problems. The new technique is said to solve the personnel scarcity.

The entertainment division of Technimation has completed a 10-minute theatrical short, "The Wonderful World of Willie Doolittle," which will be ready for release on Dec. 15. It's said to be the first of a series of such shorts.

Officers of the new company are Poll, president; Schwartz, exec v.p.; Robert Jacobs, v.p.-secretary-general manager; Howard Weinberger, treasurer, and Martin Leichter, assistant secretary.

MILD PROTESTS VS. 'STARS' IN LONDON

London, Nov. 29.

"I Aim At Stars," Columbia's biopic of rocket scientist Wehrner von Braun, brought out demonstrations on its London first night, similar to those at earlier screenings on the Continent. They were relatively mild here.

As the invited preem audience of diplomats, scientists and film execs and players sat in the circle of the Leicester Square Theatre, leaflets showered from the balcony. Wording was: "The showing of the film makes a mockery of tributes to our fallen dead." Two men then appeared on stage with a 12-foot banner inscribed: "Nazi Braun's V2 rockets killed and maimed 9,000 Londoners." The men were escorted from the cinema by stewards.

SEATTLE'S 2D HARD-TICKET

Music Box with 'Spartacus' Hailed As a Trend

Seattle, Nov. 29.

Will Conner, general manager of Hamrick Theatres, reveals that Music Box will be converted to hard ducat policy, similar to its companion, across the street, the Blue Mouse. After two weeks closure the house will reopen Dec. 23 with Universal's "Spartacus" on reserved seats, similar to Metro's "Ben-Hur," now in 42nd week at the Mouse.

Connor characterizes the "legitimate theatre" pattern as a trend and the answer to the future of the metropolitan exhibitor. The Blue Mouse seats 739 with its Todd-A-O conversion. Music Box will be about the same. An intimate house with beauty in style emphasized is basic, he declared.

About $70,000 will be spent for the conversion.

'Cimarron' Opens Dec. 25

Los Angeles, Nov. 29.

"Cimarron" will have its local opening Christmas Night at the Hollywood Paramount, on the same exclusive, roadshow policy Metro is following for other starts around the country.

World preem of Edmund Grainger production will be Thursday (1) in Oklahoma City.

A number of Hollywood's fresh, young up-and-coming players are given a chance to cut loose and show their thespic wares in Metro's "Where the Boys Are." The more studious collegian may cringe in horror at this adult eye-view of modern undergrads at play, but the Joe Pasternak production is going to pay off big at the boxoffice.

It's a long way from Andy Hardy to "Where the Boys Are" today. "The Boys" of today, according to George Wells' screenplay out of Glendon Swarthout's novel, are generally in irresponsible sexual orbit and it is up to the girls of today to bring them down to earth. The Andy Hardy peck-on-the-cheek and woo-woo are utterly passe—they have been replaced by the illicit bedtime story. These young people are far more mature than their forerunners, but they are also far less savory. The illusion of wholesome youth becomes the latest illusion to be stripped away as filmdom's mushrooming preoccupation with illicit sex continues.

Wells' scenario is set in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, site of an annual spring invasion by Eastervacationing collegians from all over the East and Midwest, most of the males apparently from the Halls of Ivy (or Yalies," as they are precociously referred to once too often here). Most of the girls manage to avoid the primitive passion, but there is an occasional casualty, in this case Yvette Mimieux who winds up walking the white line on a Florida highway after getting in too deep with a pair of these unscrupulous "Yalies" (who weren't "Yalies" after all, she comments from her hospital bed). Following this slice of melodrama, the other girls limp back to dear old nothing-ever-happens-on-campus U. and Miss Mimieux is on her way home to recuperate.

Among the "pairs" on view are Dolores Hart and George Hamilton. They make beautiful music together. Miss Hart's fresh all-American-girl beauty and budding dramatic talent herald a bright future for her in films. Hamilton is a little wooden. It appears to be an attempt at suave, mature masculinity, which is desirable but requires a shade more warmth and animation.

Miss Mimieux, in a demanding role, gets by dramatically. Visually she is a knockout, and has a misty, quality that will spring her parts as soon as the casting department draws a bead on her appeal. Paula Prentiss, making her screen debut, will be a big hit with audiences in this vehicle. Her approach is of the Rosalind Russell-Eve Arden mold, and stamps her as a valuable commodity for Hollywood. Recording star Connie Francis also makes her screen debut. Because of a less appealing role, it is less auspicious, but she does get to sing two selections, and renders them with zip and style. The tunes, by Howard Greenfield and Neil Sedaka, are pleasant but unexciting.

In other key roles Jim Hutton is affable, Barbara Nichols flashy (as a dumb blonde in an exaggerated swimming-tank sequence), Frank Gorshin animated and amusing, and Chill Wills effective. Others favorably on display are Rory Harrity, Ted Berger, John Brennan and Vito Scotti.

Director Henry Levin has whipped up some merry mob scenes, but is responsible for several extremely artificial touches. Among these are a phonily-staged back-to-back love scene between Hamilton and Miss Hart and unrealistic passages in the tank and on the highway. Robert Bronner's camera work, embellished by Metrocolor, is attractive, Fredric Steinkamp's editing generally smooth. Art directors George W. Davis and Preston Ames have made the most of the Fort Lauderdale locale on exteriors and matched the tropical holiday mood with some smart interiors of motels, bars and boats. Pete Rugolo's "dialectic" jazz adds a prominent youthful note. George Stoll's score fills in the musical balance adequately. Producer Joe Pasternak deserves a thank-you for giving all this young talent an opportunity to show off. He'll be all the better for it when the returns are in. This one has smash potential.

Studio and picture's producer both say "it's in Cinemascope with Panavision lenses." Panavision veep Meredith Nicholson says privately that Metro hasn't used C'Scope for a long time but is contractually required to use the name. Joe Pasternak says "Boys" just used Panavision lenses but picture's in C'Scope, as the credits say.

Without getting too technical, C'Scope is same as Panavision 35 except for lenses used. Now, it would seem, if Pan lenses are used, it's Panavision. But studio credits say C'Scope. Tube.

Fortunat
(FRENCH)

Paris, Nov. 29.

Cinedis release of Silver Film-Cinetel-PCM production. Stars Bourvil, Michele Morgan; features Rosy Varte, Teddy Billis, Frederic Robert, Patrick Millow, Gaby Morlay. Written and directed by Alex Joffe. Dialog and screenplay by Joffe, Pierre Corti from novel by Michel Breitman; camera, Pierre Petit; editor, Erick Pust. At Ambassade-Gaumont, Paris. Running time, 130 MINS.

Fortunat	Bourvil
Juliette	Michele Morgan
Mrs. Falk	Rosy Varte
Mr. Falk	Teddy Billis
Maurice	Frederic Robert
Pierre	Patrick Millow
Miss Massillon	Gaby Morlay

Overlong pic serves as a vehicle for stars Bourvil and Michele Morgan as a strangely assorted couple brought together by the trials of the occupation during the last World War. It is well carpentered but conventional with tearjerker aspects. This appears mainly a local item since a surface comedy-drama sans the characterization or feeling for the time to make it much of an arty possibility.

Miss Morgan has to be spirited into the French free zone when her husband, an important resistance man, is arrested. Bourvil gets her across with her two children posing as her husband. He then becomes indispensable and love grows causing problems with the older son. There are side complications of a deported neighbor Jewish family and life under the occupation.

Miss Morgan is svelte but plays in her usual too well made up and studied manner to make her position in this situation acceptable. Bourvil does the peasant character in love with a fragile upper class woman for laughs. Alex Joffe has given this standard treatment without trying to make the relations more revealing. Mosk.

Los Fanfarrones
(The Braggarts)
(MEXICAN)

Mexico City, Nov. 22.

Columbia release of Alfa Films production. Stars Miguel Aceves Mejia, Flor Silvestre, Julio Aldama; features Mauricio Garces, Irma Dorantes, Veronica Loyo, Joaquin Garcia. Directed by Rogelio A. Gonzalez. Screenplay, Alfredo Varela Jr. from original story by Jose Maria Fernandez Unsain; camera, Ezequiel Carrasco; music, Jesus Zarzosa. At Cine Orfeon, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

The tale of three wild and wooly characters who ride into the usual Mexican replica of a dusty cowpoke town, is nicely done here. They fall in love and set things aright in town, to the accompaniment of fisticuffs, gunplay and much singing. Still this simple sort of musical western goes good with the nabe house audiences.

Miguel Aceves Mejia, who covets the throne of the late Jorge Negrete, is in good ranchero voice (strong and loud), aided and abetted by Julio Aldama, who wishes to become a singing cowboy in films. Lesser aid is supplied by Mauricio Garces who is better in straight acting roles. Emil.

The Grass Is Greener

Verbose, only occasionally gratifying comedy about some Anglo-American scuffling in and around England's "stately homes." Powerful cast will make the desirable difference at the b.o.

Hollywood, Nov. 18.

Universal release of Stanley Donen production. Stars Cary Grant, Deborah Kerr, Robert Mitchum, Jean Simmons; with Moray Watson. Directed by Donen. Screenplay, Hugh and Margaret Williams, from their play; camera (Technicolor), Christopher Challis; editor, James Clark; art director, Paul Sheriff; music, Noel Coward; sound, John Cox; assistant director, Roy Stevens. Reviewed at Screen Directors Guild Theatre, Nov. 16, '60. Running time, 105 MINS.

Merry old England is the site of this not-always-so-merry comedy about a romantic clash between a British Earl-ionaire and an American oil-ionaire. It will take all the cumulative magnetism of its appealing cast to bail it out at the boxoffice. But bail it out the cast probably will for Universal and Grandon Productions, latter the company in which the picture's star, Cary Grant, and its producer-director, Stanley Donen, are partnered.

The Hugh and Margaret Williams screenplay, adapted from their London stage hit, takes an outrageous premise, has some sophisticated fun with it for awhile, then slowly evolves into a talky and generally tedious romantic exercise, dropping the semi-satirical stance that brightens up the early going.

At the start, it appears the film will have something novel and interesting to say about the tourist Americans and enterprising British who make up opposite halves of the "stately homes" business in which England's titled gentry rather unwillingly fling open the doors of their historically-significant houses to curious Yanks for a stipend ("Nowadays an English home is not his castle, it's his profit"). Observations on this issue soon peter out, whereupon the story swerves toward some sharp and outspoken comments on the difference between being Anglo and being American.

While this is going on, a romantic triangle is developing among the Earl (Grant) his wife (Deborah Kerr), and a "rip-roaring Grade A romantic" American millionaire (Robert Mitchum) who wanders off-limits into milady's drawing room during the tour and promptly and preposterously falls in love with her, she with him. Balance of the picture is concerned with Grant's efforts to woo his wife back to his side and, except for his own polished performance and Miss Kerr's, has little to offer in the way of light comedy, which appears to be the objective of all concerned.

Grant, as noted, is in good form. It is a tribute to his once-a-generation flair for light comedy that every time he wanders out of eye-and-ear range, the comedy sputters, stammers and stalls. The uninspired screenplay has its staunchest ally in Grant, whose stiffest comedy competition comes not from his three costars but from Moray Watson, who so agreeably plays the butler, a fellow who admits he's too normal, happy and well-adjusted to succeed in his ambition to be a novelist. Exchanges between Grant and Watson are the highlights of the film.

Miss Kerr gives a sturdy performance as the object of this abundance of affectioin. Jean Simmons, decked out in purposely exaggerated makeup and several high-styled gowns by Christian Dior, manages reasonably well in the role of a madcap ex-girl friend of Grant's, a kind of British Zsa-Zsa. Weakest link in the romantic and comedic give-and-take is Mitchum. He's pretty sluggish on the comedy end and thoroughly unconvincing in his relationship with Miss Kerr, never really projecting the implied passion, or even interest.

There are some thoughtful, inventive directorial touches by Donen (significant empty chairs and bedroom doors softly closing), but for the most part he has failed to translate static stage techniques into cinema terms. The picture fairly talks itself to death, and the dialog isn't consistently amusing enough to bring it back to life for more than fleeting moments. There are some compelling views of the English countryside ("The Grass" does seem a lot "Greener" over there), and some striking interiors of the old house, for which art director Paul Sheriff rates a bow. As does director of photography Christopher Challis for the charming way in which his camera regards these scenic attractions. James Clark's editing cannot be faulted, and the incorporation of some of Noel Coward's memorable tunes gives matters a lift, particularly his "Stately Homes of England," lyrics and all.

An outstanding achievement is that of Maurice Binder, whose use of babies at play to match the main title credits is a stroke of originality. In fact, audiences may enjoy the titles as much as the picture proper. Tube.

Faces In The Dark
(BRITISH)

Implausible, but smooth meller, with a chilling climax. Worthwhile booking in any house.

London, Nov. 22.

Rank release of a Welbeck (Jon Pennington-Eady) production. Stars John Gregson, Mai Zetterling, John Ireland, Michael Denison, Tony Wright. Directed by David Eady. Screenplay by Ephraim Kogan, John Tully; camera, Ken Hodges; editor, Oswald Hafenrichter; music, Edwin Astley. At Leicester Square Theatre, London. Running time, 85 MINS.

Richard Hammond	John Gregson
Christiane Hammond	Mai Zetterling
David Merton	Michael Denison
Max	John Ireland
Clem	Tony Wright
Janet	Nanette Newman
French Doctor	Rowland Bartrop
1st Nun Nurse	Colette Bartrop
French Surgeon	John Serret
Miss Hopkins	Valerie Taylor

There are holes in this meller, but it's a smooth, compelling piece of work that sustains interest and leads up to fairly obvious but chilling climax. Despite modest marquee value, this is a useful booking for any house. Right from the outset director David Eady sets out to create atmosphere, with stylized cloud sequences and offbeat music by Edwin Astley. Cast helps to build up suspense through intelligent readings of the occasionally loose screenplay.

John Gregson plays a brusque, ambitious electric light bulb factory owner, who is experimenting on a bigger and better bulb. On the day his wife goes to the factory to tell him that she is leaving him, Gregson is involved in a laboratory accident and is blinded. She sticks with him, but between bouts of self pity and the belief that he may be going mad, Gregson has a rough time.

With a blind man's extra perception he senses that something screwy is going on, but what? He eventually discovers that his wife and his partner, her lover, are planning to kill him, but when and how is an unpleasant dilemma for a blind man. Eventually they show their hand, but in a sock climax it is they, not he, who get their comeuppance.

There are one or two glaring holes in the plot. For instance the wife flies him to France instead of Cornwall and has had his country house almost identically reconstructed. But tiny differences make him suspicious of his fading memory. Could such a plot fool even a blind man? The convenient death of his brother helps the murder plot along, but it is straining credulity to believe that the blind man would have discovered that a temporary cross bearing his name, instead of the brother's, had been stuck in the prepared grave.

However, these are minor points, as are other red herrings, which don't rob the film of its interest. Gregson plays an unlikeable boor, which makes it somewhat difficult to be very sympathetic with his dilemma. However, he gives a very effective performance as a blind man; always a difficult task. Mai Zetterling is cool and attractive as the conniving wife while Michael Denison is an equally cool, suave villain. John Ireland's role as Gregson's brother put little strain on the thesp's capabilities. Tony Wright, as a chauffeur with a past and Nanette Newman as a pert maid, round out the important roles in the cast.

Ken Hodges' lensing is okay while the sets are lush and appropriate. "Faces In Dark" is certainly good for 85 minutes of drama, which might have been helped by a little light and share humor in a rather dogged screenplay.

Of Love And Lust
(SWEDISH)

Hollywood, Nov. 22.

Films Around the World Inc. release of Europa production. With Mai Zetterling, Anita Bjork, Anders Henrikson, Gunnel Brostrom, George Fant, Elsa Carlson, Edvin Adolphson, Gerda Lundequist, Hjordis Petterson, Torsten Lilliecrona. Directed by Henrikson. Screenplay, Katherine and Tage Aurell, adapted from August Strindberg's stories of Married Life; camera, Karl Eric Alberts; music, Herbert Sandberg. Reviewed at Beverly Canon Theatre, Nov. 22, '60. Running time, 109 MINS.

In spite of one basic error of theatrical judgment, "Of Love and Lust" is an exceptional attraction for the more literate U. S. filmgoer and ought to enjoy a fair measure of success in the art theatre circuit. The subtitled Swedish picture consists of two stories by August Strindberg, effectively transplanted into cine-dramatic terms by scenarists Katherine and Tage Aurell and director Anders Henrikson. The error is in the order of arrangement.

Both halves of the bill are concerned with the same basic issue—internal marital conflict arising from sexual attitudes of the mates—one treating it lightly and satirically, the other seriously and dimensionally. As arranged (opposite to the order stated in the title), the comedy follows the tragedy and comes as an anticlimax. Had the lighter half preceded the weighty tale, each would have benefitted, the first from absence of audience anticipation, the second from natural progression of frivolity to deep involvement, whereby an audience is prepared and ready to digest meatier matter after a light appetizer.

The stories, adapted from Strindberg's tales of Married Life, are "On Payment," which delves into the tragic affair of an anti-sexual wife and her sexually-uncertain spouse, and "A Doll's House," not Ibsen's, but Strindberg's spoof of it. There are three outstanding principal performances and a flock of worthy character portrayals. The three that linger in the memory are those of Anita Bjork and Anders Henrikson (who directed the film) in "Payment" and lovely Mai Zetterling as the doll in "Doll's House."

Cinematically, there are flashes of photographic and directorial inspiration but the picture is not always sharp and clear and the subtitles are a source of considerable aggravation. There is, however, no arguing with the film's literary worth. This is an easy, diverting way to tackle Strindberg. Tube.

Mein Kampf
(SWEDISH—DOCUMENTARY)

Paris, Nov. 28.

Rene Thevenet release of Minerva Films production. Old newsreel and war footage compiled and edited by Erwin Leiser; commentary written and spoken by Leon Zitrone. At Avenue, Paris. Running time, 100 MINS.

Tautly edited footage traces the background to the rise of Adolph Hitler and then the horrors brought to the world by his rule and eventual defeat. It is objective and incisive, and has a wealth of rarely seen material firmly salvaged from archives and newsreels by Erwin Leiser. The story is known but here it is given more depth and interest in its visual form. This looms of theatrical interest abroad as well as for school, tv and special showings.

It is even more meaningful as swastikas again break out in hate programs from time to time. Photos, newspaper clips and footage are all tied together to tell this infamous story. The commentary is clear and a good counterpoint, in its sombreness and taste, to the harrowing events it unfolds. It also has weight in giving a rounded picture of the times that helped lead to the rise of Hitler and his nefarious aides as well as their eventual snuffing out.

Editing is expert while the quality of the images is very good. It again shows the power of the film as a document and witness of its time when put together with intelligence, insight and feeling. Some recently found footage of the horrible Warsaw Ghetto gives the film tragic weight.

This is being shown in German theatres and to German youth to make them cognizant of their past and responsibilities.

This direct, harsh picture of Hitler and his cronies shows them in all their eerie tricks and tirades. It would be almost comic if it did not mean the terrible carnage and lowering of mankind's dignity in that these men could lead a nation and a world into chaos. Guilts are there in this thought-provoking pic. Mosk.

GOT LOT OF HOT TOT PLOTS

Yul Brynner's Private Roles

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Yul Brynner is the author and the co-photographer of a pictorialized report on the refugee problem just published by McGraw-Hill at $4.95 under the title "Bring Forth The Children." A careful reading of the text and study of the stills is enough to stab the heart since it lays bare the predicament of those misfortunates who are not eligible for immigration or for assimilation in the economy where they exist in charity shacks on handouts.

Brynner went to a number of camps in Austria and Germany and in the Middle East. He provides a poignant close-up of enough case histories, children and adults alike, to establish the scope of the challenge and the shame of the world's inertia. Tens of thousands of people are left stranded in life because of the tides of politics which washed them out of home and job long ago.

Whether McGraw-Hill was tardy, or the authors, or the auspices the book is published after World Refugee Year, which it was intended to help. But the problem has not disappeared and this volume still serves a useful purpose. Brynner's point is that each camp should be vacated one by one and then demolished so that it will never serve again as a shabby haven in which human dignity shrivels and dies.

While his simple, moving commentary will reflect greatest credit on the actor, his own stills are pretty good, though the work of Inge Morath is more dramatic in composition, idea-projection and documentarianism. It is sufficiently remarkable to have a player of Brynner's stature exhibit this kind of humanitarism, whatever the ego-drive of his personal yen as a sideline pro in photography.

This volume should yield Brynner a special kind of prestige since he apparently went to considerable pains. He realistically renders the bitterness of the dispossessed Arabs, driven from Israel by war, without getting into politics. Indeed he emphasizes his basic instructions were when undertaking the mission: remain neutral. The anguish of the Arabs is no less acute than of the Latvians, Lithuanians and other "stateless" people of Europe who get just enough rations to live on, and no more. It is hope that must be fed, too, wherever the hapless derelicts of war remain.

Coordinating on Film Ads

First Meeting Held in N.Y. — Goal Is for Each Branch of Industry to Assist

Longrange program of coordination and cooperation among film producers, exhibitors and the distributors in matters relating to film advertising is expected to result from the first meeting on the subject by representatives of the Screen Producers Guild, Theatre Owners of America and the ad-pub committee of the Motion Picture Assn. of America.

This initial meeting, held in New York last week, was attended by Arthur Hornblow Jr., for the SPG; Albert Pickus, TOA, Martin Davis, chairman of the MPAA group, and others. The get-together had its genesis in statements by both the producers and the exhib outfit that picture ads were antiquated. Davis, following this, asked that the three-way conference be held.

Decision was made to appoint a committee, probably with three reps from each of the three industry segments, whose job will be to study all facets of film ads. Prominent on this unit's agenda will be an appraisal of credit requirements in ad copy and the means of obtaining exhibitor acceptance of film company departures from the routine in their ads.

The matter of credit requirements has been a thorny one for years. Top promotion men at the distribution outfits say flatly that ad layouts too frequently are just about dominated by the names of producer, stars, director, writers, etc., and as a result effective artwork must be reduced to a minimum. The credit requirements are specified in production contracts.

Formation of the Advertising Coordinating Committee, as it's being called, if nothing else figures to take the film company ad-pub chiefs off the spot as pertaining to intra-trade criticism of ads. New committee means that producers and exhibs are in the act, too, and consequently all the blame can't rightly be placed on the distrib execs.

Sardou From Renault UA's O'Seas Image Man

Roger V. Sardou has been appointed as United Artists' director of advertising, publicity and exploitation for Continental Europe and the Middle East by foreign topper Arnold M. Picker.

Sardou, since 1958 sales promotion and ad director of the Renault Automobile Works in France, had previously been associated with the film industry since 1945. He held pub-ad posts in France for Metro, Selznick, and Columbia.

RETIRE PAULA GOULD

Exits Capitol, N. Y. After 20-Year Tenure

As part of the reorganization and tightening of operations of Loew's Theatres, Paula Gould, publicist for the Capitol Theatre for the past 20 years, has been retired. Her duties will be assumed by Ted Arnow who handles the State and in-town theatres. At the same time, another veteran staffer with 26 years of service was given his notice, but this was subsequently rescinded.

In another aspect of the belt-tightening, three former division managers have been assigned to theatre manager posts. Jim Grady will manage the New Rochelle Theatre. Bernard Zelenko the Loew's 175th St., and Jack Harris the Loew's Orpheum. Salli Levi, another division manager, was retired.

The changes resulted from an efficiency study made by board chairman and chief executive officer Laurence A. Tisch and chairman of the executive committee Preston R. (Bob) Tisch. The Tisch brothers control 23% of the outstanding stock of the company.

Trade Chastened By Death at 45 Of Alex Harrison

Death of Alex Harrison, former 20th-Fox general sales manager, following a heart attack at his ranch in Fallbrook, Cal., last Wednesday (23), came as a shock to his industry friends and former co-workers at 20th where he was a 25-year man. Harrison, 45, had been "taking it easy and enjoying life" ever since his dramatic resignation from the company late last April.

Today (Wed.) 20th prexy Spyros P. Skouras will deliver the eulogy at memorial services for Harrison at the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints (Mormon) in New York. Former exec was buried Saturday (26) at Salt Lake City, where he was born.

Even before becoming 20th's sales manager in 1956, Harrison had played an important part in

NEGLECTING THE YOUNG NO MORE

Although the industry has been under severe attack recently over the so-called adult films, it appears that seldom in recent years has it brought so many children's classics to the screen. At least that's the opinion of Theatre Owners of America, which recently made a survey of the pix available for the moppet trade.

In the first half of 1960, such outstanding children's classics as "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," "Dog of Flanders," and "The Snow Queen" were shown in theatres, TOA notes. In the last six months of this year such favorites as "Pollyanna," "Swiss Family Robinson," "The Three Worlds of Gulliver," "Tess of the Storm Country," "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and "Freckles" will be offered, the exhibitor organization points out. On the 1961 release slate are such films as "Ali Baba," "The Rin Tin Tin Story" and "Grayfriars Bobby."

In giving credit for the lineup, TOA calls attention to the fact that 20th-Fox and Disney have provided three pictures each.

The exhib org says that many other "family-type" pix may be added to the list, including "Toby Tyler," "Sign of Zorro," "Because They're Young," "Please Don't Eat the Daisies," "Visit to a Small Planet," "Conspiracy of Hearts," "The Rookie," "When Comedy Was King," "Masters of the Congo Jungle," "Bobbikins," "Dog's Best Friend," "Boy and the Pirate," "Jungle Cat," "Ten Who Dared," "Stop, Look and Laugh," "My Dog Buddy," "Sword of Sherwood Forest," "The Bellboy," "Cinderella," "Double Trouble" and "The Sundowners."

"Admittedly," concludes TOA, "many current films are controversial, but by the same token, our industry has done a job on family and child fare."

Michel Bernheim Par's Paris Rep

Michel Bernheim, who has an extensive background in theatrical and television production, has been appointed Paris production rep for Paramount. He was signed to the post by Jack Karp, studio head.

Bernheim this year produced the Gene Kelly tv special, authored the book, "Escape from Konigstein," and has held production posts with Enterprise, 20th-Fox, Charles K. Feldman and Universal. He once before was linked with Par as Paris rep for the Perlberg-Seaton unit's "Little Boy Lost."

New Job at Par will have him acquiring story and play properties and handling production details, including the hiring of talent. Similar post had been held by Edouard de Segonzac, who resigned from Par to take a similar job with Metro at what's reputedly to be twice the Par salary.

Philip Barry Jr.'s indie outfit will produce "The Widower," novel by Van Siller, for Columbia Pictures release.

British Players Value Quality, Not Length, of Part—And That's Good; Views of Glass and Seltzer

By HAROLD MYERS

London, Nov. 29.

Motion pictures need to study the successful sales techniques of the big department stores—particularly in terms of attractive window-dressing, according to executive producers George Glass and Walter Seltzer. Currently involved in a pair of Pennebaker productions in Europe for United Artists release, "The Naked Edge" here and "Paris Blues" in Paris, Glass and Seltzer have, by virtue of publicity and exploitation backgrounds, always been noted for their hard-hitting merchandising campaigns.

"In today's market, however," they contend, "the planning has to be totally different. To use the department store analogy, it's no longer enough to provide a hard-sell once they are in the store—you've got to provide the elements necessary to get them to stop at the window and be intrigued enough to come in for a more detailed look at what you have to offer."

The more detailed look, the producers insist, should begin with a new concept on the part of the producer in putting together his entertainment package. "We used to depend on star power to get people into theatres. A few years ago everyone picked up the old cliche about 'the play's the thing.' What's needed is a combination of the two factors, since this is what you have to sell."

The combination, the producers believe, lies in a switch from usual Hollywood casting techniques — a switch that requires the cooperation of performers. What's involved, basically, is a realization that the standard British actor's practice of accepting a part based on the quality of the role rather than the number of lines, can be a key factor in producing a well-rounded entertainment package.

In the case of their current production, Glass and Seltzer are following their theory to the utmost. "The Naked Edge," which is directed by Michael Anderson, stars Gary Cooper and Deborah Kerr. Co-starring assignment have been accepted by Eric Portman and Hermione Gingold, although neither has more than six days work in a 45-day shooting schedule. Similarly, some of Britain's top actors, like Michael Wilding, Ronald Howard, Wilfrid Lawson, Diane Cilento and the Abbey Theatre's Ray McAnally, are in for important, but small roles. In Paris, where Martin Ritt is directing "Paris Blues," Paul Newman, Joanne Woodward and Sidney Poitier star and the featured lineup is headed by Louis Armstrong, Diahann Carroll, Genevieve Page and Serge Reggiani, one of France's top actors.

"This is the window-dressing," Glass and Seltzer explain. "It's not enough any more to have just a good story, just as a few years ago star power wasn't enough. Television is gradually catching up in the story field and we have to be able to offer more than just story to get people out of their houses. Obviously, the way to do it is by adding elements to the story that television couldn't provide—namely, top performers."

Few Stars Count

In general, producers believe, there are now less than a handful of performers who can be counted on for box-office success. There are, however, many whose presence in the cast is an added plus factor —and loading a cast with three or four actors of this calibre to support one or two stars of fairly solid drawing power provides an extra box-office impetus. "Salaries frequently have to be adjusted," Glass and Seltzer comment, "but that is no longer the problem that it used to be. Featured or 'co-starred' actors have come to realize the importance of having vehicles in which to work and they are more willing to work for a reasonable salary on those occasions when they take a smaller part."

Pretty Good at Six

At Allied Artists lunch for the trade press last week to promote "Dondi" (see separate story), most of the talk had to do with matters commercial. Towards the end, however, veep Maurice Goldstein turned to star, six-year-old David Kory, and asked him if he had anything to say.

Kory thought a minute and replied: "Thank you for the lunch." Goldstein asked the 3'9" youngster, suggesting that he might have some funny stories to tell. The kid asked Goldstein if he knew the story about the three eggs. Goldstein said no. Kid replied: "Too bad." Veep also bit when kid wanted to know if he knew the story about the three holes. Answer: "Well. Well. Well."

Goldstein turned to the guests with this loud aside: "Well, I can see that the kid's forte is not comedy!"

MPAA Denies Loss of Morals As Bishops Claim

Washington, Nov. 29.

The Motion Picture Assn. of America today (Tues.) took exception to last week's statement from the Catholic Bishops' Committee to the effect that the increase in "objectionable films" has created "a national crisis" and that the Production Code is "presently ineffective." The Bishops' statement was based on figures in the annual report of the Legion of Decency.

MPAA said it was obviously concerned over the Legion's report because ratings "of such organizations" are useful to both the public and the industry. "And we are most gratified," said MPAA, "that even the stringent standards of the Legion, which include religious precepts as well as moral considerations, find that three of every four Hollywood films in last year were rated acceptable, that two-thirds of the acceptable films were considered suitable for young people and that not one American film was condemned."

Admitting that Hollywood has been in the process of evolution, MPAA said that the evolution has brought about "a broadening in the subject matter of films, a change which was dictated by the American audience." MPAA denied, however, that there has been a change in the moral standards under which the subject matter is treated and "we have to disagree with the Legion's analysis of a number of film's specifically mentioned in the annual report."

The "spirit" of the Code continues to be maintained, MPAA concluded, and Code Administration has met effectively "the increased problems resulting from the change in subject matter."

Douglas Goes Economical

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Kirk Douglas' Bryna Productions, which spent a reported $12,000,000 on "Spartacus," will budget "The Last Hero," to roll in mid-1961, at less than $1,000,000. Douglas will star again.

Edward Lewis, who produced "Spartacus," in current release, will take over same assignment on "Hero," based on Edward Abbey novel, "The Brave Cowboy." Although no distribution deal yet has been set, U will get first crack.

Uptown (Loew) (2,745; $1-$1.25)—"Midnight Lace" (U) (5th wk). Still stronger at $9,000, on word-of-mouth. Last week, $8,000.

HOLIDAY WEEK HYPOS CHI BIZ

L.A. Biz Brighter; 'Alaska' Whopping 30G, 'Seven' Socko 23G, 'Sunday' Wow 12G; 'Blues' Big 27G, 'Lace' Hot 20G

Los Angeles, Nov. 29.

L. A. first-runs are taking on a brilliant hue this week, Thanksgiving holiday weekend giving a big boost to a number of potent new pictures as well as holdovers despite some damp weather. "North To Alaska" looks to hit a whopping $30,000, playing in four theatres. "Magnificent Seven" is in much the same class with a great $23,000 or near in two houses.

"Never On Sunday" also is standout with a boffo $12,000 or over likely at the small 631-seat Fine Arts. Lone weakling among newcomers is "Esther and King," which looms dull $10,000 at the Chinese.

Among regular holdovers, "GI Blues" still is big in second round in four situations with $27,000. "Butterfield 8" is heading for rich $21,000 in fourth Hollywood Paramount stanza.

"Midnight Lace" looms fancy $20,000 or over in three spots for second round. Hardticket pix are all doing smartly.

Estimates for This Week

Fine Arts (FWC) (631; 90-$1.50) —"Never On Sunday" (Lopert). Boff $12,000 or over. Last week, "Man in Cocked Hat" (Breg) (4th wk-6 days), $2,200.

LEWIS WOW 41G, WAYNE BIG 30G

Chicago, Nov. 29.

Thanksgiving holiday momentum looks to give first-runs here something like the rosy tone they've been looking for in the last few weeks. Batch of new product is helping, though unseasonably moderate clime is a hindrance.

"CinderFella," starring Jerry Lewis, is world preeming to smash $41,000, at the Woods while "North To Alaska" is headed for a socko $30,000 for John Wayne starrer at the Roosevelt. State-Lake's "Girl of Night" is luring lively $19,000. on opener.

Surf's "School for Scoundrels" looms stout $7,000. "College Confidential" plus "7 Ways From Sundown" shapes good at Monroe.

Still setting the pace is Chicago's "Butterfield 8," garnering great fourth week coin. "Esther and King" shapes nice in second at Oriental. "Midnight Lace" is still torrid in fifth round at United Artists. "10 Who Dared" eyes a nice third at the Loop. "Hiroshima Mon Amour" is taking a hep fifth week coin at World.

On hard-ticket, "Alamo," is perking some, for nice fifth week at Palace; "Spartacus" is hitting a sock seventh sess on at McVickers; and "Ben-Hur" is racing to torrid takings in 49th at the Todd Theatre.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include U. S. amusement tax.

Holiday Tilts B'way; 'Wong'-Stage Great 170G, 3d; 'Butterfield' Wham $72,000, 2d, 'Alaska' Lively 30G, 2d

The Thanksgiving week holiday crowds and upped scales are brightening the overall Broadway first-run picture this session. Upbeat is being done without a lift from any new product excepting a couple pix at arty theatres which are surprisingly strong. Thanksgiving Day itself was one of the biggest in years at several theatres including the Music Hall.

Still champ at the wickets is "World of Suzie Wong" with stage-show which looks to hit great $170,000 in current (3d) stanza at the Hall, with a fourth week set. "Butterfield 8" pushed to sock $72,000 or close in second round at the Capitol, and starts its third week today (Wed.).

"Esther and King" is heading for a solid $26,000 or close in second session at the Palace, and stays a third. "Girl of Night" looks to reach $22,000, okay for third frame of 10 days at the Criterion. House closes Dec. 5 to prep for hardticket engagement of "Pepe" on Dec. 21.

"North to Alaska" looks to push up to dandy $30,000 in third session at Paramount or ahead of second week. "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" looks sock $18,000 or close in third round at the Forum. "Inherit the Wind" is heading for okay $15,000 or near in seventh week at Astor. "GI Blues" looms sturdy $14,000 in fourth Victoria stanza.

All hard-ticket pix were helped by extra matinees and upped prices for the holiday. "Spartacus" is climbing to a great $36,000 or close in eighth round at the DeMille. "Ben-Hur" should hit a socko $35,000 in current (53d) week at the State. "Alamo" is climbing, too, to a fancy $38,000 or thereabouts in fifth session at the Rivoli.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)— "Inherit Wind" (UA) (8th wk). Seventh week ended last night (Tues.) pushed to okay $15,000 or near after $11,000 for sixth round.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50) —"Butterfield 8" (M-G) (3d wk). Second round finished last night (Tues.) was socko $72,000 or near after $68,000, way below estimate on opener, but best initial week here in many months.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; 90-$2.40) —"Girl of Night" (WB) (3d-final wk). This session finishing Sunday (27) is heading for okay $22,000 in 10 days after $20,000 for second. House shutters Dec. 5 to prepare for launching of "Pepe" (Col) Dec. 21 on hard-ticket engagement.

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; $1.50-$3.50)—"Spartacus" (U) (8th wk). This week ending today (Wed) looks like smash $36,000, aided by holiday weekend and extra shows, after $31,000 for seventh. Stays indef.

Palace (RKO) (1,632; 90-$2)— "Esther and King" (20th) (2d wk). This round winding tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for solid $26,000 or near after $29,000 for opener. Stays.

Forum (Moss) (813; 90-$1.80)— "Let No Man Write Epitaph" (Col) (3d wk). This session ending today (Wed.) looks like smash $18,000 or close after $14,500 for second. Continues until about Dec. 16.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"North to Alaska" (20th) (3d wk). This stanza winding today (Wed.) is heading for big $30,000 after $26,000 for second. Stays.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 90-$2.75)—"World of Suzie Wong" (Par) with stage-show (3d wk). Session ending today day (Wed) looks like great $170,000 after $148,000 for second week. Holds a fourth week with Christmas stageshow and "Sundowners" (WB) opening new likely to be Dec. 8 or Dec. 15.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.50-$3.50) —"Alamo" (UA) (6th wk). Fifth frame finished last night (Tues.) was great $38,000 or near after $30,000 for fourth week. Stays on.

State (Loew) (1,900; $1.50-$3.50) —"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (53d wk). Session winding today (Wed.) looks to push up to wow $35,000 or near, being helped by extra matinees. The 52d week was $29,500, below hopes. Continues indefinitely.

Victoria (City Inv.) (1,003; 50-$2) —"GI Blues" (Par) (4th wk). This round finishing tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like sturdy $14,000 after $12,000 in third week.

First-Run Arties

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$2) —"Picnic on Grass" (Kings) (m.o.) (2d wk). Initial round ended Monday (28) hit fine $7,500.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80) —"Big Deal" (UMPO) (2d wk). First stanza finished Monday (28) was smash $16,000, one of bigger first-weeks here. Pic originally was titled "Big Deal on Madonna Street."

Embassy (Guild Enterprises) (500; 90-$1.75)—"Come Dance With Me" (Kings) (4th wk). Third round finished Sunday (27) was smooth $8,000 after $7,000 in second week. House closes Dec. 19 for big facelift outlay ahead of opening of "Swiss Family Robinson" (BV) Dec. 23.

Beekman (R&B) (590; $1.20-$1.75) —"Virgin Spring" (Janus) (3d wk). First holdover week completed Sunday (27) was big $16,500 after $17,000, new record for a foreign pic here.

Fifth Ave. Cinema (R&B) (250; $1.25-$1.60)—"World of Apu" (Harrison) (9th wk). Eighth week ended Monday (28) was big $4,100 after $3,500 for seventh week.

Normandie (T-L) (592; $1.25-$1.80)—"Gigi" (M-G) (reissue) (2d wk). This round winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) is pushing up to sock $8,000 after $7,500 for initial week.

'Inherit' Fat 18G, Philly; 'Sun.' 14G

Philadelphia, Nov. 29.

Holiday weekend and out-of-town visitors here for Army-Navy annual grid classic and pro-Giants-Eagles football clash all are helping to make for a sharp biz uptake. Bulk of strength is coming from big holdovers. "Inherit the Wind" looks nice at the Fox albeit not as strong as had been hoped for. "Never on Sunday," playing 500-seat Trans-Lux, is garnering a mighty take. Many hard-ticketers climbed above last week's totals, "Spartacus" spurting to a wow total at Goldman in fourth round.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (536; 99-$1.80)— "Midnight Lace" (U) (5th wk). Fat $10,500. Last week, $10,000.

Boyd (SW) (1,562; $1.40-$2.75)— "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (52d wk). Strong $14,500. Last week, $12,000.

Fox (Milgram) (2,200; 99-$1.80) —"Inherit Wind" (UA). Nice $18,000 or near. Last week, "Magnificent Seven" (UA) (3d wk), $11,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,200; $2-$2.75)—"Spartacus" (U) (4th wk). Wow $19,000. Last week, $15,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; $2-$2.75)—"Alamo" (UA) (5th wk). Pushed to hotsy $14,000. Last week, $9,000.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,500; 99-$1.80)—"Butterfield 8" (M-G) (3d wk). Wow $20,500. Last week, $18,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,500; 99-$1.80)— "North to Alaska" (20th) (3d wk). Slow $7,500. Last week, $9,000.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 99-$1.80)— "Let No Man Write Epitaph" (Col) (2d wk). Fast $13,000. Last week, $17,000.

'Cleopatra' Placed in 'Suspense' By 20th Until Liz Taylor Recovers

London, Nov. 29.

As Elizabeth Taylor left London last Friday (25) for Paris enroute to Los Angeles and Palm Springs, 20th-Fox put the multi-million dollar production of "Cleopatra" into suspense yesterday (Mon.). Protective notices to some 250 technicians had been issued a week before, some of which became operative last Friday (25) and the balance coming Friday (2).

It is understood that Miss Taylor's departure was with the full concurrence of the insurance companies, even though the details of claim between the underwriters and 20th-Fox were not resolved when Spyros P. Skouras checked out of London last Wednesday (23). The general view is that "Cleopatra" will resume production when Miss Taylor returns to London, but she won't be back until the medicos give the greenlight.

Meantime, 20th-Fox has invoked the force majeur clause against the principal players who, apart from Miss Taylor, include Peter Finch and Stephen Boyd in addition to producer and director Walter Wanger and Rouben Mamoulian.

There is hope that filming may resume within the next three to four weeks, but for the time being, a large slice of London's studio space has been cornered by 20th-Fox for the production. Very nearly the whole of Pinewood and a big piece of Shepperton and the Metro British studios is filled with "Cleopatra" sets which, at a modest estimate, have cost more than $2,500,000 to build.

According to unconfirmed reports, the insurance premiums have cost around $400,000, but the underwriters stand to lose something like $5,000,000. It has been suggested, though not confirmed, that the insurance companies may be offered a piece of the pic by 20th-Fox to give them a reasonable chance to recoup. Similar action was taken when Tyrone Power died during the filming of "Solomon and Sheba" in Madrid.

Naples Finally Honors Caruso

Naples, Nov. 22.

After a gap of 40 years since his death, the greatest singer of all times has finally been honored by his native town in which following some stinging criticism of a youthful performance, he swore he would never sing again (he never did).

A tablet to Enrico Caruso has currently been walled on the Neapolitan house in which the singer was born in 1873, and one of the streets in new Naples has been named after him. The cold war between Caruso and his city has ended.

Whatever he might have felt about Naples, Caruso returned there when at 48, he knew he was dying. On the eve of his death he even auditioned a young aspiring tenor. After listening a while, he burst out "No, this way," and started singing the piece. As he did so, his gaze wandered out over the bay toward Capri floating on the horizon, and the feeble notes died away. Only the auditioning student and a few neighbors on the high balconies near his room had heard Caruso singing in Naples once again—and for the last time . . .

Signoret Pic to 20th-Fox

20th-Fox has taken the French pic, "Les Mauvais Coups" (The Hard Knocks), for distribution in France, North Africa, the Near East, South America and several European countries, plus a first call for the U.S. This has insured proper backing for this pic which could lose needed Film Aid, sometimes as much as one third of the budget, due to the presence in the film of star Simone Signoret who signed the petition condoning insubordination in French troops in Algeria.

Technically, all signers appearing in pix lose Aid for these films but it has not been made completely official yet.

Germany's 'Nabucco'

Hamburg, Nov. 22.

"Nabucco" opened this season at the Metropolitan Opera in Manhattan. So obscure was this 100-year old Verdi work that N.Y. critics had to do plenty of research to appear knowing.

Now comes the contrast with Germany, where state and local subsidy puts opera houses in the smallest burgs: at least 10 houses here this season include "Nabucco" in repertory. In one town, Krefeld, pop 200,000, two American singers, mezzo Helen Raab and soprano Emelina de Vito were in the cast.

Jewish Culture Show Gets Raves

Recklinghausen, Nov. 22.

The exhibition of Manifestations of Jewish Art and Culture, which got underway here after Nov. 3, has been getting rave reviews and big breaks in West German newspapers. As part of West Germany's efforts to fight the alleged neo-Nazism, and to prevent any recurrence of the Nazi smear campaign that swept across the land just about a year ago, the West Germans have concentrated on a study of the Nazi era in school and on the West German television net. They have set up exchange programs to send young German students to Israel while bringing Israeli students to Germany.

And an important part of the project is this excellent show titled, "Synagoga," defined as a show of Jewish culture and art. Opened by Federal president Dr. Heinrich Luebke, the show is scheduled to last until Jan. 15. It is produced by the city of Recklinghausen and the Judaicum Delitzschinum of Muenster University, with the assistance of the state of Israel.

Covering the period from the time of the Patriarchs down to the present, it offers over 100 contributions from Israel and the U.S. European lands have added about 700 valuable objects.

Wife of Polish Premier Primarily an Actress; Her 'Carlos' a Sellout

Warsaw, Nov. 29.

Three times a week the baroque-style Polski-Theatre of Warsaw registers SRO for its biggest hit of the year: "Don Carlos" by Schiller and among the actors the brilliantly shining star is Nina Andrycz, wife of the Premier of Poland, Cyrankiewicz, who as Elisabeth of Valois gives one of the best interpretations in her fairly long theatrical career. Nina Andrycz is probably one of the most interesting female figures in the Communist world.

Notwithstanding her duties as "first lady" she does not hesitate to sacrifice protocol when they interfere with her job as an actress. She is rarely seen at embassy, government or party receptions. Called "The Premierowa" by the Polish people she lives in an apartment of three rooms with bath and servant quarters. In her sitting room, whose windows open on the courtyard of the British Embassy, she receives her friends—mostly theatre people, writers and artists.

Kirk Douglas Moves 'Mercy' Pic to Vienna

Vienna, Nov. 22.

Kirk Douglas moved into the Wien Film Studios here to do the courthouse scenes of his latest film "City Without Mercy," described as a story about rape.

Kirk had shot outdoor scenes in Munich, but suddenly decided to come to Vienna. One of the reasons given was that the German studios are overloaded with the companies. With him come his stars Ingrid van Bergen, Barbara Ruetting and Christine Kaufmann. Gottfried Reinhardt is directing.

State Legits Add More Classics, Tragedies To '61 Lineup in France

Paris, Nov. 22.

In accordance with Minister of Culture Andre Malraux's edict of last year, the state subsidized legiters are beginning to add more classics and tragedies to their repertoires. The Odeon-Theatre De France, run by Jean-Louis Barrault, and the Comedie-Francaise this week unveiled Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar," adapted by Yves Bonnefoy, and Victor Hugo's "Ruy Blas," respectively. Both look in for successful runs as new additions to these house programs, but both got split reviews.

It is the spectacle in each of these plays that should make them okay draws. "Caesar" is unevenly acted. Though its first part is sustained by the fine narrative, the second portion loses the thread and impact of this tragedy. Acting was also felt wanting except for Pierre Vaneck's Marc Anthony.

"Ruy Blas," Hugo's 19th Century romantic meller about a lackey of 17th Century Spain who falls in love with the queen and manages to reach and love her, is given elegant staging and flamboyant acting. Makes this a visually stimulating show which should get solid biz and have this a hit addition to the Comedie-Francaise lineup. Raymond Rouleau directed.

Marie Bell brings her successful mountings of Racine's ancient tragedies "Phedre" and "Berenice" back to the Theatre Gymnase. These did well last year and receive a governmental handout. "Phedre" has also been done at the Vieux-Colombier with Silvia Montfort in a more offbeat manner.

Crix were not in accord and this version of a woman who fell in love with her stepson is in for a short stay. It also gets a subsidy. This is in line with the conservation of classics. The municipal Chatelet brought back the perennial "White Horse Inn" operetta. As usual, it will do well.

W. Berlin Exhibs Urge Tax Slash

Berlin, Nov. 22.

The amusement tax (20%) has been a special thorn in the eye of local exhibitors for many years. Now, the Verband Berliner Filmtheatre, an association of West Berlin's cinema owners, is now making another attempt to win a reduction of this tax. New carefully worked out suggestions as to tax relief have been submitted to the West Berlin Senate for approval. Exhibs have been told these will be studied.

Oswald Camman, chairman of the association, left no doubt that tax relief is of vital importance for the entire film trade. He called the present tax law antiquated and unjust in view of the fact that the (state-owned) television in Germany, the cinema's biggest competitor, hasn't to worry about any tax.

A West Berlin cinema is normally in okay shape if about 50% to 60% of its seating capacity is used. But now, this percentage only comes up to about 35% on the average, Camman reported. The cinemas in this city's suburbs are especially hard hit. In particular, they feel the inroads of tele. People in these areas stay at home more and tune in on tv often. Downtown houses fare best.

The unhealthy local cinema situation is also evidenced by the fact that 40 houses are currently up for sale, with few buyers. Three cinemas recently closed their doors.

Attendance figures are constantly on the decline. However, the dip is not as severe as in some West German cities. This is explained by West Berlin's position as an isolated city. West Germans have the opportunity to spend lengthy weekends outside their hometowns, but West Berliners are forced to stay within their homegrounds.

Camman said that also the production would greatly benefit from a reduction of the amusement tax. Right now, the producers must keep in mind to make films fast, but heavy and complicated tax calculations are responsible for the considerable delay in getting their money back.

Warsaw Symph Cancels

Warsaw, Nov. 22.

An apparent commitment between the American impresario, Sol Hurok, and the government cultural ministry to send the Warsaw Symphony on a tour of the United States seems cancelled. Hurok previously acted as manager of a company of folk dances from here.

Story heard here is that a quarrel developed over the choice of soloist, Artur Rubinstein.

Pallos Signs For 3 Anglo-U.S. Pix

London, Nov. 22.

Steven Pallos is back in London from a New York quickie, having completed arrangements for three Anglo-U.S. coproductions. Two will be in association with Max Rosenberg and his associate, Milton Sibotsky, and the third with Continental.

First to get underway will be "Men Who Laugh," based on a Victor Hugo story, which will be made in Technicolor. Preparatory work has already started and casting arrangements will be made immediately. That will be for Rosenberg and Sibotsky.

The second pic with them will be based on J. B. Priestley's "City Beneath the Earth," which will go into production next year.

Also slated for filming in 1961 is "Mata Hari," which Pallos will make in partnersrip with Continental. That will be in Techicolor and Edmund Greville has been signed to direct.

Herbert Graf at Milan As Maria Callas' Choice Of 'Polliuto' Prevails

Milan, Nov. 29.

Herbert Graf, long with New York's Metropolitan Opera and now just starting a five-year contract with the Zurich Opera as artistic director, will stage "Polliuto," a completely unknown work of Donizetti at La Scala for its opening night, Dec. 7.

Behind this fact lies the iron hand of Maria Callas, she having chosen the totally obscure opera for her return to La Scala.

Graf's connection relates to the difficulties of Luchino Visconti whose staging of "Arialda" by Giovanni Testori was blocked by censorship. In a rage against his countrymen, Visconti made a radical gesture of protest: refusing to stage "Polliuto."

The town of Modeno, which has become something of an Italian New Haven for breaking in new works had both "Anna of the Miracles" and "Arialda" first presented there. "Anna" has since been widely acclaimed throughout the peninsula, with Anna Proclemer and Ottavio Picola in the Anne Bancroft-Patty Duke roles of the American original.

Pathe Pictorial Goes To Par in Aussie Mkt.

Sydney, Nov. 22.

Paramount will distribute the Pathe Pictorial reel here coast to coast following a deal recently set in London.

The Pictorial, a top-ranker in patron popularity here, was formerly distributed by Metro. No reason was given by Metro officials for dropping distribution some little time ago.

Yank Talent in Vienna

Vienna, Nov. 22.

U. S. tenor James MacCracken's debut at the Vienna Statoper was well received by audience and critics. There are two other Americans here. Ronald Dutro of Oakland sang in the Volksopera in "La Traviata" and will rate more parts shortly, while Donald Woods of Detroit has been inked for one year by the Volksopera.

Other Americans around at present are violinist Charles Joseph, who is also concertmaster of the Hamburg Bach Society and Ania Dorfman (Russian-born but U. S. citizen) giving piano concerts in Musikverein and on radio.

Ireland Exhibs Seeking Tax Cut

Dublin, Nov. 22.

The opening of an Irish television service next year means a hard fight for cinema owners, James Walls, prexy of the Theatre and Cinema Assn. of Ireland, told exhibitors and trade union officials here recently. He added it was hoped that the government would appreciate the problems and make it possible for cinemas to meet and fight tele on equal terms by abolishing the Entertainment Tax duty.

The tax on admissions was cut by an average of about 20% a few months ago, and Walls was opening campaign for further revision in next Budget, due in May, 1961, six months ahead of inauguration of Radio Eireans TV. service.

Walls also commented that the training course for cinema projectionists, who are released for part-time classes at the College of Technology, is to be extended from three to four years, with a higher educational standard for entry. This has been done at the request of the Theatre and Cinema Workers' Union to provide basic knowledge to enable new entrants to shift into tv in the event of cinema closures.

AMERICAN BALLET'S 47 U.S. TOURING DATES

Lucia Chase's American Ballet Theatre has returned from its five-month tour of Western Europe and Soviet Russia. The troupe will do a 15-minute stint Dec. 23 for Bell Telephone's Christmas telecast over NBC.

The company takes to the American provinces Jan. 15 at Newark. Some 47 cities are dated. A special publicity campaign via Swofford & Ware, of N.Y., will exploit the Soviet invasion, European reviews, etc. Hopefully forgotten is the oops-sorry opening of the troupe last spring at the Metropolitan Opera House, a misstep which friends of the troupe considered notably over-reviewed and over-editorialized.

Moscow Says—'Okay'

Moscow, Nov. 22.

On the overall balance, the American Ballet Theatre did quite well here in Russia. While not all the ballet items were to the local taste, the technique and skills of the leading dancers had favorable comment.

The political side of the tour should be separately considered. The Russians have carefully kept talent protected from the rise and fall of the propaganda barometer and it's no doubt significant that Nikita Khrushchev attended and presided at a final supper honoring the American dancers.

Among Russians taking a peep were Frol Kozlov, member of the presidium of the Communist party and Ekaterina Furtzeva, Culture Minister of the USSR. Their presence in the capacity Sports Palace at Moscow's Luzhniki emphasized that the Americans had scored, Pravda described the troupe's performances as "quite a success."

Michael Gabovich, people's artist, expressed a very high opinion. He was particularly impressed with Erik Bruhn's masculine stature, "brilliant mastery," and last but not least "his noble, courageous and elegant airs." Royes Fernandez is referred to as "charming," and their "friends" as "talented." The only wish of Moscow's ballet buffs is that those dancers "could diversify the arsenal of their movements somewhat."

Audiences were very keen on Maria Tallchief and Lupe Serrano whose "Southern temperament is fiery and captivating." The critics here suggest that those American ballerinas, as well as the others seen here, should rely more on their arms," which is bound to perfect their work on the whole."

Judy Gottlieb to U.S.

Tel Aviv, Nov. 22.

Judy Gottlieb, local head of the Israel-America Culture Foundation, has left here for a three-month visit to the U.S. She will combine a vacation with confabs with the New York home office.

Her functions in Israel is to arrange foreign tours for Israeli artists, actors, etc.

GAUCHO LIBRE, SHOW BIZ PERKS

Inside Stuff—International

Hariette Stewart Cowan, wife of a U. S. Army medico performed recently at the Salle Gaveau in Paris. Lyric soprano from Portland and San Francisco had some pro experience in States but boned up with French coaches for participation in an international contest last May limited to French songs, which resulted in the Paris contest. Her husband has been on overseas assignment for five years.

Statistics compiled by Filmblaetter, W. Berlin trade paper, covering playdate results in 16 W. Berlin key cities within 11 months (Sept. 1959, to July 31, 1960) of the 1959-'60 season reveal that the Austrian film, "And Always Sing the Forests," a DFH release, was the most screened pic of that period. The first part of German film, "Buddenbrooks" (Europa), reached the second spot, while Universal's "Pillow Talk" became third most screened feature.

Runnersup were Germany's remake of "Grand Hotel" (Gloria), the French Jean Gabin starrer, "Le Clochard" (Bavaria), United Artists, "Some Like It Hot," the second part of "Buddenbrooks" (Gloria), and three other German vehicles, "Judge of the Young" (UFA), "Mrs. Warren's Trade" (Europe) and "Freddy Under Foreign Stars" (Constantin).

Mexico Clamps Ceiling on Flood Of Cuban Talent

Mexico City, Nov. 29.

The Mexican Department of State has placed a ceiling on the number of visas granted Cuban entertainers. In recent months there has been a tremendous exodus of Cuban performers from their native country and Mexico has been absorbing far too great a share.

The National Assn. of Actors reportedly told the State Dept. that Cubans are displacing Mexicans in vaude, night clubs, radio and television work and in similar fields.

A check by Mexico's Embassy in Cuba showed that a new flood of entertainers seeks work visas to enter Mexico. The limit order was then instituted and those playing here will not be able to renew visas for indefinite periods.

A State Dept. spokesman said the official ruling is not an "arbitrary" attempt to limit entry of foreign performers. But it has been deemed necessary to contain the movement in the interests of national entertainers.

Set Israel Editions Of 'Kate,' 'Irma,' 'Boy Friend'; Eye 'West Side' B'way Co.

Tel Aviv, Nov. 22.

Three musicals of different national origin, one American, another French and the third British, are planned for production here this season. The U. S. entry is "Kiss Me, Kate," in a Hebrew adaptation by Aharon Ashman, poet and author of Biblical dramas. It's scheduled for production by the Israel National Opera as its first venture in the modern musical field.

The French import is "Irma La Douce," which was adapted for London and is now being presented in New York. The Israeli rights have been acquired by the Habimah Theatre. The British entry is "The Boy Friend," scheduled for presentation by the Z.O.A. House, an amateur group foreign diplomatic service personnel.

There's also talk of importing the American "West Side Story" company, now appearing on Broadway for an Israeli tour.

ACT Films to Produce Wesker's Play, 'Kitchen'

London, Nov. 22.

ACT Films, the production company formed some years ago by the technicians' union, is to film Arnold Wesker's play, "The Kitchen," starting at Shepperton next year. The pic has been scripted by Sidney Cole, who also will produce. James Hill has been named director.

Wesker came into national prominence earlier in the year when his trilogy of plays, "Chicken Soup With Barley," "Roots" and "I'm Talking About Jerusalem," was staged at the Royal Court Theatre. No distribution deal has yet been made by ACT Films for "Kitchen."

Scots Feel the Pinch

Inverness, Nov. 29.

Cuts are being made on the rural cinema circuit at ten centers in the Scot Highlands, and will be effective from Jan. 1.

One island, Mull, will be without film entertainment completely, while glen and mountain villages will have less frequent shows.

Service is operated by the Highlands and Islands Film Guild in 182 locations in Scotland.

Television is not entirely to blame, according to Hugh Ross, Guild secretary, although it does have a big bearing on the position.

"But even without the advent of television," he told VARIETY, "there would have been some minor re-organization. The Guild is all the time facing rising costs, with audiences which just cannot increase in numbers."

U.S. Shortage Vs. More 'Open' Japan

Tokyo, Nov. 29.

While the Finance Ministry mulls liberalization of foreign film imports quotas, perhaps removing the lids altogether, major distributors of American product here are viewing developments with mixed feelings.

While some seek an easing of the quota system, others, mindful of Hollywood's reduced production, fear indie importers would flood the market with pickup product while they are restricted to handling only films to which their companies contributed a major financing share.

Europe's Pix Production Council in Paris Meet

Paris, Nov. 22.

The Council of European Film Production, composed of reps from film producer outfits from all the Common Mart countries (France, Italy, West Germany, Benelux), met here this week. All agreed that the first measure was to create an equitable working set-up for facilitating coproductions between these countries.

This was handed to a committee charged with working out all these problems for a future confab. Main aspects of this were free interchange of film materials, players, technicians and creators and a means of balancing coproductions as well as freer exchanges of films and fiscal matters.

BRITAIN'S LEIPZIG WIN

London, Nov. 29.

British collared the main prize for the best national program at the third Leipzig shorts and documentary festival with "Bow Bells" (directed by Anthony Simmons), "We Are the Lambeth Boys" (Karel Reisz) and "Miners Gala Day" (Derrick Knight).

Main prize for the best film was shared by "Musicians" (Poland) and "The Peaceful Atom" (France).

POST-PERON ERA CUES REBIRTH

By NID EMBER

Buenos Aires, Nov. 22.

This year's surging television industry, partly fostered by Gore Mestre, a refugee from another kind of dictator, Fidel Castro of Cuba, is but one notable aspect of what has been happening in Argentina. The world has perhaps too little remarked what the removal of dictatorship has done to Argentina. The country's long "cringe" under the mailed fist of Juan Peron and the cupped fingers of his shakedown cronies is over. While many problems remain, the inrush of fresh ideas, new money, ambitious plans is everywhere evident. Show business is well up on the list of those benefitted.

Extension of television into the Argentine hinterlands is part of the new government's desire to make life easier for the people and to bring them within the cultural family more intimately. Video goes alongside plans to upgrade farming, mining and oil.

In 1961 the Government hopes to make Argentina a show place of what Free Enterprise can achieve, from which other Latin-American countries can take encouragement and example. Provided politicos, armed services and labor leaders sit back and let Economy Minister Alvaro Alsogaray and his Economic Team push through this objective, this Re-Birth of a Nation should go from stabilization to Development, with all fields of Entertainment striding forward with everything else.

Popular it is not, but the present Government is the first go-ahead, get-things-done Government the country has had since 1920. The gap between left a tremendous void (plus holes in the Treasury), and 40 years' work must now be done in a couple of years, but at last the effort is being made and by April-May, when the 1961 show business season opens, the fruit should be harvested. If, despite much general economic depression, show business has flourished as it did in 1960, the following 12 months should go even better.

Already impresarios are making big plans. Probable bookings include Frank Sinatra, Maria Callas, the Helen Hayes legit tour, Tamara Toumaneva, Rudolf Firkusny, Alberto Lissy, Byron Janis and Frank Ratzer will concertise. Jean Cocteau's "La Voix Humaine" will probably have its world preem at the Colon, with Poulenc music, and with an imported cast. The Third International Film Festival at Mar del Plata is due in January, the General San Martin and Coliseo Theatres will really open, and the network of stations will gradually spread over the country.

Meanwhile newspapers and magazines have never before enor had such volumes of advertisjoyed such freedom of expression, ing. Many magazines were added to their number. Even the formal, dignified old dailies, "La Nacion" and "La Prenza" have brightened their formats and added many columns and features connected with show business.

Argentines is reading voraciously and eclectically. Best-selling foreign authors: John Steinbeck, Vicki Baum, Salvador de Madariaga and A. J. Cronin, also Remarque, Becquer. Popular are Lawrence Durrell's "Justine," Giuseppe Tomasi di Lampeduza's "Black Cat," "Leon Uris "Exodus." Tennessee Williams, "Orpheus Descending" and Morris West's "Devil's Advocate," also Aldous Huxley's "New World Revisited."

Eating habits are undergoing radical transformation, as old, formal restaurants and cafes were wiped out by changing customs (and demands of Waiters' Unions).

Film theatres have, of course, been crimped by the rise of television in Greater Buenos Aires, Cordoba City and sea-bound Mar del Plata. But the big ones do big business, per "Ben Hur," "La

Mex Govt. Grab of Theatre Operating Chain Via $16,000,000 Deal Seen As Loose Sort of Film Biz Nationalizing

Mexico City, Nov. 29.

News confirming the sale of Manuel Espinosa Iglesias' Theatre Operating Co. chain to the government came as a rude shock to Mexican film circles, despite the reports which have been around for months about just such an action. While the transaction has gone through, official sources are reluctant to talk about the federal move in on the exhibition front. Reason for this may be that government is also quietly readying to absorb Gabriel Alarcon's Gold Chain.

But even with buying of the Theatre Operating Company, the government has achieved a loose sort of nationalization of the film industry. It now has distribution sewn up via the three major distributorshps (Cimex, Peliculas Nacionales and Peliculas Mexicanas), the Churubusco Studios (with a possible buying up of the lone independent San Angel Inn Studios also reported), a production unit via Churubusco Films and now an exhibition chain.

The government is reported to have paid between $13,200,000 to $16,000,000 for a 20-year lease of the 133 houses making up the Theatre Operating Co. chain. Industry circles have long labeled Iglesias as front man for exhibitor magnate William Jenkins, who ostentatiously retired from Mexican exhibition activity many years back.

Incidentally, government paid for the chain lease in bonds with Nacional Financiera, semi-official credit institution an intermediary. Titles of the chain were turned over to the National Urban Mortgage and Public Works Bank, another official institution.

Film Bureau May Run Chain

Actually the Film Bureau may run the chain now, with the names of Cesar Santos Galindo, current head of the Churubusco Studios, and Eduardo Garduno mentioned as heads of the new setup. Garduno, who developed the so-called "Garduno Plan" for survival of the Mexican film industry some years back when he headed the Film Bank, has denied he knows anything about this. He is head of the recently nationalized Mexican Light & Power Co. Galindo remains mum.

While deal involved only 133 theatres, the circuit is larger through loose arrangements with independents allied with it for the purpose of obtaining national and foreign films. Actual number controlled is a secret, but is said to include about 500 houses. The Alarcon chain has almost an equal number of houses sewn up, with this totaling more than half of the approximate 1,500 full-time cinemas in the republic (official dependencies peg number at about 2,400 but the balance are houses not on regular showing schedules, roadshow spots, church, school and social organization halls, etc.).

Now the big $64 question is whether the government purchase is a move to break up the monopoly that has traditionally existed in Mexican exhibition or whether a new, official form of monopoly will be instituted.

Hollywood Worried

That Hollywood is worried about this latest turn of events is evidenced by the fact that Eric Johnston, flying down ostensibly to lend his presence to the Third World Review of Film Festivals, has a heavy schedule of meetings with such top dignitaries as Gabriel Alarcon, head of the Gold Chain; Raul Salinas Lozano, Secretary of Industry and Commerce; Jorge Ferretis, of the Film Bureau, Federico Heuer, of the Film Bank, and other industry functionaries.

Speculation centers around whether the federal chain will inaugurate a policy of Mexican films only, or book foreign product, too. Nobody knows the answers to this except high officials involved, and they are not talking.

Italo 'Oakie' Drama

Venice, Nov. 22.

Italy shares with the United States a number of social problems, one of them the migration of poor, illiterate workers from South to North. This theme, the Italian version of American Oakies has now been treated on the stage in a new play by a young dramatist, Carlo Marcello Reitman. His "The Great Hope" (La Grande Speranza) deals with the resentment of the established elements in the well-to-do Lombardy region around Milan against laborers from Calabria and Sicily.

The plot is somewhat violent but realistically pictures the dreadful loneliness of these people, unwanted by their prosperous fellow-Italians.

Avant Garde Fest For Paris in Dec.

Paris, Nov. 22.

That artsy-craftsy aspect of show biz and the arts, which in many cases has become accepted regular, offbeat and even commercial fare, will finally get its due via the avant garde fest running here till Dec. 15. This will display the innovations in legit, films, art, culture and music. Called "Sets For an Imaginary Play," it is unfolding at the Palais De Glace and will branch out into the performing arts also. It is nationally underwritten.

Programs will consist of a mounting of Rabindranath Tagore's Indian play "Chitra," a deeply philosophical poetic opus, at UNESCO, films of animated forms of Werner, Graff, Hans Richter and others will unfold at the Museum of Decorative Arts. On Dec. 23, experimental films by Arcady, Yank Ian Hugo and Lapoujade will be shown at the Renelagh film theatre, with a series of poetry readings of Ezra Pound, Arp, Bali, Isou and Heideck around town.

The Experimental Theatre will get its due as well as music. This paying homage to the offbeat followers of the arts and show biz will wind with a panto show by Maximilien Decroux at the Theatre Alliance Francaise plus an outdoor playhouse on the Esplanade Des Invalides where several plays will be done using mobile scenery that will move for each entry.

B. BRECHT PLAYS DUE FOR FRENCH RATINGS

Paris, Nov. 22.

The theatrical works of the late East German Communist writer Bertolt Brecht, who, because of Nazism, spent his years of exile in the U.S., will be an integral part of the repertoires of the various nationalized legit theatres here this season and next. Theatre National Populaire, under Jean Vilar, mounted Brecht's "The Resistible Rise of Arturo Ui" this week.

TNF, in its adjunct theatre, the Recamier, soon will do Brecht's "The Good Woman of Sechouan" while the staid Comedie-Francaise will do "Galileo," about the 17th Century scientist. The Odeon-Theatre De France has his "The Visions of Simone Machard."

Brecht's newfound popularity here probably stems from the success of the East German Berliner Ensemble (he founded and managed), which did four of his plays at the Theatre of Nations this year to big boxoffice and intense local interest.

Installation dinner set for Jan. 9 in clubrooms at Hotel Metropole.

Egotists Wrecking Allied?

Nothing But Criticism Within Exhibitor Group; Personalities Play Big Part in Swamping; Top Job Cheapened by Ad-Percentage Tie

Allied States Assn. continues to be torn by factional dissension and unless a way can be found to halt the petty politics and the bitter recriminations, the 31-year-old exhibitor organization faces dissolution or perhaps a split into two separate new organizations. Despite the heated differences between the two squabbling groups, which for purposes of identification can be broadly characterized as east versus west, last-ditch efforts are being made to heal the serious breach.

However, a drastic reorganization of the association, and a "giving in" by some of the leaders of each faction are required before peace can be restored. The latter concession appears at the moment to be the most necessary element, for the Alliedites, generally known for their belligerency toward the film companies, are displaying surprising jugular vein tactics toward each other.

Allied has been dissension-racked for more than a year. The over-Election-Day convention in Chicago gave no indication of an end to internecine warfare. Indeed some observers characterized the convention as "the funeral of Allied." The turnout of 125 was regarded as extremely sparse and companies paying fat fees to display their wares at the National Assn. of Concessionaries show complained about the poor attendance.

Turnout was attributed to three things—the dissension in the organization, the economic plight of many Allied members who could not afford the transportation and hotel costs, and the fact that someone goofed in scheduling the convention to coincide with the national election.

The convention itself could not solve the factional back-biting. The board spent the first seven hours in a wrangle to determine whether or not the meeting constituted a legal session. The election of Jack Kirsch, long a bulwark of Allied, as the new president did not ease the tempers, although Kirsch is rated a strong leader.

Still Hand of Myers?

The retirement of Abram F. Myers, the longtime board chairman and general counsel, apparently did not assuage the dissenters to his policies and personality. Myers had been a particular target of the easterners, but some of them felt that Myers, who attended the convention in his capacity of advisor, was still pulling the strings behind the scenes.

The bitterness in Allied, which bills itself as the spokesman for the small exhibitor, stems from differences in the approach to industry problems. Basically, the westeners, or firebrands, favor tough tactics against the film companies and continued appeals to the Government to investigate their trade practices. The easterners, or moderates, prefer a conciliatory approach to the distributors and oppose Government intervention. The easterners strongly supported the American Congress of Exhibitors which, they believed, could present an all-exhibitor viewpoint in tackling the film companies.

Allied was almost split asunder a year ago in Miami Beach when Al Myrick, of Iowa, representing the western philosphy, defeated Ed Lider, of New England Allied, for the presidency. Charges of "sellout" were hurled after the election since Lider had been regarded as a shoo-in for the post.

Lider's defeat and the tactics allegedly employed to bring it about resulted in the resignation from Allied of the New England and Western Pennsylvania units. The Western Pa. unit asked for reinstatement just before the Chicago convention but, according to reports, was sorry later. New England Alliedites attended the Chi sessions as observers, but the unit has so far shown no sign that it intends to rejoin the national organization.

Crucial Meeting Due

A board meeting scheduled for January may be the most crucial session in Allied's history. At this time, it's expected that Allied will either bury the hatchet or decide to throw in the towel, with each faction deciding its own future course. The chances of either group allying itself with Theatre Owners of America are regarded as slim, since many of the TOA members, particularly the large circuits, are regarded as bitter enemies, as the film companies. A good many of the complaints of Allied members involve disputes in which they contend that the larger theatres are receiving more favorable treatment from the distribs. The biggest fight now revolves around the hardticket pictures which, in most instances, are booked in theatres operated by TOA members. The Allied members feel that these pictures should be placed into general release so that their theatres can obtain the entries when they are fresh and new.

Therefore, a strong likelihood exists that if the two Allied units cannot live together, they may divorce and organize new exhibitor associations. Or perhaps the separate units might function as state or regional groups as have New England and Western Pa.

Cheapened

The brother-against-brother battle is not the only thing troubling Allied. The organization's financial condition is in dire straits. Dues payments have been slow and lax. The financial problem is believed to be an important factor in delaying the hiring of an executive director who would take on some of the functions formerly performed by Myers. To get the type of individual Allied has in mind would require a salary of at least $25,000 to $30,000 annually. In addition, office and travelling expenses would be required.

Allied may have botched its effort to find a high class executive director by tying his basic salary with a percentage of the dues collections and also advertising in the convention journal. The executive director, in order to increase his take, would have to be active in the collection of dues and in the solicitation of the advertising. This cheapened the job and the organization's minds of possible candidates.

Legit took on a new lease of life, under the impetus of tv, as players found the new medium sharpens interest in legit personalities seen on the home screen. Players found their bread well-buttered by the new source of employment and advertisement, while composers, musicians, lyric writers, etc., found that against the $1,000,000 collected by SADAIC (ASCAP) in royalties last year, in 1961 the royalties will exceed $1,500,000, due to television performance rights.

Intelligent, well planned Government assistance, in the form of year-round tent theatres, erected on Municipal land, and loaned to legit companies, promoted hitherto untapped audiences and provided new patrons for the professional theatre. Levelling of film and theatre prices contributed to the increase in theatre audience. Visits by the Theatre Nationale Populaire, the Citta di Torino, and Dolores del Rio, added brilliance to the legit year.

Though a recession hit the disk trade hard and some major diskeries were financially shaken, a New Wave of Young disk talent stirred even this field, and achieved Continental (South American) rather than mere Domestic importance. Employment for Argentine talent was obtained even in hitherto hard-to-conquer Mexico.

five years, almost all of which is gravy.

The Republic prexy was particularly pleased with the operations of Consolidated Molded Products, plastics subsid, and claimed that it is the first to make major use of "Delrin," new plastic which DuPont reportedly spent about $40,000,000 to develop. CMP, he said, has a contract with Chrysler to use the stuff making dashboards for the Valiant compact car and makes gadgets for Ford as well.

Coast Plastic Plant

He's looking, he said, for a Coast plastics facility and also for profitable ventures in the space-age" industries.

Of the 70-acre San Fernando Valley property, some 30 are now undeveloped. Carter said company will soon start use surveys on the latter portion and he indicated it's likely the 30-acre plot will be used for office buildings, industrial park or apartments.

Company has no bank debt and does have (as of Oct. 29, 1960, end of fiscal year) $2,700,000 in cash. Some $5,002,000 in 4% debentures due in 1965 are being steadily paid off, he said. Approximately $200,000 of the debentures were bought back during the last fiscal year.

Gross receipts during fiscal 1960 were about $30,000,000, compared to $28,250,273 in fiscal 1959, during which year the company wrote off losses remaining from the company's film production days. Current assets, Carter said, total about $10,900,000 (including aforementioned cash) compared to $4,500,000 in current liabilities.

Carter revealed he personally owns: 30,000 of the 400,000 shares of cumulative convertible preferred stock ($10 par, callable at $15); 317,000 of the common shares (which closed at 10⅛ yesterday); and $1,264,008 of the 1965 debentures.

Carter permitted himself some wry remarks about the company's former administration, observing that company now pays 15c per share quarterly and it had "become fairly lax in this respect. Soon after I assumed active management (16 months ago) it became apparent that highly paid relatives with little or nothing to do were not simply figments of a bad script writer's imagination." He cut, he said, the management expense from $700,000 to $400,000 per year, "largely by relieving relatives of former management of imagined responsibilities."

Cutback, he said, involved pruning of some 150 people from payrolls but there are still about 2,000 employes.

Sanguine about future prospects, Carter said "we feel fairly certain" that profits for 1961 should be approximately $1.25 per share.

New With Legion: Choice of Vows

Catholics at mass on Dec. 11 will be given either one of two (the selection is to be decided by diocesan prelates) National Legion of Decency pledges against immorality in motion pictures.

First is simply a repeat of the one traditionally offered to churchgoers and focuses squarely on unacceptable films and the vow that they shall be condemned by the individual who shall also seek to strengthen public opinion against them.

Emphasis in the new pledge is on the positive side. Its text, as previously reported, gives prominent position to a promise to promote "what is morally and artistically good in motion pictures," includes a commitment to consult Legion ratings and includes, of course, enlistment in the fight against immorality.

Nisei Actor

Kyoto on "Bridge to the Sun," he considered his good fortune and told VARIETY, "I don't want this to sound wrong, but it was as though they were waiting for such a type. There was a total acceptance of me this time. Suddenly there are stories with leading parts that I can do.

"The trend in Hollywood has changed completely," he continued. "When I first wanted to get into pictures, I could never find a leading part. They weren't ready for an Oriental leading man.

"But now the trend is definitely toward the Orient," he offered. "The thinking in Hollywood has broadened, especially with international production tie-ups and exchanges of stars."

Regrading his own rapid rise, Shigeta submitted realistically, "Of course I owe a great deal to the fact that I am one of the few Oriental actors around that meets a certain physical demand."

Shigeta does not begrudge his lengthy stay in Japan while waiting for Hollywood to crook its finger. "I had to leave my own country for the opportunities I really wanted," he said. "I certainly don't knock the things I did here. It all worked out for the good. I couldn't have a better training ground."

Having played a Nisei policeman, a Chinese immigrant, a Nisei sailor and slated to portray a Chinese-American, Shigeta said, "The fact that I'm not typed in Japanese parts is good.

"I can also play an East Indian or a Mexican," he offered, "but let's face it, I'll never play the typical clean-cut American kid. I won't find as many parts as someone like Tony Curtis."

While he hopes to straddle acting and singing, Shigeta said, "I may not do what they call the night club route, but I'd certainly like to do singing guest spots on TV and continue to make records."

Evidence of Hollywood's revised treatment of the Oriental actor is reflected in Shigeta having won the girl in each of his pictures. "I don't object to it," he smiled.

Blow to Bias

Tokyo, Nov. 29.

While here Carroll Baker was asked about the fact that several leading actresses had turned down the role of Mrs. Gwen Teresaki in MGM's upcoming "Bridge to the Sun." They rejected the part because they feared adverse public reaction to their appearing in a romantic situation opposite an Oriental.

"I was told about that, but I didn't even want to hear who they were," added Miss Baker.

The film will be based on Mrs. Teresaki's autobiography, telling of a Tennessee woman's marriage to a Japaneses diplomat and of their difficult life in Japan during World War II. Miss Baker will play Mrs. Teresaki with Jimmy Shigeta co-starring as the late Hidenari Teresaki.

New York Sound Track

Hasty readers thought last week's line re Sam Briskin being at liberty was a current situation. This and other items in the same paragraph were from the files 25 years ago and, were so labelled.

Joe Levine, the "Pioneer of the Year," tendered an all-industry dinner at the Waldorf's Starlight Roof, by the Motion Picture Pioneers: "Last time we met at this hotel it was some 20 months ago and I gave a little party on the fourth floor, and now we're here at the Waldorf Roof on the 20th floor, which means that in these 20 months I've gone up 16 floors."

A cab driver, perennial barometer of public sentiment (well, mebbe sometimes), was telling a reporter he's gotten "stung" with too many inferior pictures because of their big campaigns, now will pay to see only films modestly promoted. Heaven help the Barnum & Bailey specialists if this develops into a trend.

Quentin Reynolds will head and organize a special program for the 1960 "Health for Peace" dinner. The dinner will be held on Dec. 14 at the Waldorf-Astoria on behalf of the Children's Asthma Institute for Research and will honor attorney Louis Nizer. Max E. Youngstein is honorary chairman of the dinner . . . Ronald Neame, director of "Tunes of Glory," arrived in New York over last weekend. He took part in promotions on behalf of the picture before leaving Friday (25) to attend the Third World Review of Film Festivals in Mexico City and Acapulco . . . "Goodbye Again" is the new title of Antole Litvak's film version of Francoise Sagan's "Aimez Vous Brahms?" now being filmed in Paris for United Artists release.

Hurd Hatfield remained over in Spain after completing his Pontius Pilate role for "King of Kings" (Metro) in order to play a courtier-conspirator in Sam Bronston's next feature, "El Cid" (Allied Artists). Hence Hatfield will not now exit Spain until next April . . . Meanwhile El Cid-impersonator Charlton Heston copped the Spanish film industry's Triunfo award as "year's best actor" coincidental with Conchita Montes and Adolfo Marsillach being tagged "best actress and actor of Spain." (Roberto Rossellini's Italian "Il General della Rovere" and Spain's "El Lazarillo de Tormes" were respective foreign and native "best pictures" of year.)

Hermione Gingold has returned from London after completing her first film assignment in three years—"The Naked Edge," the Pennebaker-Baroda production for United Artists release. Diane Cilento, also in "The Naked Edge" cast, has been signed by tv producer David Susskind to play Becky Sharp in a two-part televersion of "Vanity Fair." She's due in N. Y. on Dec. 15 to start rehearsals for the tv spec . . . United Artists pub-ad v.p. Roger H. Lewis, back from Coast conferences, was guest lecturer at the New School on Monday (28). He discussed "The Individual in Show Business" . . . Ruth Furst, head of group sales for Loew's State engagement of "Ben-Hur," says indications are that the special group theatre parties and student matinees for the picture will equal, if not surpass, the first year's record. Bookings are being set as far ahead as March and April, 1961 . . . Installation luncheon of the Variety Club of New York will be held Dec. 9 at the Hotel Astor to honor Charles A. Alicoate, incoming chief barker, and Harry Brandt, retiring chief barker . . . Maria van Slyke has joined Valiant Films Corp. as special representative on forthcoming Joseph Harris-Sig Shore presentations . . . Brigid Bazlen, the 16-year-old given a term contract by Metro on the strength of her performance in Samuel Bronston's "King of Kings," is now at the M-G studio getting ready for future roles. She's the daughter of Chicago fashion commentator Maggie Daly . . . Pandro Berman to London to prepare his next Metro film, "The Turning Wheels," based on Stuart Cloete's novel about South Africa . . . Clark Ramsey, Metro's studio ad chief, and Ralph Wheelwright, coordinator of the "King of Kings" campaign, in for homeoffice talks . . . Joe Weihandler's firm retained by Atlantis Films as national publicity reps.

Ten Hollywood performers have taped special radio blurbs which will be used to promote the 1961 White House Conference on Aging. They are: Janet Blair, Walter Brennan, Billie Burke Ziegfeld, Charles Coburn, Nanette Fabray, Mary Pickford, Vincent Price, Jane Wyatt, Ed Wynn and the late Ward Bond, who died a few days after taping. The spots are being sent to all radio outlets in advance of the Conference, which will be held Jan. 9-12, in Washington.

Jerry Wald huddling with John Huston anent working on screenplay and directing "Ulysses," James Joyce novel, for 20th-Fox release . . . 20th talks on with Greek actress Melina Mercouri, of "Never on Sunday," assignment in "Justine," Walter Wanger production which Joseph Manklewicz is scripting and will direct . . . Chestyn Everett will script "The Bessie Smith Story," Odetta starrer which Dandetta Productions will film . . . Mirisch inked Barbara Bel Geddes for "By Love Possessed," with Lana Turner and Efrem Zimbalist Jr. . . . Patricia Medina set for the Queen in 20th-Fox release, "Snow White and the Three Stooges."

James A. Mulvey back in Gotham after two weeks in France and Italy auditioning product for his newly-formed Beaver-Champion Attractions.

Blake Edwards' Homewood Productions inked two-pix deal with United Artists, first to be "The Grand Duke and Mr. Pimm," based on Lindsay Hardy tome . . . Paramount set Debbie Reynolds for "My Six Loves," adapted from Peter V. K. Funk Redbook novelette . . . Betty Lasky and Peter Abenheim sold their original screenplay, "The Eye of the Needle," to Fred Gadette Productions . . . Charles K. Feldman, who previously talked with UA about release of "Walk on the Wild Side," Nelson Algren novel which he's packaged for Edward Dmytryk to produce and direct, has opened negotiations with Paramount . . . Betty Ulius will script her original story, "Hate Town," for Buddy Bregman's indie program.

While Spyros Skouras was still involved in negotiations to decide the future of 20th's multi-million dollar production of "Cleopatra" at Pinewood, a British company was quietly at work at the same studio filming "Carry on Cleo." It's latest in the "Carry On" series, being produced by Peter Rogers, with Hattie Jacques, Britain's outsize star, in the role of Queen Cleopatra. It's for release through Anglo-Amalgamated.

Metro has arranged an exclusive roadshow engagement of "Cimarron" for the Paramount Theatre in Hollywood beginning Christmas night . . . Sig Shore planed to the Coast to set final details for a limited, Oscar-qualifying engagement for "The Angry Silence," the British film he is presenting with Joseph Harris. The pic won two prizes at this year's Berlin Film Festival . . . Following slate for nominations has been made for 1961 by the Motion Picture Bookers Club of New York; Myron J. Starr, president; Martin Perlberg and Frank Patterson, vice presidents; Lillian Seidman, treasurer; Lester Shoenfeld, financial secretary; Kitty Flynn, secretary, and Ben Levine, sergeant at arms. Election will be held on Dec. 5 as part of the regular meeting at the Hotel Manhattan.

After a run of 12 weeks at the Rivoli Theatre in Houston, "This Is Cinerama" has made way for the second in the series, "Cinerama Holiday."

Common Mart Meeting

Paris, Nov. 29.

The coming meeting in Brussels (Feb. 15-18) of film industry and governmental representatives of the Common Mart should be one of the most decisive as far as displaying exactly what measures will be taken to insure easier CM cooperation in film and television, plus the means. Besides the six signatories, observers from other nations will be present.

A goal is to force vacillating nations to definite decisions. There are dissensions as to cinema between the big producing countries-France, Italy, West Germany in which the Benelux countries are mainly spectators.

3-Nation 'Threat'

star, "gives away" the distribution rights in England, France and Italy. As his share, the star would retain the distribution rights for the rest of the world.

A Condition

To be sure, the star, if an American, must be associated with producers in each of the three countries. For their contributions, the native producers are given the picture for each of their local markets. The star, however, keeps the rights for the rest of the world.

According to the attorney, this scheme has manifold ramifications. A prominent American star, for example, could work for no salary, but would receive distribution rights for all countries excepting England, France, and Italy. The star, if he desires, could make a distribution deal with a U. S. company and take a chance on a piece of the world-wide (with the exception of three countries) returns. Or conceivably the star could retain the rights to the film for six months and then arrange a complete sellout for a favorable capital gains deal.

The attorney acknowledges that the three-way co-production, if it gains favor, would result in more runaway production, for it presents an opportunity to obtain financing without resorting to banks or distributors. Absolutely no coin outlay is required from individuals or corporations, since the money is provided by the governments of the three countries.

Angles

On pictures costing more than $750,000, there would be an opportunity for U. S. distributors to participate. On a $1,000,000 picture, for example, a Yank distributor could obtain U. S. release rights by providing only $250,000 of the financing. For pictures with larger budgets, other markets would be offered for additional financing.

Producer groups in England, France, and Italy have already expressed their approval of the new film treaty. However, a stumbling block has been the British film unions which are strongly opposing the deal because they feel they would be faced with runaway production. The arrangement, if ever completed, is seen as being particularly favorable to the big international stars.

Clagett

vices from the inside, that the "mature" features of late have made them fair game for the critics.

While Clagett rammed home the point that more vigorous support against censorship is needed from the film companies, and the company reps are expressing caution anent mature production for immature audiences, it is to be noted that MPAA president Eric A. Johnston is on record as being against any kind of official classification. He's against it for the simple reason it's a form of censorship.

Supply 'Green Sheet' to TOA As Ammunition Re Adult Films

As part of its program to combat rising tide of public opinion re "adult" films, Theatre Owners of America is now servicing its approximately 2,000 members with copies of the monthly Green Sheet. Latter is film rating service prepared by the Film Estimate Board of National Organizations and distributed under Motion Picture Association of America auspices.

Henceforth TOA members will receive Green Sheet under same cover they get their copies of the semi-monthly TOA bulletin which go out on the 15th of each month.

Move is considered significant because one of the most frequent criticisms leveled at the Green Sheet has been that, despite official MPAA figures, it does not reach enough people to effectively inform the public on film content. MPAA distributes about 23,000 copies of the Green Sheet every month, but execs claim readership is much higher, basing their claims on fact that copies of it are posted in public places (churches, schools, etc.), as well as published in various periodicals.

In its current bulletin, TOA calls the Green Sheet "a wonderful tool," and adds:

"Buttressed by these ratings, you can go after family or child audiences. And, if criticized about showing a film, you have a ready-made defense by showing that if parents consulted this service, the parents would have a valuable guide in deciding whether or not the film should be seen by their children."

Bulletin reports that TOA approached MPAA for copies to service TOA members in course of TOA convention in Los Angeles, "as a tool for TOA members when the majority of state legislatures reconvene this winter and censorship and classification bills will crop up before many of them. With it, we felt, our industry could show another example of its self-regulation."

Just how the TOA members should use the Green Sheet ratings was not suggested in the Bulletin. In Memphis for last nine months, local exhibs have been publishing the ratings in their film ads in an apparently successful effort to forestall a city government-classification system. It's understood, however, that TOA will not suggest its members follow the Memphis example.

Though TOA has only about 2,000 members, it's expected that Green Sheet circulation will be increased a good deal more than that number since many TOA members are circuits with considerable theatre holdings.

According to one MPAA spokesman, similar service will be offered to Allied States members if they wish.

Sol Schwartz Succeeds Si Fabian as C. of E. Chief

Sol A. Schwartz, president of RKO Theatres, yesterday (Tues.) was unanimously elected chairman of the American Congress of Exhibitors. He succeeds S. H. (Si) Fabian, Stanley Warner topper, who has held the post since the formation of C. of E. in December, 1958.

In accepting the post, Schwartz said he would continue the policies of the umbrella exhibitor organization as outlined in its original agenda. Fabian will continue to serve as a member of the C. of E. executive committee and as chairman of the committee on ways and means to increase film production. This effort is said to be well on its way toward fruition with the organization of an Congress-backed production company.

the company's sales policies. In 1953-54, while home office rep for the sales department, he played an important part in the company's successful effort to sell the nation's exhibitors on the conversion to CinemaScope. When the late Al Lichtman stepped down from the top sales post in 1956 to produce films, Skouras promoted Harrison, then western division manager, to general sales manager. It was under Harrison that the company domestic distribution setup was revamped 18 months ago to the "autonomous" branch system, which eliminated regional division supervision and gave branch heads authority "to make their own deals."

Harrison, who had spent his entire professional career with 20th, joined the company in 1935 as a poster clerk in the San Francisco branch, advancing to the post of booker before entering military service in World War II.

In 1946 Harrison rejoined 20th as executive assistant to Herman Wobber, then head of the San Francisco branch, taking over as manager in 1948 and then head of the Los Angeles office in 1951.

Because Harrison had been regarded as one of 20th's most dynamic execs and a personal protege of prexy Skouras, his resignation from the company in April stunned friends and co-workers. However, his disagreement with Skouras, which led to the blow-out, had nothing to do with policy but was simply a case of an overworked exec who wanted a rest from what Harrison himself used to call a "25-hour-a-day" job.

Since his resignation, Harrison had received a number of job offers from other companies but had apparently preferred to take it easy a little longer and tend his two citrus ranches in California. Indicative of the esteem in which he continued to be held by 20th toppers is Skouras' desire to give the eulogy at today's memorial services in New York.

Charge at Feather River," and "War Drums."

Trial is already on its third day. In those two stances, three of the films were show and then introduced as evidence against Kantrowitz. First two—as a short cut device—were shown in a sideroom and reels introduced into evidence after identification. They were "Pete Kelley's Blues" and "Beau Brummel."

After defense objections of this type of procedure, the third film, "The Charge at Feather River" was screened in front of the entire court before the film was introduced as evidence.

Listed as legal distributors of the films—in the charges—are Warner Bros., United Artists, 20th Century-Fox, and Metro. Experts from these companies are testifying at the trial. Pictures were originally made in 35mm. Bootleg prints seized in Chicago were 16 mm.

Kantrowitz is charged with being the supplier of the bootleg prints to Alexander T. Miller who was arrested by FBI in August of 1959. Under Federal law, the charge of infringement of copyright is a misdemenor. Maximum penalty, after conviction, calls for fine of from $100 to $1,000 or a prison term that cannot exceed one year. In a statement to FBI, Miller said he paid $10 a night rental for each film.

Bill Thomas-Sam White Merit Co. Into Theatrical Production, Along With TV

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Bill Thomas and Sam White, who recently formed Merit Productions to produce and package teleseries, have decided to expand their operations and embrace feature production as well.

First theatrical film will be "The Treasurer's Report," Lewis R. Foster original, which will be submitted to Sir Alec Guinness as a possible starrer. Negotiations also are on for Foster, who previously scripted for the old Pine-Thomas Productions, to write the screenplay and direct his property.

Plans call for project to be set up as a complete package before any release is sought.

ALL THAT NOISE IS JOE LEVINE'S MEDALS

Boston, Nov. 29.

Gov. Foster Furcolo of Massachusetts presented Joseph E. Levine, of Embassy Pictures Corp., with an inscribed Paul Revere Bowl in recognition of the "aggressive and successful advertising methods he has contributed to the progress of the motion picture industry."

Levine has been man-of-yeared aplenty of late, lacks only an Oscar and a Pulitzer.

Among Bostonians making the trek to New York for the recent 22d anniversary dinner of Motion Picture Pioneers honoring Levine as "Pioneer of the Year" were: George Kraska, Joe Wolf, Harvey Appell, Harold Levin, all of Embassy Pictures, Boston; Arthur Stein of Round Hill Drive-In, Springfield; Julian Rifkin and George Roberts of Rifkin Theatres; Ted Fleisher and Malcolm Green of Interstate; Herbert Higgins of Higgins Booking Office; Ernie Warren, owner of Paramount, Needham; Arthur Howard, Affiliated Theatres; Mickey and Al Daytz of Daytz Enterprises; Edward Lider of Yamins Theatres.

100 Screen Players Made Personals During 1960

London, Nov. 29.

As part of its promotional drive, Associated British Cinemas has concentrated on personals. In the first 10 months of 1960, more than 100 players have done p.a.'s in various parts of the country.

A special effort has been made in the sphere of children's matinees, and the circuit toppers are convinced of the long-term advantages of young filmgoers seeing screen personalities face-to-face. Among the artists who have followed the p.a. route during the year are Richard Todd, Anthony Newley, Shirley Ann Field, Dennis Price, Janette Scott and Marie Devereux.

Jonathan Sheppard Preps Texas Yarn for Allied

El Paso, Tex., Nov. 29.

Jonathan Sheppard, writer and producer, has completed plans to film "Satan's Sanctuary," a suspense feature on location here and in Houston. Expected cast: Karl Malden, Sterling Hayden and Ralph Meeker.

Sheppard is here scouting locations and doing research prior to production slated to star in January.

The story, to be released by Allied Artists, is based on factual incidents involving the Border Patrol, Texas Rangers and the F.B.I. This will be Sheppard's second Texas locale picture, the first was "The Big Country," with which he was associated.

Murphy's Widened Beat

Cleveland, Nov. 29.

Frank Murphy, district manager of Loew's theatres in Ohio for 10 years, has been made central division supervisor of Loew's houses in wider area.

Increased by addition of several other cities in a national realignment of the circuit, his territory now includes stands in Cleveland, Akron, Canton, Columbus, Toledo and Dayton, O.; Buffalo, Chicago, Indianapolis, Niagara Falls, Rochester, Syracuse and South Bend, Ind.

Holiday Booms Biz; 'Butterfield' First for Third Week in Row; 'Blues' 2d, 'Alaska,' 'Hur' Next

The fact that this is Thanksgiving holiday week is being reflected at the boxoffice all over the country currently, with upbeat the sharpest in many months. New product, which has shown great drawing potential, is giving the greatest assist.

"Butterfield 8" (M-G), which has been No. 1 for two weeks in a row, again is finishing on top by a wide margin. "GI Blues" (Par), comparative newcomer, is copping second money with a smash showing in most of some 18 key cities covered by VARIETY.

"North To Alaska" (20th), fourth last round, is winding up third. "Ben-Hur" (M-G) is taking fourth money by dint of improved showings in many keys via the holiday weekend.

"Midnight Lace" (U), which was second a week ago, is capturing fifth place, playing in some 19 key cities. Showing is being made despite few new openings. "Spartacus" (U), enjoying its best week since teeoff session in most spots, is winding in sixth position.

"The Alamo" (UA) is finishing seventh as against sixth place last round. "Esther and King" (20th), just out to any extent this stanza, is capturing eighth spot.

"Inherit the Wind" (UA) is taking ninth place while "Let No Man Write My Epitaph" (Col) rounds out the Top 10 pix. "Sunrise at Campobello" (WB), "Carry On, Nurse" (Gov) and "School For Scoundrels" (Cont) are the runner-up films in that order.

"Never On Sunday" (Lopert), showing in great style in additional key cities this session, promises to be one of strongest foreign-language films boxoffice-wise to come along in many months. "Cinderfella" (Par) is rated wow on opening stanza in Chi. "Please Turn Over" (Col) also shows strong potential, being fine in Boston, wow in Toronto and sock in L.A.

"Can-Can" (20th), fine in Louisville and L.A., shapes strong in Indianapolis. "The Entertainer" (Cont), good in K.C. and Balto, looks big in N.Y.

"Hiroshima Mon Amour" (Zenith), hep in Washington, is robust in Chi and okay in Cincy. "Captain's Table" (20th), not so hot in Detroit, shapes good in St. Louis.

"Girl of Night" (WB), lively in Chi, shapes okay in N.Y. "Song To Remember" (Col), good in Boston, looms fine in L.A.

"Gigi" (M-G) (reissue) is socko in N.Y. on second round. "Breath of Scandal" (Par), good in Chi, looks mild in Louisville.

Service and the film companies last January. The arrangement, not legally binding, called for the release of top pictures to the commercial theatres before they are booked at military camps. Theatres in localities where there are Army and Air Force installations had complained that they were losing business because of the priority of the service theatres. As a result of the TOA beefs, it was agreed that most "A" pix would go to the commercial theatres first. In addition, a tighter control on the admission of civilians to the service theatres was instituted.

TOA is not too angry at Metro for giving "Butterfield 8" to the military first, since it points out that M-G has a better record than most companies in adhering to the agreement.

C. S. Chaplin's Status

Charles S. Chaplin will continue to function as United Artists' Canadian district manager following a realignment of the company's sales divisions in the United States and Canada.

Chaplin will retain responsibility for the Calgary, Montreal, St. John, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnepeg exchanges.

ence between black and red on the fiscal books. Both maintain that too often decisions made in Manhattan, by showmen not completely up on differing conditions abroad gravely hampered work. Latterday practice of sending over new people to handle certain pix without the necessary foreign and lingual background for the jobs, is also deplored.

N.Y. Knows Best

Another vexation is that not all U.S. films have international appeal and yet films for the more difficult "quota" countries are sometimes picked over the heads of men on the ground who knows the marts best. Both feel that the Yank film is still a potent international commodity. But they think they can use their talents best on an indie basis.

Both are Yanks with years of foreign experience and their new company will try to service indies, both US and continental, wanting individual attention in selling, publicity and placement abroad. They also offer production superivision services and intend acquiring offshore pix for US distribution. Auberbach will channel the latter thru his father's, Joe Auberbach's, foreign film setup in the US. They are also partnered with Gilbert De Goldschmidt, a French producer, for coproduction possibilities or for US investments for American rights.

Pilzer was in charge of special sales and will continue in a sales capacity. A&P now represents Warwick of Britain.

at the Cort Theatre, N. Y., thence moving to its current berth at the Barrymore Theatre, and next slated to shift Dec. 10 to the O'Neill Theatre on a four-week interim booking.

The British production of "Hostage" had an eight-month London run, and Behan estimates that his income thus far from the Broadway, London and other productions of the play is at about $70,000. He figures the revenue from his autobiography at around $30,000 to date.

The author was previously represented in New York by the Circle in the Square off-Broadway production of his play, "The Quare Fellow." He says his income from that presentation wasn't much. The Dublin production of the play, he figures, paid him about $2,000. "Fellow," incidentally, is scheduled for television presentation in December by the Canadian Broadcasting Co.

Another of his plays is "The Big House," which is put on sporadically by dramatic companies. The work, originally a radio script, won an award given by the Dramatic Society of British Railways in Colwyn Bay, West Wales. Behan is also the subject of a 20-minute short, which has been shown in Dublin film houses. The pic is titled, "Meet the Quare Fellow."

The playwright intends returning to Dublin with his wife for Christmas. He then plans heading back to the U. S. to attend the Jan. 20 inauguration of President-elect John F. Kennedy in Washington. Following that, he contemplates staying in N. Y. until next summer when he'll return to Dublin.

His latest play, "Richard Cork's Leg," which he intends completing during his Christmas stay in Dublin, is slated to be unveiled next February at the Theatre Royal, Stratford, East London. The script has been the subject of numerous trans-Atlantic conversations he's had with Joan Littlewood, operator of the Theatre Royal and director of "Hostage." It's possible Behan will pass up the opening in favor of remaining in New York. In comparing London and Manhattan, he claims the former is a place to work and the latter a place to live.

While in New York, the author has caught a few Broadway shows and has spent some time in Greenwich Village with some of the better known beatnicks. Behan, as have others, thinks that the tearing down of Broadway legit houses for parking lots is ironic, since legit shows are one of the Main Stem's principal lures and that fewer houses would consequently permit fewer attractions.

The playwright has also been active on television, having appeared on several Jack Paar shows and in an "Open End" discussion session. He had to shell out $217 to join the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists to appear on the Paar stanzas. His earnings from tv, he asserts, total $1,001 thus far. The $1 represents payments for the "Open End" stint. When questioned as to whether he's been watching television, he replied he's caught little other than the shows on which he appeared.

He's also been lecturing at colleges and universities to the extent that he figures he's almost earned a degree.

BERGMAN ON OSCARCAST TEAM, EAST COAST

Maurice Bergman, has been named eastern public relations coordinator for the next Academy Awards television program April 17, and in this role will rep the Academy.

Bergman will work under an industry public relations coordinating committee comprising Harshe-Rotman Inc., which is the Academy's p.r. counsel; rep of the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers and press members of the ABC network, which will carry the Oscar tv'er.

Non-Theatrical Market Also Tunes Up In The Treble (Damages) Cantata

Two major distributors of non-theatrical 16m films—Films Inc. and Encyclopedia Brittanica Films Inc.—have been named defendants in an antitrust suit involving treble damages of more than $2,000,000. Also named in the complaint were individuals associated with the firms, including William Benton, Morris B. Mitchell, Paul G. Hoffman, Harry E. Houghton, and Adlai E. Stevenson.

The suit, filed in N.Y. Federal Court, by Ideal Pictures, two other corporations, and 10 individuals, all connected with the distribution of 16m non-theatrical films, alleges violation of the antitrust laws in the distribution, exhibition, and the licensing of the 16m non-theatrical pix. It's also charged that the defendants have been obtaining most of the major film company product for 16m non-theatrical distribution and, as a result, the plaintiffs have been damaged to the extent of various sums for the past five years. It's alleged that the defendants unlawfully engaged in a combination and conspiracy by monopolizing the 16m non-theatrical field.

Cinerama's $2,250,000 Equipment Order Aimed For 70 New Installations

As an indication of Cinerama Inc.'s resurgence, Nicolas Reisini, president of the company, revealed that the company had placed an order for $2,250,000 worth of new theatre equipment.

The order, Reisini told a press conference yesterday (Tues.), will provide 70 complete Cinerama theatre installations. He described the equipment deal as "the largest single order ever given for motion picture theatre equipment." He added hat the company plans to open 70 new Cinerama theatres throughout the world in the next eight months.

The equipment, he revealed, includes 280 film projecors from Century Projector Corp., 50 complete sets of Cinerama speakers, 2,200 individual speaker units from Altec-Lansing, complete sound units from the Grass Valley Group of California, Lamp houses and rectifiers from the C.S. Ashcraft Co., and 70 film sound transports from Westrex.

As the same time, Reisini revealed the development of a completely transistorized sound system for Cinerama. Devised by the Grass Valley Group, the sound system is said to eliminate vacuum tubes and transformers.

Reisini outlined three advantages of the transistored system—(1) it provides great savings in terms of space and weight and will mean lower transportation costs to Cinerama installations both here and abroad; (2) it reduces to a minimum the amount of power loss as compared to that dissipated in heat by vacuum tubes; (3) the audio quality is vastly improved since the new equipment uses no transformers and is capable of handling high peak levels without the usual overload characteristics.

Reisini noted that development, exclusive for Cinerama's use, will mean that theatre installation costs for the process will be reduced materially.

'Atlas' to Filmgroup

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Roger Corman, after listening to pleas of key exhibs around the country, has reskedded release of "Atlas," to go out under his Filmgroup banner, for general distribution instead of as a roadshow attraction, as originally intended.

Film now will have a 500-print saturation release in 11 exchange areas. Corman made switch following exhibs' arguments against feast-famine booking techniques.

'Dondi' for Easter; Plan 500 Prints

Allied Artists is prepared to order as many as 500 prints of "Dondi" to launch picture in key runs during the 1961 Easter week, Maurice Goldstein, veep and general sales manager, told a trade press lunch in New York Friday (25). Lunch at Sardi's was tossed for visiting kidactor, six-year-old David Kory, who plays title role in the film.

Because of "family audience" nature of pic, Goldstein said it would be "a crime" to release film at any time other than when kids are out of school. "Dondi" had originally been skedded to go out for Xmas, but was pushed back to Easter to allow company to do a full-scale promotion job on it, Goldstein said.

Company is aiming to get "first class showcase" bookings for picture's first dates, Goldstein said, but if these can't be arranged, he will set local territory saturation bookings.

Kory, with his mother, sister, tutor and press agent in tow, is expected to make a personal appearance tour taking in at least 34 cities before Easter. Kid, who appeared in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day parade here Thursday (24), is getting coop buildup via New York Daily News-Chicago Tribune syndicate which handle the comic strip.

Schneider's Major Prods. Takes Over Italo Films' 'Maciste' for English

Samuel Schneider, the former Warner Bros. executive who now heads his own Major Productions, has acquired distribution rights to "Maciste the Giant" for the U. S. and English-speaking countries. The deal was made with Jolly Films of Italy.

Arrigo Columbo and George Papi, of the Italian firm, are currently in N. Y. to complete details for Schnieder's releasing plans of the spectacle entry.

At the same time, Columbo revealed that Jolly's next film would be "Joseph and His Brethren," a Biblical spectacle now shooting in Rome under the direction of Irving Rapper. British thesps Geoffrey Horn, Belinda Lee and Finlay Currie have already been signed.

Columbia has long contemplated a film version of "Joseph and His Brethren" utilizing the Thomas Mann novel. However, because of casting and other difficulties the project has been in mothballs for a number of years.

Also on Jolly's schedule is "The Great Captain," a story dealing with a 15th Century Italian Robin Hood.

Times Square Embassy For 'Family Robinson'

The Embassy Theatre on Broadway is shuttering temporarily on Dec. 19 to prep for launching of "Swiss Family Robinson" on Dec. 23. Besides a facelift, the house, which only occasionally has gone first-run in recent years, will get new seats, a streamlined screen and new projection booth layout.

The renovations at the Embassy will represent an outlay of $75,000, according to Norman Elson, president of Guild Enterprises, which runs the theatre. It is now first-run with "Come Dance With Me," an import.

Highway Swallows Downtown Whole

Hartford's Film Houses, Save One, Doomed—Weird Eradication in Name of 'Progress'

Hartford, Nov. 29.

Current and future face changing of the downtown sector of this city has eradicated all of the downtown filmeries—except one—from the the blueprint of this city. At one time there were 10 downtown first run flickeries in operation. Now there are five. And only through the fickle finger of fate is the one scheduled to remain in the years ahead.

East-West highway—now under construction — will bypass the Strand Theatre by some 40 feet. All other remaining cinemas are threatened by the extinction sledge hammer. In business now, besides the Strand, are the Poli, The Palace, E. M. Loew's and Allyn Theatres.

Recently gone from the scene are Regal and Princess Theatres. New Parsons in the way of the East-West highway goes down sometime this winter. House made the transition from church to burlesque to film to legit before its demise was ordered.

State Theatre—in a north end tract bordering the downtown sector—this month became the property of the Redevelopment Agency that is developing the North end. Vaudefilmer was sold for an undisclosed price and includes several parcels of real estate, both commercial and residential. It's to be pulled apart late this winter.

Early part of November voters approved of the Bushnell Park Redevelopment Project. This will replace the Poli and Palace Theatres and the Heublin Hotel with apartment buildings. Hotel was once a hangout for top showpeople and renowned for its food. Their demise is skedded for near future.

In line for redevelopment are the two theatres on Asylum St.—the Allyn and E. M. Loew's. Both will come down to make way for new commercial properties in that area. The next door hotel, the Allyn House, is already a parking lot. Gone also is the Savoy Hotel. Both knocked down in the past two months. Both were stopping off spots for show people.

'Alamo' Motif Pervades Town

San Antonio, Nov. 29.

Now that "The Alamo" has settled down at the Woodlawn Theatre, the neighboring merchants in the vicinity of the John Wayne western, distributed through United Artists, are taking advantage of the heavy promotional program. Several of the biz firms are aiming their advertising at identification with the picture.

Gordon Lee Harrison has added a false front replica of the Alamo to Mammy's Cafeteria at a cost of nearly $2,500 and the front will stay up as long as the picture continues to show at the Woodlawn.

The main window at Sommers Drug Store, next store to the cafeteria, is filled with an Alamo display and inside the store are featured three pocket book versions of "The Alamo," three long play records based on "The Alamo" music, a copy of the James Bowie knife selling at $19.95 and Texas sized postcards of The Alamo.

Near the Woodlawn an enterprising operator has named his gasoline station, "Taylor's Livery Stable." He has bales of hay stacked around as props for the scheme and has his gasoline pumps encased in wooden boxes labeled "Pure water" and "Hard Cider."

Two nearby taverns have remodeled in deference to the "Alamo" crowd with biz in each one popping. All in all business in the shopping area of the Woodlawn Theatre has picked up since the world premiere of the film.

Mexico's 3d World Festival

ers, and statements from organizers that boxoffice receipts at the San Diego Fortress had hit $1,360 for the opener, more than double the $480 inaugural figure of the second festival last year, there were many empty seats. Indicator of poor business is the 96c and $1.60 admission in Acapulco, with a small reserved section. With 2,000 seats, a sellout should have grossed around $3,000.

At the National Auditorium, where opener was attended by Mrs. Eva Samano de Lopez Mateos, the president's wife, boxoffice admish was frozen at 32c. The huge hall was scarcely half full its 10,000 capacity.

First Three Nights Tame

Acapulco event was inaugurated by Secretary of National Patrimony Eduardo Bustamante and Governor Aburto. The first three night stanzas were tame affairs, short on stars and starlets, with only Spain's Conchita Velasco and Angeles Hortelano and France's Genevieve Cluny and Dany Saval displaying their charms.

At the National Auditorium, too, there was a lack of pageantry usually connected with a fest of this type although the Mexican Charro Assn. manfully gave a display of precision horsemanship. First two pictures screened included France's "Le Passage du Rhin" on opening night and Italy's "El Bello Antonio."

In a "kiss and make up" deal with disgruntled Mexican film elements, organizers grudgingly admitted national film, "Simitrio," on the fest program. Original objection to "Simitrio," which had won award at the San Sebastien Fest, was that it had been commercially exploited in Mexico just prior to the opening of the festival.

Mexican Players Stay Away

Whether from pique at high handedness of certain fest officials or because of cool disinterest in the event, Mexican players and personnel remained away in droves. Officialdom was represented by Salvador Amelio of the Cimex distributionship. In the First Lady's box, the group included Jorge Ferretis, Film Bureau head and director of the fest; Federico Heuer, Film Bank president; Miguel Aleman Jr.; and Luis Echeverria, of the State Department, representing Secretary of State Gustavo Diaz Ordaz.

A check at the National Assn. of Actors to find out easons behind the seeming snub of event brought a reply from Ramon Bugarini, publicity chief, that invitations had arrived so late that artists had made other commitments. But there is an apparent thaw-out and some major names such as Dolores del Rio, Pina Pellicer and others may soon be in evidence.

Some Call It Successful

Organizing headquarters call the Fest a success, pointing out that foreign delegations always turn up late. For example, the Czech delegation missed connections in South America and were delayed turning up in Mexico for two days. Giulieta Massina and husband-director Federico Fellini are planing in as well as a Hollywood contingent headed by Eric Johnston, Jack Lemmon and John Saxon.

However, the tremendous Hollywood turnout forecast earlier has petered out. Robert J. Corkery, Motion Picture Export Assn. veepee in charge of Latin America, presented apologies to organizers for the shrinking contingent due to prior commitments of stars. Such names as Gary Cooper, Frank Sinatra, Robert Taylor, Curt Jurgens, James Mason and Bert Lancaster, touted as sure festival visitors, will not show.

Pittsburgh Pirates

Pitttsburgh Press. The label will be "Thorn-Beach" and distribution will start with Ben Herman, who owns Standard Distributors here.

Highlight of the album is Bob Prince's description of Harvey Haddix' perfect game in Milwaukee in 1959 which he lost in the 13th inning. Chet Smith, sports editor of the Press, handles the narration for the early years. Records of the Rosy Roswell with Bing Crosby and Joe E. Brown bring the LP into the modern era where it is carried mostly by Prince with the big finish coming with NBC's Chuch Thompson's description of the exciting seventh game when the Pirates won the series with Bill Mazeroski's home run.

The other album has more of a general appeal and features Prince narrating and introducing two other Pirate heroes, Elroy Face and Hal Smith, who now are pretty good singers. There are a few lines on this album but its strongest features are the hillbilly songs of Face and Smith. Lenny Martin, owner of Robbee records, produced this and named the album, "Beat 'em, Bucs," which is the title of the single his company issued. The single was done by Benny Benack's Iron City Six.

CBS Radio Cross-the-Board Revamp Spurred by Some Fresh Billings

CBS Radio launched its new soaperless expanded schedule of news and news features Monday (28) to the tune of some new billings. The on-the-half-hour five-minute features—43 of 'em per week, will kick off about 50% sold during the week and 70% SRO on weekends, while the expansion of on-the-hour news to 10 minutes (seven and half sold nationally) will likewise find 50% of that sold and nearer 80% on weekends.

The features range from light reports from CBS correspondents around the globe to casual information and service shows like reports on new products. Spread finds 30 of them scheduled weekdays, 13 on weekends. On the news end, the 10 minutes are broken down into seven and a half national and two and a half local, latter for station sale. Features carry a minute and half of commercials, while the expanded news carries two minutes.

Business for the new shows represents carryover sponsors from the soapers, who've moved into the new availabilities, but substantial new accounts as well. Much of the business is longterm—Kellogg is in for a 45-weeker on the news and the features, Bristol-Myers for 52 on news, Standard Brands for 52 on the features, all in 13-week cycles of course. Other new clients include Philip Morris, Grove Labs, Fritos and Sterling Drug.

Web is selling each of the capsules to two sponsors, with a one-minute and a 30 second commercial in each of the features, and two one-minute spots in the news. Latter presently includes some instances where there are three commercials, two 30-seconds and one minute, but this is a problem area caused by holdover of some 30-second sponsors from the old five-minute news and will be changed as clients can be accommodated to new berths. The minutes are priced at a onetime rate of $1,450 for both the news and features,

Westinghouse's CKEY Dickers

Negotiations are under way for Westinghouse Electric Co. of Canada to move into broadcasting, just as the parent Westinghouse in this country has its WBC operation with its flock of lucrative o & o radio and tv stations. The Canadian Westinghouse is dickering to acquire a minority interest (20%) in CKEY in Toronto, the Jack Kent Cooke station.

Since it's forbidden for U.S. interests to own Canadian broadcasting properties, Westinghouse puts particular stress on the fact that this is a completely separate and Canadian-rooted subsidiary. But nonetheless it's seen as pointing up the corporate thinking in expanding its global broadcast horizons, since WBC has already been having some exploratory talks on acquisitions in Argentina, Peru and Mexico.

CLINCHES NO. 1 RATING STATUS

By GEORGE ROSEN

Arrival of the new National Nielsens over the past weekend cued in something of a milestone in tv annals—the emergence of ABC as the No. 1 network in rating supremacy coast-to-coast and CBS relinquishing the leadoff position for the first time in more than five years. Since it covers the pre-election two weeks ending Nov 6, it encompasses a period when both NBC and CBS were heavily preempted for political gab. Nonetheless, on the basis of all figures, hour for hour, it reflects an unmistakable pattern of the upward thrust of ABC in the three-network competitive race.

If there were evidence of unrestrained jubilation in the Leonard Goldenson-Ollie Treyz camp this week, it's for a variety of reasons, stemming from the Nielsen average audience nose-counting breakdown, all of which adds up to a solid triumph for ABC. On top of that ABC did it the hard way, managing to turn the trick despite a clearance situation problem which shuts the network out of important one and two-station markets.

Here's the ABC chest-thumping evidence:

(1). In the 47 half-hours in which all three networks are slugging it out in direct competition, ABC is is out in front with 23 average-audience-per-minute wins; CBS is second with 17 half-hour wins and NBC third with nine.

(2). Perhaps more importantly and a key factor in the onward-&-upward ascent of ABC is the fact that, in contrast to one year ago, ABC has picked up 1,045,000 homes (for a total of 8,407,000), while CBS lost approximately the same number of homes (1,131,000) for a second place position of 8,091,000. What makes it all the more intriguing—giving it an aura of the Nixon-Kennedy popularity vote stalemate-is the fact that NBC, having lost only 28,000 homes, is

Two Divergent Schools of Thought On Networks Permitting Outsiders To Produce Public Affairs Shows

When ABC-TV two weeks ago hired Time Inc. to produce four public affairs programs, the act shook news and public affairs specialists elsewhere in the industry and has since led rivals to re-emphasize the reasons why they have resisited outside incursions on the "precious" news and public affairs of networking. Outside production of pubaffairs may become the mode of the future, and AB-PT prez Leonard H. Goldenson for one is a staunch advocate of the practice, but for the time being, its opponents, vocal in their opposition, see five principal faults in the scheme.

The most important objection, perhaps, is that the free acquisition of properties made outside the network's immediate control can lead to the disintegration of the broadcaster's realm of primacy. "In news and public affairs, which has so limited a part of the spectrum," a partisan observer said last week, "the hiring of an outside producer is like giving away your birthright. All right, so entertainment is important, but television is for information first and foremost."

Second criticism is that an outside pubaffairs producer is likely to accede more easily than a network to "the terrific amount of pressure on him." Like any independent producer of action-adventure films, the maker of a public affairs program, who is not on a network staff, is likely to compound the excesses of timidity that already afflict broadcasters. "If you hire an outside producer whose prime function is to sell news and public affairs, he'll feel the pressures more than anyone else," said one member of the anti element.

"He'll avoid certain topics and try to foresee those that will be most acceptable to networks," it was said. "In short, he'll make the news fit the occasion, not the other way around as it's supposed to be."

A more concrete objection is that, as journalistic outlets, the networks who hire outside production teams cannot, in the same authoritative way, protect these independent "reporters" as they do their own staff journalists. This is because it's virtually impossible to understand and appreciate the

Brit. TV's Oct. Peak

London, Nov. 29.

The highest monthly total of tv advertising in the five years that commercial video has been operating in the U. K. was chalked up in October. The figure of over $23,520,000 compares with the previous high registered in November last year, over $18,480,000.

Media Records Ltd., which keeps tabs on these ad statistics, reckons that the overall total for 1960 could hit around $218,500,000.

CBS-TV's 'Witness' Getting the Heave; New Western Set

CBS-TV has brought the axe down on "The Witness" and will replace it either Jan. 26 or Feb. 2 with a new one-hour western created by Charles Marquis Warren and to be titled either "The Gunslinger" or "The Outrider."

Still unresolved is where the new western would go in the Thursday night structure. Either it would move in as a straight 7:30-8:30 replacement for "Witness," or, CBS hopes, would go into the 9-10 period with a half-hour jump on "Untouchables." In that case, with sponsor blessings, "Angel" and Ann Sothern would move down to 7:30-8:30 in the "Witness" spot.

Also unresolved is 10-11, or actually the first half of that, with web not yet having made a decision as to whether "Person to Person" will stay put, move or be

Last Season For 'Show of Month'?

Du Pont's tv program plans for the '61-'62 season are already underway with the status quo due for quite a shake.

Both of the company's current entries on CBS-TV, the half-hour June Allyson situation comedy and 90-minute "Show of the Month" are slated for demise. Revamp calls for an hour a week with format still in the early stages of discussion.

Neither the Allyson show, which was iffy going into this season, nor the specials off the Talent Associates production line have proved out in the ratings thus far. BBDO is the du Pont agency.

Moss Hart Bows Out Of TV's 'Gershwin Years'

Moss Hart has withdrawn as host of "The Gershwin Years," the Leland Hayward 90-minute CBS-TV special slated for Jan. 15. Hart is convalescing from a heart attack suffered in Toronto while directing the road tryout of "Camelot," and while his condition is good, physicians advised him not to take on the extra duties of the tv assignment.

Replacement for Hart hasn't been selected.

Oren Harris Wants To Abolish Legislative Oversight Committee

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Nov. 29.

Rep. Oren Harris (D., Ark), disclosed today (Tues.) that he wants to abolish the House Legislative Oversight Subcommittee — his group which probed payola, tv quiz shows, Sherman Adams, and other headline-making hanky-panky—at the end of this year.

Enough investigating has been done of Washington regulatory agencies, including the FCC, to justify a number of new laws, some of which have already been passed by Congress and more of which he'd like to have made into law in 1961.

That's Harris' opinion, expressed in an exclusive interview, and it means he wants emphasis on legislative work to the deemphasis of digging up more dirt.

But Harris has no intention of turning his back on the regulatory agencies. He is also chairman of the investigating subcommittee's parent, the House Commerce Committee, which has permanent life and a large staff.

"While I see no need right now for further public investigations," Harris commented, "I think members of the staff should continue to watch the agencies and keep abreast of what is going on."

Not all the members of the Legislative Oversight Subcommittee want to see it head for the graveyard as Harris does. But Harris usually has his way, and it is a safe prediction he will in this instance.

The parent Commerce Committee and its Communications Subcommittee both have the authority to investigate at will.

Harris has no prime timetable yet for consideration of legislation to regulate and/or license radio-tv networks. He has a bill calling for licensing, and the senior Republican of his committee, Rep. John Bennett (Mich.), has one authorizing regulation by FCC without licensing.

"I hope to have hearings on this legislation in the New Year but can't say when right now," Harris said.

The Legislative Oversight Subcommittee met yesterday (Mon.) and today to work on a final report of the group to be presented to Congress when it reconvenes Jan. 3. The subcommittee will meet the week of Dec. 12 and members hope to complete the report then.

Aim of the report is to pull together observations and recommendations of legislation growing

WNTA Deal For Eichmann Trial

WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y. indie, plans to telecast the Eichmann trial in its entirety.

National Telefilm Associates v.p. Ted Cott has held preliminary talks with Capital Cities Broadcasting Corp. to effectuate the plan. Capital Cities Broadcasting has been granted exclusive world tv and film recording rights to the Israeli trial of Nazi war criminal Adolph Eichmann. Capital Cities exec producer, Milton A. Fruchtman, who negotiated the non-profit deal, has returned to Israel to set up coverage.

Cott said he was informed that there will be simultaneous translations in numerous languages of the court proceedings, similar to the simultaneous language translations at the United Nations. He also said it was likely that each court session would last about three hours.

WNTA-TV, whose coverage area encompasses the largest concentration of Jews in the world, also offered its vidtape facilities to help expedite the distribution of the Eichmann trial vidtape footage.

Capital Cities will use a new tv tape recording system for the trial, a system which reproduces film and tape simultaneously. On a non-profit basis, Capital will feed film or vidtape footage to any outlet requesting coverage, from tv stations and networks to newsreel companies and private groups.

NBC UPS GILLES AS HEYWOOD QUITS

Nick Gilles has become director of business affairs at NBC-TV, replacing Jack Heywood, who decided this week to quit the network.

Gilles, who has been director of business affairs in the NBC operational area, will report in his new job directly to the tv web's general manager, Bob Stone. New appointee's function will be the administration of business affairs for programming and he'll handle the overall budgeting for NBC-TV.

Meantime, Charles Corcoran has been upped to director of NBC-TV operations, filling the void made when Bill Trevarthen became vice president in charge of operations and engineering, Stone's old position.

NBC-TV's Bowl Runneth Over On Grid Sales

NBC-TV has made sales touchdowns with the National Football League Championship, the Blue-Gray, East-West Shrine, the Rose Bowl and the 11th Annual Pro Football games. Of the eight bowl games on the web's schedule between mid-December and January, 1961, these five are SRO, and NBC-TV is nearly at the goal line on the Sugar and Senior Bowl games, the first being seven-eighths of SRO and the latter 75% sold.

To carry the anology further, only NBC-TV's Liberty Bowl (set for Dec. 17) is wide of the goalline. With five-eights sold, this game from Philly has about 40 sales yards still to run.

Gillette and General Motors are splitting the full charges on the Blue-Gray and Rose Bowl encounters. Liggett & Myers and Carter are co-sponsoring the 11th Annual Bowl Pro Bowl. Rest of the schedule is split up mostly among participating bankrollers, with Colgate (eighths in Liberty, East-West, Sugar and Senior Bowls), Goodrich (quarters in Liberty, Sugar and Senior Bowls), Shick (eighths in Liberty, East-West, Sugar and Senior Bowls) and Whitehall eighths in Liberty, Sugar and Senior Bowls) the big buyers. Philip Morris has half of the National Football League Championship, which is otherwise cut up in quarters (part regional, part Hygrade). Other sponsors are Wynn Oil, R. J. Reynolds and Ebonite.

Lotsa Xmas Exposure For Wayne & Shuster (On Three Continents)

Toronto, Nov. 29.

With sale of Wayne & Shuster kinescopes of "Mother Goose," 90-mins. spectacle to Britain and Australia, team will appear on three continents three successive days this Xmas. Panto will be seen over the Australian Broadcasting Commission on Xmas Eve; the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. web at 7:30 p.m. EST on Xmas Day; by Granada over Britain and the Continent following day.

Besides starring Wayne & Shuster, "Mother Goose" has Joan Fairfax, Don Gillies and Bob Goulet, latter of "Camelot." Spectacle was produced by Don Hudson, with words and music by W & S; sold overseas by Bill Weston, CBC export sales. Marks debut of W & S before Australian tv audience.

KWK Faces FCC Rap

Milwaukee, Nov. 29.

A wholly owned subsidiary of the Milwaukee Broadcasting Co., radio station KWK, St. Louis, is subject to license revocation.

According to FCC, a hearing will be set relative to charges that KWK perpetrated a fraud on listeners in "Treasure Hunt" and "Bonus Club," radio contests.

WCBS' Grand Central 'Bubble' Studio May Take To the Road

WCBS Radio, the CBS N. Y. flagship, may go a'tenting if its current promotion at Grand Central Station works out. The promotion utilizes a 30x20 foot plastic-bubble type of portable studio, set out in the middle of the floor of Grand Central.

If the promotion proves out, the station may buy the bubble for use in remote broadcasts and other promotions, such as supermarket appearances by its stars, etc. Bubble, supported simply by air pressure, is manufactured by Airshelters Inc. and runs about $2,300. It's a bright blue-white plastic with transparent windows and the WCBS call letters emblazoned on the plastic.

WCBS set it up Monday (28) on the terminal floor, getting lots of crowds to watch the process, along with some hefty newspaper coverage. Bubble took over two hours to set up and inflate, and then Jack Sterling's morning show crew and band moved in for rehearsals that afternoon. Broadcasting started yesterday morning (Tues.), with Sterling stepping out of his New Canaan (Conn.) commuter train and into the bubble-studio.

Promotion, which runs till Friday, involves a $2,500 expenditure for the 20x30 floorspace by the station. Airshelters provided the bubble free (but if WCBS wants it permanently, it will pay for it). Other expenses involved costs of getting the broadcast equipment into Grand Central and setting up the studio inside the plastic.

'Family Classics' Double Pay Rap In AFTRA Ruling

CBS-TV has under consideration a proposal by producer David Susskind that the "Family Classics" be converted from a series of two one-hour specials on consecutive nights to a group of single two-hour shows. Reason is a ruling by American Federation of Television & Radio Artists that despite the fact that the two hourlong episodes are taped as a single unit and then edited for two showings, talent shall be paid twice at the one-hour rate.

As a consequence, Susskind must pay all scale players and below at twice the going one-hour rate, these payments extending all the way down to rehearsal time, etc. He's told CBS-TV he figures he could save upwards of $40,000 on a single two-hour property by doing it as such instead of in two one-hour episodes.

Network's high command hasn't taken up the matter yet, since it's been spending virtually fulltime on budget meetings and on the web's Thursday night problem, as well as girding for the threatened AFTRA strike. But while it may be sympathetic to Susskind's plight —as packager, he has to absorb most of the added costs, since the ruling came after he had begun production on the show—it's not likely CBS can go along with the change.

Reason is the difficulty of preempting two-hour periods for four additional shows. It's made arrangements for four more two-night 7:30-8:30 preemptions for each of the remaining "Classics," but a changeover would involve preempting four 8:30-9:30 periods to give the shows a 7:30-9:30 spread, and these preemptive rights have already been exercised for "CBS Reports" and the like.

Consequently, he'll probably have to retain status quo. Meanwhile, he won a race against the AFTRA strike when he completed taping "The Three Musketeers" over the weekend, having begun last Tuesday (22) in the face of the strike threat. Show runs tonight (Wed.) and tomorrow.

The Pattern of Continuing Shows

The following reflects (based on the new National Nielsens) what's been happening, audience-wise, to the NBC-CBS-ABC shows held over from last year and previous semesters. There are, of course, hidden factors in audience gains and dropoffs, as for instance the shifting of programs to new time slots (as with the Alfred Hitchcock series falloff in the moveover from Sunday 9:30 on CBS to Tuesday 8:30 on NBC), improved clearances for ABC, plus stronger entries on competitive networks. The figures below represent homes per average minute for the two weeks ending Nov. 6 both this year and last year.

TAP TRAVERSE FOR SPECIAL PROJECTS

Claude Traverse, a network unit manager, was made associate producer under Dick Linkroum in special programs, and his first two assignments will be "The Juliano Story," being produced by Robert Alan Aurthur, and "25 Years of Life," which Robert Bendick is making.

"Juliano" and "Life" are internal productions, and Traverse will be associate producer on both. Besides working on individual NBC one-shots, new executive Traverse will carry general administrative duties in developing special programs.

Linkroum, who has always been in on development and sales of specials, wants to expand his department's operation into more actual production work and this accounts for the Traverse appointment.

Chaseman's WBC Slot

Westinghouse Broadcasting has shipped Joel Chaseman to New York headquarters from the chain's WJZ-TV, in Baltimore, where he'd been program manager. He becomes WBC's new radio program manager.

William T. Wagner, currently program director of KTRK-TV, Houston, replaces Chaseman in the Baltimore tv post.

Tootsie Roll 750G Splurge on NBC

Tootsie Roll, reentering the network tv lists late in the season, has made a six-month deal with NBC TV which the web says will be worth just about $750,000. Tootsie out of the Sweets Co. of America has bought the equivalent of a half hour a week in the web's daytime schedule and the buy begins at the end of this month.

Bankroller is buying four alternate week quarter hours, one in each of four programs. Stanzas are the Saturday morning "Kinn Leonardo" and "Fury" and the weekday "Do Re Mi" and "From These Roots."

New CBS Radio Affils

CBS Radio has picked up a pair of new affiliates, including one former affil which tried the indie route, in KTHS, Little Rock, and WMAS, Springfield, Mass. KTHS a 50,000-watter, was a CBS affil until two years ago, when the web's Program Consolidation Plan was inaugurated; it returned with the establishment of the new network schedule this week.

WMAS affiliation was also credited to the new network schedule stressing news and pubaffairs.

WHAT GIVES AT 485 MADISON?

Still 16 Hours of Westerns

Westerns, for all their falloff in popularity over the past season or two, nevertheless continue to fill a substantial proportion of the three-network nighttime schedules. As of the moment, that proportion runs to better than 21% of all primetime programming. Total number of hours devoted to westerns runs 16 a week.

Breakdown shows NBC still with the highest proportion—web carries eight hours a week. ABC is next with five weekly hours, while CBS has trimmed down to three, its lowest in some time. On NBC, shows are "Wagon Train," "Laramie," "Bonanza," "Riverboat" (though latter is being dumped) and "Outlaws," all hours, and the half-hour "Tall Man," "Deputy," "Wells Fargo," "Westerner," "Klondike" and "Bat Masterson." At ABC, the hours are "Maverick," "Stagecoach West" and "Cheyenne" and the half-hours "Rebel," "Lawman," "Rifleman" and "Wyatt Earp." CBS has one hour, "Rawhide," and four half-hours, "Gunsmoke," "Have Gun," "Wanted—Dead or Alive" and "Zane Grey Theatre."

ABC's 'TV Heaven' Late Nite Rerun Pattern; 7G Per Minute

ABC-TV prexy Ollie Treyz, responding in kind to the affiliates who have been urging the network to keep its transmitters warmed up into the late-late hours so that they can compete with NBC-TV's Jack Paar, will notify the affils this week as to the pattern he's evolved for his projected cross-the-board "TV Heaven" series. (This is the formula for reruns of the network's major hour entries, as tipped in VARIETY a couple weeks back.)

"TV Heaven" will get a kickoff in October of '61. It will start at 11:15 p.m. (with the network servicing the affils with news and sports at 11 to bridge the gap). Into the Monday periods will go reruns of "Bourbon St. Beat"; On Tuesdays "Sugarfoot" reruns; Wednesday "Bronco"; Thursday "Cheyenne" and Friday "The Alaskans." Held in reserve, depending on their longevity as current prime time entries, will be such items as "Maverick," "Hawaiian Eye," "77 Sunset Strip" and "The Untouchables."

Network is currently involved in negotiating with the producers (Warner Bros., etc.) for 26-week rerun rights.

ABC will apply a daytime rate structure to the late-late showcasings in order to allow for per-minute sponsor participations at an approximate $7,000 rate. Although they're all hour shows, ABC will utilize them as 75-minute entries, allowing for 12 minutes of participating commercials and permitting the stations to integrate four minutes of local commercials.

'DICK POWELL SHOW' AS NBC HR. ENTRY

Dick Powell will star in pilot of a 60-minute anthology series for NBC-TV, "The Dick Powell Show," described as a "contemporary adventure anthology" which the producer-actor will host weekly and also star in one out of every three productions, is the hottest '61-'62 property on the NBC production agenda.

Four Star, Powell's company, NBC-TV will co-finance the pilot.

Johnson Wax In $17,000,000 Status As Bigtime Client

Almost unobtrusively, Johnson's Wax has become a kingsized network advertiser, with its acquisition this week of full sponsorship of the Red Skelton show bringing its total nighttime spending rate to an annual $17,000,000 in time and programs. All the Johnson money is now in nighttime and all its regular sponsorship on CBS-TV.

Wax outfit, which has shared alternate-week sponsorship of Skelton with Pet Milk since Skelton started on CBS, some six years ago, is now taking on the entire ball of wax starting in mid-February, when Pet is released by the network from its commitment. Besides the full Skelton commitment, Johnson has alternate weeks on four other shows, Garry Moore, "Angel," Ann Southern and Garry Moore.

Company has spread its billings among three agencies, retaining its longstanding relationship with Needham, Louis & Brorby but also adding Foote, Cone & Belding and Benton & Bowles. FC&B handled the deal on Skelton.

Major factor in its tv expansion this season has been its entry into the shoe polish field with a line of liquid and paste polishes in which the container also serves as the dispenser. Movein has not only occasioned more spending by Johnson itself, but has spurred competitive spending, as witness Esquire's splurge on CBS via "The Witness" and "Face the Nation."

Gitlin's 'White Papers' Giving Public Relations & Press a Going-Over

Three of NBC-TV's "White Papers" this season will concern public relations, the press and government by publicity." Executive producer Irving Gitlin sees them as interrelated topics and, like the other "WP," will be treated in 60-minute form.

The stanza on press will dissect reportage and the dissemination of news and it might ruffle some print feathers by naming names and analyzing key papers in the U. S. "Government by publicity" topic will o.o. news "sources," and the other stanza, on public relations, will be an attempt to show how influence peddlers "have an affect on the news."

First "White Paper" was presented last night (Tues.) as "The U-2 Affair." A second of these Timex-sponsored pubaffairs stanzas is slated for Dec. 20, topic undisclosed. The trilogy should be aired sometime late this winter and in the spring. Research is already underway with producer Al Wasserman supervising.

BBC's New Scot Head

Edinburgh, Nov. 29.

Sir David Milne, a leading figure in Scot national government, has been named national governor for Scotland of the British Broadcasting Corp. in succession to the Earl of Balfour, who recently resigned that office.

Appointment will run until June 30, 1962.

BRIT. ATV SKEDS YEAR-END WRAPUP

London, Nov. 29.

Associated TeleVision Ltd. the commercial web which serves the London area weekends and the Midlands on weekdays, is once again rounding up foreign correspondents for a roundttable talk this turn-of-the-year. Program, to be nationally networked and provisionally called "As Others See Us," is skedded for 11 p.m. on Saturday, Dec. 31.

The looking-back-and-forward survey has become something of an institution here. This year's effort, to run 45 minutes, will be produced by Michael Redington.

PALEY REPORTED ON THE WARPATH

To hear it told, CBS board chairman Bill Paley hardly had his bags unpacked upon his return from England last week when the big popoff came—emergency huddles over a two-day period, with three things uppermost on everybody's mind: (1) ratings are off; (2) profits are off; (3) tempers are up. This was even before the ABC coup de grace came along—the deposing of many-year champion CBS from its lofty Nielsen perch at the hands (and programs) of Leonard Goldenson-Ollie Treyz & Co.

What's going to be done about it is cause for continuing anxiety and tensions around the 485 Madison Ave. precincts, with speculation running rife. When word circulated last week of a 150,000 share sale of Columbia stock it invited immediate conjecture about a 20th floor (sanctum sanctorum) checkout. It turned out to be the late Jacob Paley's stock, but it was fresh evidence of prevailing jumpiness. (He was an uncle of Bill Paley who died recently on the Coast with his stock redistributed by the bank on behalf of his estate.)

Major concern is whether the current situation will cue a switch in program balance—more action (as championed by tv prexy Jim Aubrey) and less "CBS Reports" and sundry public affairs-information shows coming out of the news division which represents lost coin to the network. The word persists: watch the switch in the news organization.

Meanwhile frantic budget hearings have been going on designed to cut-cut-cut. No one's questioning that profits will ultimately climb again, but with Paley on the warpath there's equal certainty that there will be plenty of interim action for fast fast fast relief, perhaps even at the top of the stairs.

MAUGHAM, MARQUAND SEGS ON NBC-TV SKED

NBC-TV program chief David Levy has picked the first two entries for his much-discussed series of specials, "The Story of Love." With Leonard Blair producing and Fielder Cooke directing both, the network has scheduled adaptations of Somerset Maugham's "String of Beads" and J. P. Marquand's "Immortality Becomes Allard" for January, 1961, exposures.

Each will be an hourlong, in a Tuesday, 10-11 p.m. slot. Stephen Gethers is adapting the Maugham work for Jan. 3 showing and Irving Gaynor Nieman is revising the Marquand piece for Jan. 24 and renaming it "Honor In Love."

There are no sponsors set for the two stanzas.

TelePrompter to Close-Circuit New Hawaiian City for Kaiser Embracing Com'l, Pay, Educ'l TV

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Kaiser Industries has closed a deal with TelePrompter Inc. to install a closed circuit television network throughout the entire city of Hawaii-Kai, brand new town under construction 11 miles east of Honolulu. System evenutally will incorporate advantages of all current tv media—commercial, pay, educational—and is being blueprinted to go beyond them by delving substantially in the area of pushbutton marketing.

Henry Kaiser has assigned Eddie Albert, veepee in charge of special projects for Kaiser Industries, to oversee Hawaii-Kai's future as well as most other aspects of the city which, when completed, will accommodate up to 15,000 persons.

Albert said that, with TelePrompter deal signed Nov. 17, engineers probably are already at work surveying Hawaii-Kai prior to laying of the lines. Sometime in the future, the system also will tie in Kaiser's Hawaiian Village Hotel and his 1,800-seat aluminum dome theatre.

TelePrompter system initially will serve as a booster antenna setup, providing "finest reception, particularly color, in the world," Albert explained. The three Honolulu stations will be brought into every Hawaii-Kai home minus ghost images which could result from surrounding mountains. Live entertainment from the islands, TelePrompter specials and feature films eventually will be sent over the wires via tollvision, with one or two channels to be reserved for educational tv directed both at students and adults.

Of the six to eight channels—all of which ultimately will be used—one channel will provide home services, Albert explained, drawing pictures that are straight from Buck Rogers and "1984." Said the KI veepee: "A tv camera, for instance, will scan the shelves at a grocery market, and a housewife can push a button in her home when she sees something she wants. We'll have a central kitchen providing food for Hawaii-Kai's 11 schools, and eventually housewives will be able to order prepared meals in the same way."

Advantage of the new tv system in Hawaii-Kai is that it is being incorporated while the city is in its first stages of construction. The 6,000 acre tract already is seeing houses going up, and the main portion of billion-dollar development should be completed within three years. Albert estimated initial costs of laying the TelePrompter system at $500,000.

Albert explained that Kaiser is "eager to develop the educational aspects of closed-circuit tv. What the Hawaii-Kai project is going to do is broaden the wonderful means of communication—film and tape

Carl Sandburg Re TV

Des Moines, Nov. 29.

Carl Sandburg, lecturing at the State U. of Iowa, got in some sneak punches at radio, television and films as education. Commenting on commercials, he said the public is implored to "love beer" and implored cars to "love" a certain brand of gasoline. He said, "I would not be surprised in the future to hear of cars adoring and worshiping gasoline."

Sandburg called the movies, radio and television rivals of modern education that are "aimed at the blood not the brain." He said one western on television a month is enough—"one a month is 12 a year and any bright boy after that can write his own."

Among the readings Sandburg presented was the speech he gave to the joint session of the house of Congress last year on the occasion of the 150th anniversary of Lincoln's birth. He neglected to mention that it was televised.

Hub Robinson's 'Stage '61' as An ABC-TV Entry

Hubbell Robinson Jr., the ex-CBS-TV program chieftain who is now packaging his own shows as an MCA-TV subsidiary, will try to do for ABC what he did in the past for Columbia with "Playhouse 90," perhaps the outstanding drama prestige entry in tv annals.

Robinson and ABC have gotten together on the projection of a new 60-minute prestige series, to be done on film, for a premiere in the fall of '61. Series is called "Stage '61" (following year, depending on its success, it'll be retagged "Stage '62," etc.), and will be an anthology series which will enlist the top writers from stage, screen and tv.

Only difference in the concept vis a vis "Playhouse 90" is that it will be done in hour length, as opposed to the 90-minute form of "Playhouse" and converted to film instead of live. Otherwise Robinson plans to inject the same basic ingredients in shooting for one of the major entries of next season.

The Definitive 'Peter Pan'; Even Good for Time Capsules

By ART WOODSTONE

"Peter Pan" is the first television production in history that is being made specifically for reuse, and, because of this, may serve as the keystone of a new era in which a number of ancient and modern classics are preserved in their original literary forms for posterity. This is entirely due to the technological perfection of television taping techniques.

Film has long been able to capture and preserve stories, but because of the motion picture industry's habit of tampering with the original wording and plotting of great tales. Hollywood has not supplied any faithful record of the classics.

But now, in a great sense, television is becoming what film has never been—a permanent source for the history of dramatic literature.

Besides "Peter Pan," made on magnetic tape and in color by NBC-TV for use first on Dec. 8 and then for use again and again, there is another example of a classic whose tape might someday find its way into a time capsule. It's the National Telefilm Associates' four-hour production of "The Iceman Cometh." There is also NBC-TV's new virtually untouched version of "Macbeth."

Like "Medea" (also by NTA) and others made before it, "Iceman" was not recreated on tape for definite reuse, although now that it has been viewed so enthusiastically by critics and public alike, this exact tv reproduction of Eugene O'Neill's stage play will probably find further outlets that in the future could range from the Modern Museum to the little red school house and the ladies' club.

Once, for certain, motion pictures reproduced with diligent faith a classic. Sean O'Casey's

'Harvest' Reaps an Okay Rating But Sun. Hardly Churchill's Finest Hour

"Harvest of Shame," the Fred Friendly-Ed Murrow "CBS Reports" expose on migratory farm workers, grabbed off one of the best audiences yet for a "Reports" outing, placing second in its Friday night (25) 9:30-10.30 timeslot.

Special averaged a 16.5 Arbitron multi-city rating for the hour. In the first half, it had a 15.9 with a 25.5% share, against 21.0 for "77 Sunset Strip" and 15.6 for "Bell Telephone Hour." Second half rose to 17.1 and a 29.0% share, vs. 18.3 for "The Detectives" and 16.5 for "Michael Shayne."

Premiere of ABC's "Winston Churchill" series Sunday (27) didn't fare nearly so well, with the documentary getting a 9.3 rating vs. 21.9 for "What's My Line?" and 17.7 for "This Is Your Life."

New Developments Help Cement Anglo-American TV Relations

Anglo-American tv programming relations, long a sore spot on both sides of the Atlantic, shows signs of improving. The change isn't dramatic, but there are developments afoot which should ameliorate a situation deplored by many in the industry, both in the U.S. and Britain.

Item: Metropolitan Broadcasting bought BBC's series of Shakespearean dramas, titled "An Age of Kings," and copped Standard Oil (N.J.) to pick up the tab in N.Y. and Washington for the 15 week series. Cost to Standard Oil in time and talent was in the neighborhood of $300,000. Both deals can only help the marketing of the property in other areas.

Item: Sir Robert Fraser, director general of Independent Television Authority, in London recently rejected a bid by British producers to put an even stiffer quota on American telepix. British quota for commerical programmers now runs 13% and 10% on BBC.

Item: John McCarthy, prexy of Television Programs Export Assn., recently made a trip to Britain in an effort to ease the British quota restrictions. Whatever the concrete results in the face of pressures from British producers, at least the quota restrictions aren't likely to be tightened. Of consequence too, to American exporters is the future growth of another network of stations in Britain. Whether the new network is government or commercially operated, it will need programming, including shows of American origin.

In addition, there are other developments which should help Anglo-American relations. Independent Television Corp., the American based company now owned completely by Associated TeleVision, of Britain, is embarked on an ambitious series of Jo Stafford vidtaped specials. ITC has considerable success with a Nat King Cole special, distributed by ABC Films.

California National Productions, NBC's syndie subsid, has picked up the "Royal Canadian Mounted Police" series, coproduced by BBC. True, there isn't nightime network skein currently which had been made in Britain. But the other avenues shouldn't be overlooked either. A relatively large source of revenues for British product on tv is the features-on-tv market. J. Arthur Rank, for example, recently received a guarantee of $1,000,000 from Television Programs, Inc. for distribution of Rank pix on the American home screen.

Also there is some location shooting abroad, with British vidtape facilities in active use.

CNP Dropping Rerun Division

California National Productions is dropping its three-year old rerun division, Victory Program Sales, and will reassimilate its staff into the regular syndicated sales org.

One of the key reasons for the end of VPS is that Calnat no longer has a great stock of rerun films and the ones the syndicated organization has, have pretty much run their course. Jack Anbib, who has unofficially headed VPS since Jacques Liebenguth went back into CNP proper, will rejoin the main syndicated arm too. In the transition, it's possible that a few low-ranking staffers will be laid off.

Tightening up in this instance was ordered by Al Stern, who recently assumed the top command of CNP, which is an NBC subsidiary.

Japan's Pre-'48 Bundle

Tokyo, Nov. 29.

The Japan Broadcasting Corp. (NHK) has bought 100 pre-1948 RKO films for telecasting throughout its network.

The Government web will spread showing of the package out over four years. Titles include "Berlin Express," "Gunga Din," "Holiday Affair," "Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Top Hat" and "King Kong."

Boost for Animation In Technamation Setup

Gold Medal Studios and Technical Animations, Inc., have combined forces to form a new company to utilize a new animation process, called Technamation.

Technamation Films, the name of the new company, will utilize the new process in all film fields, including tv commercials, entertainment films and in the industrial and sales training fields. Top officers of the compay are Martin H. Poll, prexy, and Stanley L. Schwartz, exec v.p.

New process is claimed to offer a saving of one-third the amount of cells used in cell animation, as well as other advantages.

Peak 2d Quarter Net for Desilu

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Desilu Productions Inc. ran up a record net income of $322,314 for second quarter ended Oct. 29, an increase of 33.15% over the second-quarter net of $242,058 last year, it was disclosed in semi-annual report to stockholders over the weekend. Nets were equivalent to 28 cents on 1,155,940 shares of common stock outstanding and 21 cents per share, respectively. Comparable gross for two periods amounted respectively to $5,903,717 and $6,917,979.

Record for second quarter was achieved, according to prexy Desi Arnaz, despite fact that the Screen Writers Guild strike tied up the tv industry from January to June, resulting in a late start in production and a net loss of $201,397 for first three months of the fiscal year.

Arnaz reported that gross income for the six months ended Oct. 29 was $8,462,495. Profitable operations during second quarter more than offset the loss in the first period, he said, resulting in a six-month gross income of $120,917, equivalent to 10 cents per share on same number of shares outstanding. Gross income of $10,717,953 and net of $507,108, equal to 44 cents per share on 1,155,940 shares, were reported for first six months of 1959.

In his shareholder letter, Arnaz stated that he and Lucille Ball Arnaz, who own all of the firm's Class B common stock, had personally purchased the 35,000 shares of Desilu common held by Martin N. Leeds, former director and exec veepee, who bowed out of company during the second quarter.

"The financial stability and the future of your company," Arnaz declared in his letter, "are not affected by the success of one tv show. In fact, Desilu has had no financial interest in the 'I Love Lucy' series since 1956; yet our volume and gross revenues continue to increase because of three important factors:

"We have a compatible balance of business in producing our own shows; and in renting studio facilities to independent producers."

McGregor's 'Tarzans' Now in 100 Markets

"Tarzan" is swinging in exactly 100 television markets. The 21 ape man feature films, distributed by Charles McGregor's Banner Films, have been on sale for video for the past two years, but they weren't usable outside the theatrical area until this year.

"Tarzan" films (some RKO, others Metro) include all but one of the series made prior to 1949. There are also six post-'48 films in the 21-pic package.

One of the first buyers some time ago were all the CBS-TV owned & operated stations. Most recent buyers of "Tarzan" from McGregor were stations in Houston, Portland, Salinas and Rockford.

Code Chairman Cautions on Film Trailers, Post-'48s

Three major areas of concern to the National Assn. of Broadcasters Code Review Board are personal products commercials, motion picture trailers and post '48 feature films.

The concern was cited by E. K. Hartenbower, chairman of the Code Board and veepee and general manager of KOMO-TV, Kansas City, at the windup fall sessions of NAB's Fall Conference in New York this week.

He said there's been some improvement in commercials, and "our reception at the agency and advertiser levels has improved greatly. In its early days, the Code had difficulty in getting its points over to the agencies, or even getting to see top executives."

Regarding pix trailers, Hartenbower said, "Some of this stuff in the past has been exceptionally violent or overly sexy, or at best, quite suggestive."

He said that while broadcasters seek no control over what theatres show in their own areas, they must still be careful in accepting film-clip blurbs for use on the air.

"Look these offerings over with care," he told the broadcasters "If you can't do it yourself, be sure some responsible staff member does. If you are in doubt, ask your closest Code office for an opinion. You will get it fast, and at no charge."

He also advised screening of the post '48's—"This is not to discredit this material, for certainly the great percentage of it is acceptable television fare, but, remember some of it raised a few eyebrows when exhibited in the theatre."

Churchill Series In Canada TV Sale

Toronto, Nov. 29.

Screen Gems (Canada) Ltd. has just sold the English and French tv webs of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. its new series of "Winston Churchill: The Valiant Years," according to Steve Krantz, veepee and g.m of the Canadian company here.

Because of program importance, sale to the CBC will allow repeat telecasts in both the English and French languages over a period of several years, said Krantz.

Series consists of 26 half-hour programs, with narration of Richard Burton, co-star of "Camelot," and music by Dick Rogers. Via newsclips, the CBC is cooperating with the American Broadcasting Co. and the British Broadcasting Corp.

Ed Small Reviving 'T Men' as TV Series

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Edward Small's theatrical feature, "T Men," made 13 years ago and credited as forerunner of the current cycle of tv melodramatics, is being readied by Small as an hour television series for next season. Pilot will be shot after first of the year at Goldwyn studio.

Show is still to be cast with the likelihood that Dennis O'Keefe, star of the picture, may also top the televersion. Bruce Eells'

Merle Jones Bullish on Japan TV Potential on Vidpix Import

Tokyo, Nov. 22.

There should be a significant increase in the number of foreign programs on Japanese screens by 1962, according to Merle Jones, prez of CBS owned-&-operated tv stations, who also heads the web's global sales.

Wrapping up a week's visit, Jones told VARIETY, "I feel very optimistic about this market despite the present limitations. We have reason to believe that these limitations will be gradually reduced. An open market with complete liberalization of trade is not unlikely by 1962."

CBS now has more programs in Japan than any other foreign distributor. Among its 11 shows here are high-rated "Rawhide" (NTV) and "Perry Mason" (Fuji-TV). Popular too are the CBS news and public affairs programs and film clips which are subscribed to by three Nipponese networks. "I Love Lucy," a fave here for years, expired only recently.

Here with Ralph Baruch, director of Intl. Sales for CBS Films Inc., Jones paid courtesy calls on the officials of Japanese stations.

He indicated that the time may come when foreign sales of U. S. tv product will remit an income approaching the 50% mark, as has happened with theatrical pictures.

"There is that likelihood, dependent on many things," Jones said. "If the larger foreign markets for one reason or another continue on a quota system, or if they decide to install quota systems where none exists, then of course the offshore market potential will be limited accordingly."

His qualification also holds if the cost of programs in the U. S. increases to a point where it is not profitable to sell abroad.

In elaboration, Jones offered. "If it costs $50,000 to produce a half-hour film in the States and if labor patterns dictate prohibitive offshore residual payments, then no effort will be made to sell programs overseas.

"We would not withdraw those now in distribution, but we would not continue our vigorous offshore efforts just to be handling money."

In the event that overseas sales reach near the 50% mark, Jones didn't think an adjustment in program content would be required. He said, "The international appeal now of American programs is just overwhelming."

On the durable argument of dubbing vs. subtitling, Jones said, "We prefer that the program be dubbed, but we do not lay that down as a condition.

"We have found that in most instances throughout the world where subtitling has been attempted, the size of the tv screen causes subtitles to obtrude wherever you place them. And particularly in Japan, where very excellent dubbing techniques have been developed, there doesn't seem to be any need for subtitling."

Settling back into random observations of his visit, Jones said, "I've had some feeling of the progress made out here from the remote position of New York, but it's interesting to come on the

Ziv-UA 38-14 Formula On 'Miami Undercover'

Ziv-UA's "Miami Undercover" is being sold on a basis of 38 episodes and 14 repeats. Departure from the 39 and 13 formula is said to allow Ziv-UA to hold the price level in the face of rising costs. Some station execs, though, still prefer the traditional 39 and 13 pattern, feeling one less episode in a series devalues the overall firstrun strength.

For the past year, according to a Ziv-UA exec, about 6 series have been sold on the 38 and 14 pattern. New formula grew, he added, to accommodate alternate sponsors in splitting the series evenly. He denied any station resistance to the new pattern.

Ziv-UA, in the meantime, has tabulated sales in 44 markets on the series. In Cincinnati and Indianapolis "Miami Undercover" has been purchased by the Wiedemann Brewing Co. and Miami Stone Co. The Food Town Co. has signed to sponsor the skein in Baton Rouge. WDSU-TV in New Orleans is among the station buyers.

Four Star's Gross, Net Up for 1960

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

For the 13 weeks ended Sept. 24, '60. Four Star Television had a gross income of $4,215,592. The period, which covers an interval just prior to the public issuance of stock, showed an increase in net earnings that is equal to 45% of the entire previous year.

Company stated that the gross of $4,215,592 resulted in net income after provision for Federal income tax, amortization of film costs and profit participation of other ventures of $147,266. Net profit, therefore, earned 30 cents per share based on the then 480,000 outstanding shares before the recent public issue. This compares favorably to the 66 cents each share earned during the year ended June 30, 1960, or 45% of last year's total earnings. Based on the present outstanding 600,000 shares after public sale the net equals 25 cents per share.

Four Star is now producing 13 network series. They include on ABC: "Rifleman," "Stagecoach West," "Robert Taylor's Detectives," and "The Law and Mr. Jones"; on CBS-TV. "The Tom Ewell Show," "Wanted—Dead or Alive," "June Allyson Show," "Zane Grey Theatre"; and on NBC "Dante," "Peter Loves Mary," "The Westerner" and "Michael Sane."

OPTION TIME RULING HAS LITTLE MEANING

To many of the syndicators, the Federal Communications Commission ruling cuttng network option time to two-and-a-half hours in each broadcast period is purely academic at this point. There's no sign of any marked change on Jan. 1, the date the new ruling is supposed to go into effect.

As one syndie exec put it: "What's the use of having a ruling if there are no teeth to it which would affect the network-affil program structure?" All the ruling will mean, he went on, is that an affil can elect to chop off any network programming beyond the two-and-a-half-hour period. For most situations that isn't a very strong likelihood, he added.

McElrath to TeleP

George McElrath, formerly director of radio and television technical operations for NBC, has joined TelePrompTer Corp. in the newly-created post of manager, engineering planning and product control.

McElrath was head of technical operations for the NBC radio network since 1928 and, after the advent of television, was responsible for both tv and radio technical operations for seven years.

MGM-TV's Brace Of NBC Pilots

MGM will make two one-hour pilots for NBC-TV for the fall of '61. Shooting on "Cain's Hundred" and "Woman in the Case" begins next month.

Paul Monash, who worked on the early "Untouchables," will serve as executive producer on both action telefilm stanzas.

"Cain's 100," which Monash conceived, "centers around a government law enforcement agent battling syndicate crime," a Metro description which also sums up the format for Desilu's "Untouchables." "Woman" is a suspense anthology with various name femmes as the one-week leads.

Metro, with "National Velvet" (NBC) and "The Islanders" (ABC) on the air, is still working on a pilot of "Father of the Bride" for General Mills.

'Play of Week' Piles Up Some Fancy Ratings in Key Markets

In syndication, National Telefilm Associates "The Play of the Week" shows evidence of rating strength. The two-hour dramatic showcase, in a field surrounded by "bread and butter" programming, places among the top 10 syndie entries in four markets tabulated in current VARIETY-ARB's syndication chart.

The four markets of "Play of the Week" rating strength include Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Baltimore, in this week's VARIETY-ARB rundown. The highest rating for NTA's dramatic vehicle in the current charts was achieved in Pittsburgh, with "Play of the Week" on WIIC tabulating a 31 Arbitron average rating, with a 59 share, for a Sunday at 3 p.m. starting time. It ran second in Pittsburgh, beaten by "Shotgun Slade."

In other Sunday at 3 p.m. slots, in Philadelphia and Baltimore, "Play of the Week" ran fourth and third, respectively, in the ARB rating meter. In Los Angeles, the NTA property ran sixth, posting a rating of eight on KCOP. Its top opposition was "Real McCoys" on KABC, which posted a 22. KCOP slot was Thursday at 8 p.m.

In the selling area, NTA has concluded deals in two markets for a second season of "The Play of the Week." Both deals were entered into from six to eight weeks before the expiration of the present contract. Going for a second cycle are WBEN, Buffalo, and WROC, Rochester.

In the production department, vidtaping has been concluded on the following properties for this season, "Best of New Faces," "Uncle Harry," "Rashomon," and "Waiting for Godot."

Par-TV Prepping 3 60-Min. Entries

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Paramount-TV will branch out into the hour field for next season after an unsuccessful year of half-hour shows. Three high-budgeted programs embracing historical, biblical and western subjects are in the early stages of preparation. Biblical story for filming is tagged "Caravan."

Robert Rubin, veepee of the Paramount tv arm, is reported to have initiated deals for network partnership by which cost of the pilots will be financed by the web and prime time indicated. Now in Hollywood, Rubin is said to be screening candidates for two jobs —head of studio production, vacant since George Gruskin resigned, and sales head with an agency background. Among those mentioned for the studio post is Robert Lewine, presently veepee of CBS Films, who is said to be uninterested.

Paramount made six pilots for this season and sold only one, "The Garlund Touch," which is in trouble with the sponsors because of low ratings.

Showcorporation $500,000 Windfall On Post-'48 Sales

Showcorporation's package of RKO Radio Pictures post-'54's has grossed nearly $500,000 in 44 markets. Group consists of 12 pix, under the overall label of "New Million Dollar Movies."

Latest deals were with CBS o&o's WBBM, Chicago, and WCAU, Philadelphia. Other recent buyers include. WTVJ, Miami; WJAR, Providence; WFLA, Tampa; WSB, Atlanta; WOR-TV, N.Y.; KHJ, Los Angeles; WWL, New Orleans; WMAR, Baltimore; WFAA, Dallas and KMSP, Minneapolis-St. Paul.

Pix are relatively so new in the market that four of them have delayed tv availabilities. Among the pix that can be played immediately on tv are two Debbie Reynolds starrers, "Susan Slept Here," and "Bundle of Joy." Other titles include "New York Confidential" and "Tension at Table Rock."

Showcorporation, headed by Robert Manby, a former exec in RKO General Teleradio, has been acting as the sales agent for post-'48 RKO pix. To date, Showcorporation, has offered about 50 post-'48 RKO pix to the tv market, in a variety of packages. According to a Showcorporation exec, there are some 25 to 30 more RKO pix yet to be put in the tv hopper. These are the pix that still are in theatrical release throughout the country. RKO Pictures has gone out of the biz of motion picture production. In all probability, Showcorporation will get the remaining RKO pix when they're put into tv distribution.

'Chatter's World' Sales

Sterling Television has racked up a roster of sales on "Chatter's World."

Among station buyers are WNEW-TV, N.Y.; KPLR, St. Louis; WLBW, Miami; WGMB, Honolulu; KOOL, Phoenix; and all six Triangle stations.

COL, UNIVERSAL FEATURES TO CBS

Largest post-'48 feature deal was consummated yesterday (Tues.) when Columbia's subsid Screen Gems sold off a group of 275 pix to CBS o&o's for an estimated $12,500,000.

The deal, about three months in negotiations, includes 200 Columbia pictures made from 1948 through 1955 and 75 pre-'48 Universal pix. The longterm pact represents a major break in what had been seen as a logjam in the post-'48 features-to-tv market. It also represents another big bundle of pix acquired by CBS-TV o&o's, which already has the pre-'48 libraries of Paramount, Metro, et al., underlining CBS o&o's longterm "pledge of allegiance" to its feature slots.

CBS' o&o's lined up for the deal include WCBS-TV, N. Y.; KNXT, Los Angeles; KMOX, St. Louis; WBBM, Chicago; and WCAU. Philadelphia. Large group of the Columbia pix because of their recent vintage and possible theatrical reissue value, have delayed telecasting dates. Due to the delayed telecasting situation, it's understood multiple-run licensing provisions extend beyond nine years.

SG or CBS would not comment on the price. It was estimated, though, that on a per pic basis, the bundle for the five o&o's averaged about $45,450 per pic. on the basis of current market prices.

There are 15 major Academy Award winners in the Columbia bundle. Titles include "All the King's Men," "Born Yesterday," "Caine Mutiny," "Death of a Salesman," "Solid Gold Cadillac," "The Last Hurrah," "Jean Eagels," "Pfft," "The Wild One," "The Four Poster." Excluded in the deal was "From Here to Eaernity" among others.

Universal pix include "The Egg and I," "Family Honeymoon" and "Shadow of A Doubt." Sale of the U's, distributed by SG, hits pretty close to the bottom of the Universal barrel in the CBS o&o markets. SG has been releasing the Universals in bundles on a staggering system.

Robert Seidelman, SG's syndication v.p., who negotiated the CBS deal, said he has no immediate plans to move in other markets of the country, indicating a go-slow policy. CBS' buy represents the first major group buy in years. It is expected to hypo sales of other post-'48 features, stimulating opposing stations in the market to get on the post-'48 bandwagon and meet the competitive CBS cinematic thrust. Estimated price secured for the post-'48 pix in the SG deal is about twice the price secured for many pre-'48s.

Keeping Kiddies Away From 'Play of Week' Becoming a Problem

Chicago, Nov. 29.

Apparently you can't isolate a program from the kiddies merely by slugging it "adult only." The clock still sets the boundaries of what is family fare and what is not.

WGN-TV has learned that this season with "Play of the Week" and now is planning to shift the program from its early Sunday evening slot to a later hour on Monday nights to take it out of the reach of the juves. Station has been careful to advertise certain shows, such as "Burning Bright" and "Rope Dancers," as strictly for adults and reiterated the point at the time of the telecasts, but letters of complaint from parents indicate the youngsters have been getting an earful just the same.

Switch will be made Dec. 19, with the NTA syndicationer moving into the 10:30 feature film slot Mondays, and the film going into the 7 p.m. period on Sundays. Second show of "Play of the Week" here continues in the 10:30 p.m. berth Fridays.

Bulk of hourlong network vidfilm series are safe in the rating meters, apparently assuring a longevity of the 60-minute form for seasons to come.

In the first National Nielsen of significance for the new season, only six hourlong nighttime network entries fell below a rating of 17, considered the "in trouble" zone for the 60-minuters. In toto, there are 26 hour vidseries riding the three networks, with half of the total riding ABC-TV.

The "trouble ratio" for the first significant National Nielsens is below that of last year, another indication of the popularity of the hourlong form in the rating charts. This season, with a larger number of hourlong entries riding the webs, about 24% of the 60 minuters fell below the 17 National Nielsen rating. In a comparable period last year, the ratio of hourlong shows which fell below a 17 rating was 37%. This year there are 26 hourlong Hollywood headquartered vidfilm entries on the webs. Last season the count was 19.

In the specialized top 10 hourlong rating derby, there were three new entries which made it, with the remainder rating faves of the previous season. (See accompanying chart.) For the two weeks ended Nov. 6 when all the current season's shows had made their debut, "Surfside Six," ABC; "Checkmate," CBS; and "Outlaws," NBC; cracked the top 10 circle. "Wagon Train," as per usual, led the parade with a 33.9 rating and a 57.2 share of audience.

On the bottom of the rating heap were the following: "Michael Shayne," NBC, with a 14.2 rating and a 29.4 share; "Riverboat," NBC, 14.1 rating, 23.8 share; "Aquanauts," CBS, 13.6 rating, 23.0 share; "Dan Raven," NBC, 12.8 rating; 23.0 share; "Roaring 20's," 12.5 rating. 20.9 share; and "Hong Kong," ABC, 9.5 rating, 16.0 share.

"Riverboat" and "Dan Raven" have been pink slipped and will be off after their 13-week cycle. "Aquanauts" is up against that powerful "Wagon Train." Ditto, "Hong Kong." Both are safe for 26 weeks. ABC-TV is hopeful that "Roaring 20's" will build with the

FCC Aide Slaps Down Schreiber In Vidpix Inquiry

Washington, Nov. 29.

Federal Communications Commission's chief hearing examiner Monday (28) urged the commission to direct MCA v.p. Taft Schreiber and three others who balked during the Hollywood vidpix inquiry last month to cooperate or be slapped with court orders.

James D. Cunningham, who presided at the L.A. proceedings, accused Schreiber of acting "in complete defiance" of the Commission by walking out of the tumultuous Oct 21 hearing after refusing to hand over certain MCA data.

Schreiber has petitioned FCC to overrule Cunningham's directive to furnish the data and also limit the authority of the inquiry, part of FCC's network programming probe. Dick Fishell, Mary Rothschild and Betty Langley of the p.r. firm of Dick Fishell and Associates filed a similar appeal asking FCC to quash subpoenaes directing their appearance and submission of company records at the L.A. proceedings.

Cunningham attempted to refute contentions by Schreiber and Fishell that the information sought was outside the scope of the inquiry. He also hit at their arguments that groundrules for the hearings deprived witnesses of their rights to legal counsel.

He recommended that FCC order Schreiber and the Fishell reps to supply the data and, if they refuse, ask for a court order compelling their compliance.

Robert Klaeger, the indie commercial teleblurb producer, broke off negotiations with the Buckeye Corp., which for the last three-and-a-half months has been negotiating to buy out his company. No reason for the breakoff was given.

Buckeye, a holding company, controls Transfilm-Caravel, another teleblurbery. Until the Buckeye takeover, Transfilm and Caravel were rivals in the commercial and industrial telefilm production field.

Saudek, Bernstein Syndication Deal

The Leonard Bernstein specials, produced by Robert Saudek Associates, will be syndicated abroad by the Saudek-helmed production company, itself. In toto, there are 12 Bernstein specials, either on vidtape, film or kines.

Two of the Bernstein specials already have been telecast on Eurovision, those that were based in Berlin and Venice. For those two, there is the remainder of the world market.

CBS Films, in the past, had syndicated "The Best of Omnibus," culled from Saudek's "Omnibus" shows. Current move represents Saudek's first venture in the international syndication arena.

Director: John Frankau
30 Mins., Wed., 8 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

A. J. Cronin's bestseller, "The Citadel" successfully filmed in the '30's, makes an apt quarry for a tv skein. It's crammed with incident and full of popular medical shenanigans. Kenneth Hyde has carved it up into nine segments for Associated-Rediffusion, thus allowing it to hold more than twice the quantity of plot as the film version, and this opener indicated he wouldn't have any trouble filling the time.

This one installed Scottish doctor, Andrew Manson (Eric Lander), as junior partner in a Welsh village, and ably set the suspicious fears of his new patients. In the course of the half-hour, he aided and abetted a drunken specialist (Jack May) to blow up an offensive sewer, had a brush with the comely schoolteacher (Zena Walker) over a case of measles, and then contended with a perilous birth.

Eric Lander brought out the earnest dedication of the tyro, and summoned up sure sympathy. Maybe he confused seriousness with gloom, but it was a fault on the right side. Zena Walker was spirited as the local teacher, and Jack May registered as the sodden surgeon. Support from a teeming cast was fine, and director John Frankau ensured a steady, if somewhat stolid, pace.

It looked as if the propaganda implicit in Cronin's book would be largely ignored, and that was a wise move, for a lot of his strictures have no point in this day and age. "The Citadel," however, still lacked a fullness of character, for his people aren't much more than skin-deep. But the future clinical crises should fill it out. Otta.

PEEP SHOW
With Lub Luba, Mahmoud Shokuku, Mohamed Kehlorwi, Huda Shams-a-din
Producer-Director: Mahmoud Sherif
60 Mins.; Friday, 11 p.m.
Television Cairo

Lack of variety and poor camera work turned this one into a turkey when the clock struck 12. The basic revue format is a departure from the usual Arabic presentation and is a good one. It made for novel introductions and no stage waits as is customary with many revues in these parts. What the opus sorely needed was a couple of good comedy spots. And one of the many novelty acts around would have helped bolster the proceedings.

As it was the show had one ambitious production number after another. The bill opened with what looked to be a good Nipponese dance group, followed by a production piece on Arab Unity. This was heavy going after the Japanese dancers because it was loaded with everything but camels; went in for quantity rather than quality. What could have been a rouser came out as a disorganized mob scene. On the heels of this came a long, tedious piece tagged "Life of an Artist." This was a swipe at "western" ballet and the choreographer was in deep water. He wasn't familiar with the dance forms and the dancers were more used to stomping out the Dunki or executing the pretty patterns of the Egyptian dances. It was an attempt at "modern" ballet of rhythms around the world and as a consequence was as long as Casey Stengel's face when he got word from the Yankee front office.

Mahmoud Shokuku, a magician, aided by four dancing girls, was the evening's only variety act. He practiced his legerdemain to music and dancing. A nifty act.

The show closed with a "Meeting of Arabs" starring Mohamed Kehlorwi, a great singer, and one of the most delightful delineators of the art of derriere wagging around, Huda Shams-a-din. This one was beautifully staged with about 30 canes gathered in an authentic desert scene. As Mohamed sang, Huda made with a topnotch seductive dance and as always, her message came through clear and strong.

Unfortunately this scene, as well as the rest of the program, got some nightmarish camera work, the director was camera happy. He rarely held a shot more than 30 seconds, used copious close-ups resulting in a confusion of heads and tails on the home screen.

Lub Luba introduced each segment in song and dance. She had style and class. If they save her and the format, write this one off to experience and start from scratch they might have something. Bowr.

THE MADONNA WITH THE ROSES
With Jeanine Schevernels, Fritz Willems, Richard Vercauteren, Jaak van Luyth, Berthe van Hyfte, Jean Joris, Tony van der Heyden, Jan Schotmans
Producer: Dries Waterschoot
Director: Francine Bruylants
Music: Robert Stolz
55 mins., Sun. 9:05 p.m.
Flemish Television, from Brussels

Described as an operatic legend, based on a story by Bruno Hardt-Warden and Dr. Otto Tumlirz, this short opera with music by Robert Stolz unravelled on the home screen in a way rather reminiscent of the era when Gerhard Hauptmann dominated the German stage with heavy tales of thrift and thwarted love culminating in bloodshed and eternal remorse. This variation on the Romeo and Juliet tragedy, should have been marked by poetical insight and the true emotion of the "never the twain shall meet" saga. Instead, it gave the impression of watching an old silent film, the handling of dramatics—more especially in the climactic situation of father and lover slugging each other with murderous expressions as well as clumsy lyrics—was totally devoid of the subtle quality of emotion which would have redeemed this sad story.

Two redeeming features were the beauty of the Robert Stolz score and the excellent quality of the singing voices. Latter, traditionally divorced from the players' (the dubbing was well done), proved an asset and conductor, Steven Candael, used them to good avail. It was, nevertheless, the extremely tuneful score by Stolz which provided the much-needed lifebuoy that saved this production from sinking to the lower depths. There was tenderness in the long lament of the lover seeking refuge in a convent after the tragic death inflicted on his beloved and about to die himself; the beautiful duet was extremely pleasing to the ear, and it was a shame that in spite of these assets the whole production was handled with a heaviness that proved most unrewarding. Flor.

THE LAWYERS
Writer-Producer: Richard Cawston
85 Mins., Thurs., 8:20 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

This lengthy probe of Britain's legal profession was able to enlist the aid of such institutions as the Law Society and the Inns of Court, so that solicitors and barristers appeared in person to discuss their jobs, their fees, and their problems. None was named—the profession bans personal advertisement—but each spoke frankly, perhaps because of this anonymity.

Richard Cawston, who scripted and directed, made an absorbing document out of it. Film was cunningly assembled to counterpoint opinions, and to give the flavor of all aspects of legal work. There was a running story of a man whose house was damaged by treeroots from a neighboring property, and his experience was followed from his first dealings with a solicitor to his final appearance in the High Court, with a barrister briefed to argue the case. In fact, the emphasis was on the civil, as against the criminal, activities of the law. As this takes up 90% of their time, the slant added to the truth.

The program turned over the ground carefully. The curious traditions, such as having to eat a set number of dinners in the Inns of Court to qualify as a barrister, were described. The separate functions of solicitor and barrister were astutely illustrated. And it came out that, in these parts, a successful solicitor might make up to around $14,000, a star Queen's Counsel might soar to more than $56,000 per year.

Criticisms were made, especially of the difficulties of getting established in the profession. It's usual for a tyro to earn little more than cigaret money for the first few years. One young man admitted he had to send his wife out to work before he'd acquired a practice.

In fact, it was a thorough and intriguing survey. If it lacked high jinks, that was part of the plan. Otta.

CITIZEN JAMES
With Sidney James, Liz Fraser, Bill Kerr, Sydney Tafler, Ken Roberts, John Bluthal, Laurie Webb, Ivor Raymonde, Alec Bregonzi, Johnny Vyvyan
Writers: Alan Simpson, Ray Galton
Director: Philip Barker
30 Mins., Thurs., 7:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Sidney James, a long resident as the Cockney smart aleck in the Tony Hancock comedy skein, has now branched out with a series of his own. His tv character's the same—that of the fast-talking layabout, looking for the quick buck without working for it—and the same scripters, Simpson and Galton, are there to keep it in the groove.

Point of issue is whether there's sufficient resource in the James type to carry the sequence of half-hours. The opener didn't settle it either way. James has a couple of resident sidekicks, Liz Fraser as his fiancee of seven years' standing and Bill Kerr as a buddy-in-crime; neither, on this showing, gives the sturdy support that James gave to Hancock.

Idea of this one centers around the Waiters' Race, an annual event in London's Soho. James found a drunk who claimed to have run second to champion miler Gordon Pirie. So he tried to sober him up, entered him in the race, and hoped to win a fortune by backing him up to the hilt at long odds. By selling everything he called his own, he raised the stake. But the fast-runner was diverted by a bottle of champagne and didn't finish the race.

It was all good, clean fun, and it kept moving, but there were hints that James' projection of wily meanness might pall after a while. Liz Fraser was somewhat wasted as the long-suffering chick, and there seemed to be scope for building her up. Equally, Bill Kerr's role was undernourished.

Philip Barker's direction was sprightly, and the result was an average comedy half-hour, which showed promise and doubts. Otta.

FRIEDRICH HOLLAENDER ERZAEHLT
(Friedrich Hollaender Relates)
With Friedrich Hollaender, Monika Dahlberg, Edith Hancke, Tatjana Sais, Hanne Wieder, Harry Friedauer
50 Mins.; Fri.; 9:15 p.m.
West Germany TV, from Cologne

Friedrich Hollaender, 64 year old songwriter and lyricist, has been closely associated with Berlin's golden show biz era, the '20's. These were years when Berlin was a leading theatre and cabaret center, and although Hollaender was well-known locally at that time, his first international success came when he penned the score for "The Blue Angel." His "Falling in Love Again" has since become a world-wide classic and is also his most successful number. Hollaender went to the U. S. in the '30's where he wrote the scores for no less than 156 pictures before returning to Germany a few years after the end of World War II.

This 50 minute offering presented a number of cabaret singers who naturally featured Hollaender songs both old and new. It was charming, humorous, and, of course, a bit sentimental as Hollaender recalled the old days, but the maestro also added a tongue-in-cheek quality that only added to the program's enjoyment.

Entertainers included Hanne Wieder, who did a delightful parody on Viennese waltz music; Edith Hancke from Berlin, who did an oldie, "If I'm Dead" in fine fashion, Lukas Ammanoff provided an amusing item called "Filet a la Stroganoc," and Monika Dahlberg & Harry Friedauer did a number from Hollaender's last operetta. Tatjana Sais performed an old anti-war ditty for good results. Hans.

DAMASCUS NIGHTS
With Douraid Laham, Taj Batouk, Fahr Ballan, Abdul Rahman Alarchi, Yahali al Bedayeya, Fadi Helwani, Rafiq Spei, Ahmed Tajadin Sheick and the Damascus singers and dancers.
Writer-Producer: Douraid Laham
Director: Khaldoun Maler
40 Mins.; Thurs., 8:30 p.m.
Television Damascus

This was an intimate revue with the sprightliness and freshness reminiscent of the "Garrick Gaities" or "Meet the People." It had pace, humor and took an impish poke at the Damascus scene.

The producer wisely kept the show unpretentious and made the most of simple ideas. Taj Batouk scored with a heart song aided by a trio. Fahr Ballan was only fair but provided a good springboard for a production number in which Ahmed Tajadin Sheick did an Arabic Astaire routine giving the traditional dance crispness and lightness. Fadia Helwani was okay with an Italian song though the staging of her scene was not up to the rest of the show. Two more production numbers rounded out the bill, one a street-cafe scene and the other a country home scene, both with the girl-boy motif, both light and amusing.

The big surprise of the evening was Douraid Laham. He wrote and staged most of the show. He was also top banana and tied the show together with a running gag patterned on a familiar sight in Damascus—a street vendor of boiled chicken. He got good assists from Nihad Kalii, Abdul Rahman Alarchi and Rafig Spei. Laham's comedy style had the appeal of the late Willie Howard, his material, of Butterworth or Benchley. Whether he can hold this pace remains to be seen, but he's the toast of the town as of now.

Staging was imaginative and the camera work got the proceedings across effectively. Bowr.

DIE STUNDE ANTIGONE
(The Hour of Antigone)
With Luitgard Im, Maria Emo, Werner Hinz, Guenther Dockerill, Willy Trenck-Trebitsch, Helmut Peine
Director: Fritz Schroeder-Jahn
Writer: Claus Hubalek
80 Mins.; Sun.; 8:45 p.m.
West German TV, from Hamburg

Rumor has it that German stage companies weren't interested in this new play by Claus Hubalek, so he sold it to television. It would seem that the legit companies were right as this play left no special impression, although it did contain two rewarding roles and a certain amount of suspense, but that's about all that could be said positively about it.

Hubalek transferred the Greek legend of Antigone and King Creon into a modern tale. The locality became a postwar small town in Germany which was benefitting from the economic boom. Creon was the town's mayor and Antigone, his niece, was engaged to Hemon. Creon's son. The dark spot in the picture was that the town was hiding the fact that at the end of the war they had killed all the foreign laborers fearing revenge by the workers when they were freed. Polyneikes, Antigone's brother, had tried to prevent the mass murder, but Creon, the unscrupulous mayor, had killed him along with the rest and buried all the corpses in the town park. The mayhem had remained a town secret ever since.

Years later when Antigone finally discovered her brother's fate she was determined to exhume the bodies and expose the scandal, but the townfolk, unwilling to face economic ruin and perhaps jail, let Creon send Antigone off to a mental institution where her story went unheeded.

Although the play was well-meant, it lacked conviction. The improbability of an entire town's crime being kept a secret was an obvious incongruity. On the positive side, however, were the performances by the two principals, Werner Hinz (Creon) and Luitgard Im (Antigone). Hinz, a fine legit actor, was right at home with the role of the evil mayor, and Miss Im was an interesting personality with an unconventional style and looks. Other acting support was routine. Director Schroeder-Jahn did the best he could with the play. Technical credits were just fair. Hans.

British TV Followups

Showtime

Gracie Fields fitted admirably into the homely pattern of BBC-TV's Sunday night vaude show bringing her expert timing and unimpaired showmanship to a well-varied array of ditties. Strictly, of course, her voice isn't what it was, but with Bert Waller accompanying on the piano she made a hit with "Till," a number about the artfulness, sinfulness and wickedness of men, a new Christmas song, "Twelfth of Never" and more, grabbing also a plug for her recently-published autobiography.

David Nixon emceed the program, per usual, and was especially successful in an opening "Les Girls" number and some incidental conjuring. Peter Jones contributed a droll comedy item, Elizabeth Laurie came in with "Song to the Moon" in a strikingly pure voice, Dorothy Wayne rendered "Scarlet Ribbons" to her own guitar accompaniment in intense but sweet manner, and Alcetty offered assured, expert juggling. Which was about the smoothly entertaining lot, aided by one or two good presentation gimmicks and the skilled backing of The Showtime Dancers, The George Mitchell Singers and the orch directed by Eric Robinson. Erni.

The Variety Show

The Kirby Stone Four lifted clean out of the rut this stanza of the Granada TV vaude show, not solely because of talent (there were other talented performers) but because of their showmanship. In general, that's a quality that doesn't often burst through whatever line-up is on parade, due partly to a lack of atmosphere in the presentation.

But the Four projected their personalities in sparkling style, giving slick versions of "Baubles, Bangles and Beads," "'S' wonderful" and "Zing Went the Strings of My Heart" interspersed with lively gagging and excellent impressions. Runnerup for honors was James Renaux with an astonishing range of fastpaced magic.

Al Redding, from Australia, came up with an amusing vent act but wasn't strictly able to stand the camera's close scrutiny, Bud & Cece Robinson put across a couple of good terping moments, Janet Richmond was on the ball thrushing "Old Devil Moon," and Dorothy Donegan provided hot virtuoso ivory-tickling. Bob McFadden, from the U.S., was far from unamusing, especially with his impressions of cartoon characters, but his style and material weren't good for the universal yock. Gary Marshal acted as a somewhat wooden interlinker to the competently produced job, with Peter Knight and orch doing a valiant stint in the unseen background. Erni.

Face to Face

There are two counts on which this interview series scores. John Freeman, its clinical and effacing host, reveals the underlit side of a personality, and also draws out opinions that often make newspaper headlines. But in this half-hour with Simone Signoret, Freeman only achieved the first object, the talk was too cagey to be memorable.

As a woman, Miss Signoret came over good, strong and warm. Producer Hugh Burnett's closeups

LEONARD BERNSTEIN & NEW YORK PHILHARMONIC IN BERLIN
Producer: Robert Saudek
Director: William A. Graham
Writer: Bernstein
60 Mins., Thurs. (24), 5 p.m.
FORD MOTOR CO.
CBS-TV (tape)
(Kenyon & Eckhardt)

It would be only just if Leonard Bernstein, who has such a grip on the world of music, should go down in the library files of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences as the greatest electronic teacher in the first dozen years of television. Floyd Zulli and Dr. Frank Baxter are excellent and the reasons are important: they are possessed of a high level of intelligence and articulateness but Bernstein, with both of those qualities (and some bad ones too) also possesses a 100-piece orchestra and a surging personal magnetism.

And all these things came out again as the conductor, who has discovered for himself that there is both money and fun to be had as a tv lecturer, roosted in West Berlin last September to make a 60-minute program for CBS-TV and Ford, which was exposed on Thanksgiving Day. Bernstein's sophisticated theme (he can make a candy mountain out of a porous bag of chocolate ants) was that German musicians had the marvelous ability to universalize their musie, whereas composers of other nationalities were too parochial to achieve the truly international appeal of a Wagner or a Beethoven. For 25 minutes, with the usual clever support of his orchestra, Bernstein offered a dazzling dissection of this belief.

Even — especially—if he was wrong, the conductor's theme was tantalizing. And afterwards, the master of authoritarianism and the orch gave a sounding rendition of the entire First Piano Concerto (C Major) by Beethoven. Attending highschool students of East and West Berlin were enraptured, to judge by the shots of them, but they were no more enraptured than some American tv viewers, who had a chance to see the technically excellent tape made two months ago in Germany. An exciting and intrsting occasion it was. Art.

INSIDE JEAN SHEPHERD
With Jean Shepherd
Producer: Tom Reynolds
Director: Bob Eberle
Writer: Shepherd
30 Mins.; Fri., 9 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WOR-TV, N. Y. (tape)

Jean Shepherd, WOR radio's venerable one-man talk show, has made his WOR-TV preem after several delays and cancellations during past weeks. The holdoffs may have been caused by production. The half hour vidtape had the look of cautious preparation.

For this reason, the sight and sound version lacked some of the spontaneity of the radio outings, but there was still enough to indicate some good times when things get rolling. It's, by all means, something else by video standards.

Shepherd, who hates to be called a deejay, is not easily described. His rambling oral essays are not from the new school of comedy (Sahl, Bruce, Newhart et. al.), but they have the same progressive satirical slant and overcast of social comment. They also reflect an incredible recall in the bits of reminiscent narrative, and a keen, mocking eye for the trivia of life.

For his tv opening shot, Shepherd took the security of one of his more familiar and better radio turns—the saga of the Southside Chicago kid (himself) and Little Orphan Annie's Secret Decoder Pin (a mostly forgotten premium from the ancient radio serial days).

Another subject was Peter Pain, who used to stab victims with a pitchfork in the Ben Gay comic strip ads—"Our first beat poet." In Shepherd's version, motivation research kills off Pete when it's discovered he's not selling Ben Gay, but pitchforks.

Presentation was simple. Set for "Orphan Annie" was Shepherd in bow-tie and sweater next to an old fashioned radio with speaker on top. Only production effect was ghoulish lighting for the "Peter Pain" impressions. Frequent ultra-close shots of Shepherd's face were more distracting than effective.

Shepherd will continue with his Saturday and Sunday radio shows as well as the new tv series. Bill.

THOSE RAGTIME YEARS
With Hoagy Carmichael, Dorothy Loudon, Mae Barnes, Billy B. Quartet, Eubie Blake, Minns & James, Wilbur de Paris Band, Robin Roberts, Ralph Sutton, Clara Ward Singers, Dick Wellstood

NBC-TV (tape)
(Edward H. Weiss Co.)

"Project 20" and NBC came up with an interesting stanza in this affectionate flashback to the music and mores of the early 1900's. The stanza was loaded with nostalgic nuggets of early film clips and some oldtime musical numbers performed by a solid troupe of vocalists and instrumentalists. Hoagy Carmichael, himself a product of the blues tradition, handled the narration persuasively, although on occasion his script was marred by those "and then jazz came up the river" chestnuts of jazz history.

The show made nifty use of numerous old newsreel shots of America in the throes of the ragtime beat. The clips ranged from Teddy Roosevelt chopping down a tree to Little Eva doing the cooch at a county fair. Spotted throughout the hour, they were the unmistakable highlights of the show. Not so effective was the use of the still photos that were flashed on a screen behind the song performances.

The sampling of ragtime and early jazz numbers was excellently handled by a large troupe of performers. Dorothy Loudon dished up some standout vocals with "Rufus Rastus Johnson Brown," "Society Bear" and "Under the Bamboo Tree." Mae Barnes delivered one knockdown turn on "Bill Bailey Won't You Please Come Home" and 77-year-old Eubie Blake dished up some colorful ragtime pianistics. A, if not completely relevant folktune interlude, featured songstress Robin Roberts on "Careless Love," while the Wilbur de Paris combo and the Clara Ward Singers gave some standout two-beat and gospel demonstrations. But a ragtime hoofing display by Minns & James was done in strictly routine style.

NO PLACE LIKE HOME
With Rosemary Clooney, Jose Ferrer, Carol Burnett, Dick Van Dyke, Peter Matz Orch
Prod-Dir.: James Elson
Writers: Sidney Zelinka, Will Glickman
Original Music & Lyrics: Mary Rodgers & Marshall Barer
60 Mins., Thurs., 5:30 p.m.
MOHAWK
NBC-TV from N.Y.
(Maxon)

This tele projection of an intimate revue comprised surefire material for the most part delineated by a cast which knew the score and came off as grade A entertainment. Although not meant to overwhelm the viewer, "No Place Like Home" was a gentle rib of the glories of the hearth coming on Thanksgiving when many families congregate in the living room. Many of the woes of a householder were recognizable.

Cast included; Jose Ferrer, Rosemary Clooney, Carol Burnett and Dick Van Dyke, all of whom know how to project a line and carry off a tune. The writing and musical ideas presented were ingenious and ingratiating. Probably, the top comedy effort was the "House for Sale" skit in which Ferrer and Miss Clooney palmed off a delapidated structure to Carol Burnett and Van Dyke. Another good bit was the skit reminiscent of a bit from "Life with Father" in which a new maid was hired. Miss Burnett as the maid and Ferrer as the head of the household brought out the maximum humor from this bit.

The expert in song was naturally, Miss Clooney. However, the others in the cast showed up quite well in this sector. There were some clever original tunes by Mary Rodgers and Marshall Barer that had a bearing on the home theme, and some excellently staged dance numbers engineered by Rod Alexander. Sidney Zelincka and Will Glickman contributed nicely on the writing chores. Jose.

NBC's 'Best Ever' Pickup Of Turkey Day Parade; A Zingy Video Fest

Those Thanksgiving Day parades seem to be improving every year, or maybe it's the television coverage. At any rate, the NBC-TV one-hour pickup ((11-noon) of the Macy's Parade in N.Y. on Turkey Day (24) was a humdinger, the best ever. And for the few fortunate enough to watch in color, that RCA tint never looked better.

This year, only CBS and NBC used parade coverage, ABC dropping out. The CBS coverage was a 90-minute spread from three origination points, with the web's Captain Kangaroo (Bob Keeshan) tying it all together. The three-way split at 10-11:30 was devoted to the J. L. Hudson Parade in Detroit, the Gimbel's strut in Philly and the Macy's turn in N.Y.

Of the two, the NBC outing was far more satisfying: The Macy's event has become more than a parade—it's now half-parade, half-show, with such attractions as the Radio City Music Hall Rockettes and the New York Center Light Opera Co. doing fullscale turns right out on Herald Square. With NBC concentrating its full hour on the Macy show, with excellent camera positions right at the Square, the hour was a spectacular showcase.

On the other hand, despite the kidappeal inherent in the Kangaroo setup, the CBS coverage tended to be awkward. For one thing, setup called for two-way conversation between Keeshan and the CBS News correspondents covering each parade, making for a lot of unnecessary chatter and distractions. For another, each of the pickups was from the line-of-march rather than a focal point—Bob Trout in the Macy's coverage was farther uptown, and couldn't get the performances as did NBC. Finally, Campbell's Beans, which sponsored the CBS spread, laid in the commercials so heavily, live and film with leadins by Keeshan, that the entire parade spread seemed fragmented.

On the other hand, NBC's Bob Smith and Paul Tripp remained unobtrusive except for the necessary identifying commentary and the commercial leadins for Lionel and Ideal Toy, and let the show speak for itself. And quite a show too, what with the Rockettes in a fine precision hornpipe, the Light Opera group with Joe E. Brown on a "Showboat" float, music and all, Shirley Jones on a "Pepe" float as warm with goodlooking costumed kids and Miss Jones doing a charming number from the pic, plus some marvelous precision bands from high schools and civic groups Credit NBC's Bill Healion and Craig Allen with excellent camera placement and direction and producer Ed Pierce with an overall fine job. On the CBS side, the directors were less fortunate, possibly because of the difficulties of maintaining a line-of-march position. Bob Quinn and Jim Hirschfield in N.Y. and Philly did okay, but Dick Myers in Detroit had camera troubles. CBS newsmen on the parades were Trout (N.Y.), Harry Reasoner (Detroit) and Jim McKay (Philly). Chan.

HARVEST OF SHAME
(CBS Reports)
With Edward R. Murrow, David Lowe, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, others
Exec Producer: Fred W. Friendly
Producer: David Lowe
60 Mins.; Fri. (25), 9:30 p.m.
PHILIP MORRIS
CBS-TV (film)
(Leo Burnett)

That "CBS Reports" is translating itself into one of television's most effective editorial platforms for social and economic advancement is an added virtue and dimension—one that reflects immeasurably on the constructiveness and impact of so vital a medium.

Last Friday night's (25) hour presentation of "Harvest of Shame," a hard-hitting condemnation of the evils of labor camp life and the plight of the nation's 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 migratory workers, was one of the most notable in the series, a tribute to exec producer Fred W. Friendly, producer David Lowe and commentator Edward R. Murrow for their searing, searching pictorial study of the "great mass of excluded Americans." A 1960 counterpart of "Grapes of Wrath," it was a documentary written and photographed in deep anger and sorrow, as dramatically powerful as it was rewarding in its demand for a solution.

The fact that CBS chose to present it on Thanksgiving weekend was an editorial in itself. Yet the whole thematic approach was skillfully executed; all-encompassing in its treatment, as the cameras followed the downtrodden harvest pickers and their illfated children from state to state, farm to farm, supplemented by Lowe and Murrow's telling commentary and interviewing.

What it told so graphically was the story of a primitiveness more analogous to life in the Congo than in the U.S.; of migrants, even within the suburban precincts of Times Square, barely subsisting on depressed wage scales (working in the fields from 6 a.m. to 4 p.m. for a dollar a day); families of six sleeping in one-room shacks, in most instances in one bed; many living under trees or beside streams without sanitation facilities; often subject to accident and death as "packaged occupants" of trucks and buses where, as in No. Carolina, there are no standards for safety; travelling 2,000 miles for six weeks of work, returning to their Florida "base" as hungry and broke as when they started out.

It covered the story—and covered it forcefully—from all angles, from the standpoint of the crew leader many of whom fleece the migrants; the farmer who insists that the migratory worker "is the happiest, most carefree of all people"; a despairing Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell hamstrung by an indifferent Congress, or the futile attempts to organize a people "who have no lobby and are excluded from legislative halls."

And finally Murrow's desperate plea that an aroused citizenry force Federal legislation to protect the migratory worker from further exploitation and make his lot and life a bit easier.

The "Harvest of Shame" was one of the most important programs of the season, a needed indictment of a blight on the American scene. Rose.

WINSTON CHURCHILL — THE VALIANT YEARS

Writer: Victor Wolfson
Composer: Richard Rodgers

ABC-TV (film)
(McCann-Erickson)

Designed as ABC-TV's biggest (and certainly most widely publicized) thrust into the area of public affairs programming, the first in the 26-episode series of "Winston Churchill—The Valiant Years" premiered Sunday night (27) in the 10:30-11 p.m. period. There is no quarreling with the network's intent. But one can quarrel with the initial impact of the Churchillian cavalcade.

The 26-week series is based on Churchill's six-volume memoirs "The Second World War." The production credits are impressive, Richard Burton speaking the author's prose (and there's an unusual ring of authenticity about it); Gary Merrill doing the narration; Robert D. Graff as executive producer; Ben Feiner Jr. as producer; Victor Wolfson as the premiere stanza's writer and as the topper an original score composed by Richard Rodgers and conducted by Robert Emmett Lolan, the musical Robert Emmett Dolan, the musical

These, then, were the strictly pro components as Chapter One unfolded "The Gathering Years" spanning the pre-World War II period of the '20's as a brooding Churchill inveighed against British apathy while the Hitler aggressions mounted. A broad, ominous, shattering canvass, but unfortunately so broad and so shattering in all its meaningful ramifications, that to telescope it into a half-hour (minus time out for commercials) of quickie vignettes diffused its content and lessened its impact.

Add to this the fact that, for all the quality of the film clips, stills and new footage (and there's no denying the exemplary care with which they were assembled), it was a twice-told, twice-pictorialized recap of history. One kept hoping and searching for that little added dimension, either in treatment, probing or visual documentation, that would stand it apart from previous Churchillian sorties (as on "Twentieth Century" or the more ambitious "Project 20" full hour documentation), but they were elusive items.

The viewer followed the "gathering storm" as Germany became a veritable arsenal; Hitler and Mussolini joined in the Rome-Berlin Axis; Chamberlain humbugged with his way through "peace with honor" and the succession of bloodless conquests of Austria, Prague, Poland to the ultimate British declaration of war and the fadeout "Winston Is Back." Slick capsule history-while-you-wait, a panorama in a hurry, but all conveying "we have seen this before."

There are 25 installments to go and a lot Churchill history to be told. A little less frantic pace, allowing for a more probing, analytical documentation and "Valiant Years" could yet fulfill its intentions.

Rodgers' score was unobtrusive almost to the point of the viewer (and listener) hardly being conscious of this singular musical dimension. Rose.

FACE NEW YORK
With Ron Cochran, moderator; Sen. Thomas J. Dodd, guest; Murray Davis, Bill Leonard, Carey Cronan
Producer: Carl Gadd
Director: Robert Goodman

WCBS-TV, N. Y.

As its every-third-week participation in CBS-TV's "Face the Nation" pattern, WCBS-TV, the web's Gotham flagship, is airing "Face New York" as a spotlight on local issues and personalities. The premiere edition was highly disappointing.

There ought to be some sort of point of view developed by producer Carl Gadd, moderator Ron Cochran and the news panel toward the goals of the program, this to be reflected in both the choice of a guest and the type and manner of questioning. The development of a news story and the enlightenment of the local public on issues vital to the area should

The Play of The Week

After two weeks in the tragic groove with Eugene O'Neill's "The Iceman Cometh," this series has switched to a comic grimace with "Highlights of New Faces," a culling from Leonard Sidman's 1952 and 1956 Broadway revues. "Highlights" is unmistakeably "entertainment" in the more recognizable video pattern and audiences will no doubt be struck by the similarity between this revue and the conventional tv variety offering.

There are, however, differences. Designed for the Broadway stage, "New Faces" assumes a more daring posture in its writing than a regular commercial show would risk. The skits are determinedly outrageous and give a sophisticated edge to this show.

A couple of the skits still stand up solidly. Mel Brooks' "Death of a Salesman" spoof with Paul Lynde as the neurotic pickpocket, Alice Ghostley as the mother and Ronny Graham as the son, sparkled brilliantly. Graham's takeoff on a southern novelist was also sharp, while Lynde's acting out of a Charles Addams' cartoon idea was funny in a grisly way. In fact, about a half-dozen of the sketches were funny in the same way.

The musical numbers had a random quality. Miss Ghostley's "Boston Beguine" and June Carroll's "Guess Who I Saw Today" scored strongly; Robert Clary delivered "Lucky Pierre" infectiously while Inga Swenson impressed nicely on "Love Is A Simple Thing." There were, however, too many routine numbers not distinguished either for point of view or performance. This was particularly true of the ensemble choral and hoofing numbers which were strictly old hat. Herm.

Chevy Show

Dinah Shore's relief project headed by Janet Blair put on a bright and witty original musical on Sunday's (27) segment of the Chevy Show. It was a workman-

One Network's Family

This is the season traditionally given over to family reunions. Before the year is out, rumor hath it, even Bill Bailey may be coming home, and you know how long they've been trying to get him to do that.

But one get-together that wasn't rumor—we have the press clippings to prove it—was the annual gathering in Manhattan earlier this month of representatives from NBC's independent affiliates all over the country.

Meetings between affiliates and a network are not always bursting with sweetness and light. As in so many family conclaves, there's frequently a complaint here and a squabble there—sometimes to advance a valid argument and sometimes just to keep things lively.

However, when there's lots of good news to spread about (as there certainly has been for the NBC family this year) the atmosphere can be one of undiluted cheerfulness and reciprocal admiration. Right? Right.

We were delighted to talk to the affiliates about NBC's emergence as the acknowledged leader in the news and public affairs spheres.

Nor did it take much coaxing for us to report that we now have more sponsored hours in our TV schedule than either member of the competition, or that we can now lay claim to almost half of all the commercial time booked on network radio.

IF THE AFFILIATES felt a sense of personal pride as they listened to this record of achievement, they had every right to, for none of it would have been possible without their support.

NBC affiliates share more than our programming and our revenue. They share a broadcasting philosophy and tradition of prestige. They know that network radio started with NBC. They know that in most communities throughout the land, it was NBC that introduced television to the public. Above all, they know we are devoted to the highest standards of program balance—to a broad-gauge service rather than a narrow rut of offerings.

This credo won the blessing of the affiliates in a resolution adopted at the meeting. They also had timely praise, incidentally, for our leadership in news and public affairs, calling it just "one of the outstanding reasons for the genuine pride each of us feels in our affiliation with NBC."

Affiliates, of course, have a broadcasting responsibility of their own, an obligation no less important than that of a network.

"Indeed," as they were reminded by NBC board-chairman Robert Sarnoff at the meeting, "it is the stations of this country that will determine whether television goes up or down; for only through them can the public get its programming, regardless of the source."

A station, we might add, shows the stuff of which it's made, not merely by its choice of network affiliation, but by its initiative in creating and producing programs of its own.

One of our southern affiliates, for example, literally brings hay balers, tractors, cotton pickers and other farming equipment into the studio just before and during planting and harvesting time to teach its farmer-viewers the best ways to use modern agricultural machinery.

At a station in a southwestern state that's subject to violent fits of weather—the state, not the station—two professional meteorologists are on hand to interrupt any program whenever tornado or thunderstorm warnings are called for.

Another NBC affiliate spent two years preparing a lovely, color-documentary on life in a local convent. Outside footage for this remarkable telecast was handled by a station cameraman, while interior scenes were shot by a nun who'd never before worked a movie camera.

At still another of our affiliates the news-covering facilities have become so speedy that the city's fire department (their suspenders understandably red with embarrassment) have requested the station's on-the-ball cameramen to refrain from showing the fire trucks arriving at the scene of a fire.

We like to think that these examples reflect the character of the network with whom these foresighted managements have chosen to align themselves.

WHEN NEXT YEAR'S MEETING with the affiliates rolls around, there should be even further glad tidings to exchange.

By that time, for instance, we expect current programming plans—which already include an inventory of 17 new entertainment shows—to be adding impact and audience to television's most diversified schedule. In addition, there'll most certainly be an expansion of NBC color productions, which were extended to more than 1,000 hours for the year of 1960.

And our news department, undoubtedly spurred to even greater heights by the excitement always generated by a new Washington administration, will most probably have walked off with any award that isn't nailed down (and maybe even a few of those).

As for what our affiliates may bring off on a local programming level during the next 12 months, who knows? Perhaps, at this very moment, one of them may be embarrassing the area's policemen by televising their arrival at the scene of a hold-up. A city could lose more police chiefs that way.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimun of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U.S.

Independent Television Corporation
488 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Walt:

We want you to know how pleased The Curtis Publishing Company is with the current sales report on "Best of the Post." Independent Television Corporation is making wonderful progress in selling this series.

Your sales success justifies our faith that a series derived from some of the best material written for THE SATURDAY EVENING POST would have the confidence and receive the support of television broadcasters, sponsors and audiences all over the country.

ITC has proved beyond doubt the acceptability of dramatic half hour anthology programing when it has fine writing and quality production of the caliber of Best of the Post.

Sincerely yours,

Bob

REM/vh

Thank you, Mr. MacNeal...and our sincere sponsors who have all helped us to bring to of the season"—the "BEST OF THE POST"

"BEST OF THE POST, a series of stories with a great deal of quality as to acting, writing and production...a film anthology based on fiction from The Saturday Evening Post, the collection appears to be several notches above the average television series."

—Fred Remington, Pittsburgh Press

"...an unusual amount of production value not often found in a half-hour film series..." —Radio-TV Daily

"...made an evening in front of the television set worthwhile. Such excellence. Judging from the opener, BEST OF THE POST is one of the best."

—Barbara Tiritilli, Chicago American

"Whichever network executive snubbed this series will have a blushing face more vivid than the color in which the series is produced if subsequent episodes march the overall excellence of its initial anthology." —Hollywood Reporter

"BEST OF THE POST" arrived Saturday evening on Channel 7 (WABC-TV) in an impressive fashion.... indicating there's talent being used wisely in television despite many signs to the contrary ...well written, directed and performed and, above all else, and quietly, it bore the mark of intelligent hands..."

—Jack O'Brian, New York Journal American

"expensive sets, costumes and technical work and splendid cast...befitting such writers as James Warner Bellah (who wrote and did teleplay for debut episode 'Command')." —Cecil Smith, Los Angeles Times

"Superbly played...chalk up another one for WGN-TV." —Chicago Tribune

"BEST OF THE POST" will be a formidable competitor in the syndication sweepstakes." —Variety

"destined to be one of the highlights of the season..." —Hollywood Variety thanks, too, to the stations and television "one of the highlights

VARIETY-ARB FEATURE CHART

VARIETY's weekly feature chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau covers one market. Each week the 10 top rated features for the one market will be listed.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature and audience composition, i.e., a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained.

In one afternoon, KVAR, Phoenix, buys Warner's Films of the 50's; signs sponsor at double the rate

November 17

1 P.M.—New York — Dick Lewis, Pres., KVAR, Phoenix, and Bob Rich, V.P., General Sales Manager, Seven Arts Associated, conclude negotiations for purchase of first release of Warner's Films of the 50's.

November 17

4 P.M.—Phoenix — Tom Mitchel, KVAR sales representative, signs Carl Petralia, V.P., General Manager, Fletcher Jones Chevrolet, to full sponsorship of 25 of the Seven Arts feature films for two runs on the company's 3-year-old Thursday-Friday 11 P.M. "Showcase" ... at twice the previous rate.

Says Bob Vache, Program Director, KVAR, "This fast sale was wonderful but maybe the most profitable angle for us is in the fifteen top-notch features we'll use as spot carriers. The twenty-five Fletcher Jones selected were tops for their particular "Showcase" requirements. But with a quality package like this, they could have picked any twenty-five and still left us a gold mine of spot carriers.

"In the past, we'd be lucky to find 30% of the features in a film package that were really good TV attractions. A lot of the rest we'd never show. But with the Seven Arts package 100% are features with real audience pulling power."

Warner films of the 50's...money makers of the 60's!

It's Perspiration, All Right, But Is It What Greeks Had in Mind? —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

There's honest sweat on Madison Ave. after all. In fact there are three varieties of it, and Ogilvy, Benson & Mather has "affidavits up to the arm pits" as proof.

The real perspiration is courtesy of Bristol-Myers' Ban deoderant, and in no small measure due to the Federal Trade Commission's heat this year on tv commercial production techniques.

This year's Ban tv pitch features three greatly magnified droplets of perspiration dripping, from hypodermic needles. It's real sweat, extracted from the glands of real people ("Models?" "No, Sweaters.")

Each droplet represents a distinct variety of perspiration (Ban checks them all, natch). The trio was delivered to the agency in micro-pipets, sealed at both ends, by a pathologist—"the nation's number one authority on sweat," as OB&M production man Chet Maxwell puts it.

"Technically, it was a real sweat," says Maxwell. The droplets measured 1/16th of an inch in diameter, and were commenserably difficult to shoot.

There was another problem. Of the three varieties, emanating from heat, exercise and nervousness, the latter had to be extracted from glands inside hair follicles. There's an ugly rumor along Madison Ave. that the agency gave up and went to water for old "nervous."

Not a chance, says Maxwell. "It is hard to get pure—you can always get it mixed, like a highball—but we got it."

Was it worth it? "Oh, yes. There are very vivid, visual differences, from cloudy to crystalline."

Anyhow, the agency doesn't have to sweat out FTC action. Ban will be remembered as the product whose spot tv blurbs a year ago enriched the national treasury of commercial culture with views of the armpits of Greek statuary—"in each mature male and female." etc. FTC laid off because the federal agency doesn't have jurisdiction over taste. But the National Assn. of Broadcasters' code folk suggested that perhaps body odor was not what the Greek sculptors had in mind in their ageless works. Copy was changed, but the statues remained; and sales, incidentally, boomed.

Sound Success

There's more jingle in jingles than a lot of people think. Willis Schaefer, who early this year established Madison Ave. Sounds jingle firm, will gross $100,000 by year's end.

Schaefer, who stepped out on his own from Music Makers, has knocked off ditties and arrangements for 29 advertisers. The scoring ranges from mild hip to mock langhair and erzats country-western. Whatever it is, he says, "I stay away from the jingle-jangle stuff like you hear with Mr. Clean, for instance."

Schaefer also goes in for unique instrumental groupings that give the product—not the arranger—an identity. He handpicks the vocalists and musicians and directs recording sessions himself.

Although he has the scorer's electric piano at his elbow, Schaefer can create and arrange off the top of his head. He got one jingle score while riding the subway. Basic beat was the rhythm of the train. He has a music masters from Northwestern U. and has done scores for tv shows and personalities, including Roger Williams, Roy Hamilton, Julie Wilson, Skitch Henderson and Sid Caesar, Phil Silvers and Max Liebman specials. He could no doubt make it in the pop music field, but that's the hard way. "There's too much money in jingles." He gets $1,000 a minute—of music, that is.

Clients have included U. S. Steel, Sterling Salt, Los Angeles Times, Pepsi-Cola, Vicks, Pan Am Coffee, Lucky Strike, B. F. Goodrich, Dove Soap, Post Cereals, Ivory, TWA, Pepsident, Duncan Hines, Reynolds Wrap, Listerine, Pontiac, Westinghouse and others for both radio and television.

Up and down: John Murphy, former veepee of tv-radio production at Kenyon & Eckhardt, is now exec producer of the commercial and industrial divisions of Filmaster.

Chi Agencies

Chicago, Nov. 29.

The growth of ad agencies in the midwest is credited by James Beach, ABC-TV viceprez in charge of central division sales, to the effectiveness of "Grass Roots" thinking that manifests itself in advertising as a no-nonsense, "direct, clean approach" as opposed to overcuteness. To a gathering of Adverising Federation of America in Madison, Wis., last week, he cited the successful tv campaigns of Kelloggs, Dial Soap, Elgin Watch Co., and Kleenex as illustrations.

He noted, however, that the geographical Grass Roots no longer exists, since "through television, an inevitable sophistication has taken place which has effected a revolution in our concepts of marketing. The Missouri farmer's wife and the Boston apartment dweller are sensitive to the same stimuli and interested in the same improvements . . . The emphasis is now on reaching people, not areas."

The physical Grass Roots may be a thing of the past, Beach said, but Grass Roots vision, that articulates itself as "earthy common sense," has been responsible for the burgeoning of the advertising industry in the midwest. In Chicago alone, he pointed out, local agencies had billed $200,000,000 in 1945. Today they account for $900,000,000. On a smaller scale, but on a parallel, cities like Detroit, Cleveland, Minneapolis-St. Paul, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, New Orleans and Omaha have experienced similar growth, Beach said.

25 Years Ago This Week

(From VARIETY Nov. 27, 1935)

Ozzie Nelson was sending out hundreds of his recordings to radio stations cuffo, despite the opposition of the National Assn. of Recording Artists, which insisted that stations compensate performers when they played their disks. Nelson took an opposite tack, maintaining the free spins constituted invaluable publicity and plugs for him and his band, particularly helping one-nighter business.

NBC embarked on an "uplift" campaign, stressing educational and cultural programming. Margaret Cuthbert was upped to head a Women's Activities Dept. for special femme shows; educator Stanley High was hired to push cultural shows, and several promotional adjuncts were set up, including a listing magazine to highlight the cultural stress.

The three Atlanta dailies put a virtual freeze on the activities of radio publicists, cutting all publicity stories and eliminating all commercial referenees in program listings. One exception was the Journal, which owns WSB. It printed full billing for each sponsor on the station, down to the Bulova time signals, besides expanding its radio column.

FCC held hearings on a petition by AT&T and RCA to install an experimental coaxial television cable between N. Y. and Philadelphia. But the hearings expanded to investigate allegations of secret agreements between AT&T and RCA to gain control over the entire television industry.

T.A.M. Craven was named chief engineer of the FCC.

National Assn. of Broadcasters warned members against replying to questionnaires sent them by a mysterious Oriental Radio Service, located in Manchuria. Warning went out after Naval Intelligence got interested in the queries.

First practical demonstration of tv-telephones got underway on the Coast as a promotional feature at the United Artists Theatre in L.A. House set up booths equipped with tv screens for patrons to try the talk-see gimmick.

Vaude-on-a-shoestring was the latest gambit to keep the live acts alive, with smalltown units touring the sticks with a total nut of $150-a-day. Salaries ranged from a high of $75 a week for the comics down to $20 a week for the chorines.

With the Station Reps

Importance of network affiliation in the numbers game is getting close attention in Salt Lake City.

In September, KUTV and KCPX switched affiliation with ABC moving over to the latter and NBC to the former.

KUTV had slightly dominated the rating picture with its ABC affiliation. Both stations were naturally interested in seeing what developed with the web switch, and a special ARB study in advance of the regular November report was ordered, covering the period from two weeks after the switch through October.

In this first report, at least, any audience switch is barely perceptible, but KUTV picked up a fraction of a point and held its slight edge in the overall average.

For the seven-day week from 9 a.m. to midnight, KUTV had a 34.8 average against 34.4 for May; KCPX dropped from 33.7 to 33.4; and KSL-TV, the CBS affiliate, dropped from 32.6 to 30.6.

What the story will be in later reports with ABC's emergence as a real force in the nighttime on the Nielsen national rundown, remains to be seen.

At any rate, isolated as it is, the Salt Lake market presents a particularly interesting study in the three-station setup. Via boosters, the stations cover all of Montana and poke into areas of five other states — Nevada, Colorado, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana. Transferred to New York, the signal area would reach out west nearly to Pittsburgh, east to the other side of Boston, south to the periphery of Albany and south to the outer coverage area of Greenville, S. C.

IN SAN FRANCISCO . . .

William B. Decker, station manager of NBC's Chicago o-and-o, WMAQ, has been transferred to Frisco to become general manager of network's o-and-o KNBC. Decker takes over from KNBC station manager George Fuerst, who's been ill. He's taking a leave of absence and checking into Mayo Clinic for possible surgery. Switch of Decker to Frisco has prompted local speculation that NBC may tag him to run KTVU, Channel 2, if and when FCC okays sale of independent to the network. Decker, 44, came up through NBC-TV spot sales, was sales manager almost two years at NBC's WBUF-TV, Buffalo, until that UHF was sold, and then was director of tv sales for more than a year at NBC's WNBQ-TV, Chicago, until he moved over to WMAQ . . . Max Weiss and associates took over management of Franklin Mieuli's KHIP-FM, which therefore spreadeagles the Weiss Bros. into three aspects of Frisco show biz—they own and operate Fantasy Records and the Blackhawk, pioneer Coast jazz spot, too. Only change thus far planned for KHIP is to increase power from 40,000 to 80,000 watts, pending FCC okay . . . Deejay Don Sherwood's nightly KTVU show folds mid-December and he'll return to tv—still on KTVU—in January with a once-a-week format.

Radio Reviews

A LOOK AT THE SOVIET ECONOMY
With Bill Downs, Dr. Herbert Stein, Dr. Leon M. Herman, Prof. Gregory Grossman Producer: Normin Gorin
25 Mins., Fri., Nov. 18, 9:05 p.m.
CBS, from Washington

CBS News grabbed an exclusive on a timely subject with this roundtable discussion on the Russian economy featuring three of the six American experts just returned from a study of the Soviet (Russian experts conducted a similar study of the U.S. economy on an exchange agreement).

The broadcast (18) was aired a day after the U.S. economists filed their reports at the semi-annual meeting of trustees of the Committee for Economic Development in Washington.

With CBS news correspondent Bill Downs were Dr. Herbert Stein, director, research division, Committee for Economic Development; Dr. Leon M. Herman, Soviet Affairs division, Library of Congress; and Prof. Gregory Grossman, department of economics, U. of California.

While the discussion would have been more interesting with a larger number of specifics on the Russian economic scene, it did manage to clear the air via a general picture of Soviet progress and what the challenge means to the U.S. The experts were in agreement on all points raised, including: although Soviet industrial production is currently only 40% of U.S. output, it's significant that they are even in military power, and giving the U.S. a lot of trouble in aid to underdeveloped countries; there's a new managerial class in Russia similar to the American upper-middle class, right down to conservative attitude; while Soviet education does emphasize engineering and science, the tendency is to narrow specialization; and, in the overall, "we should realize we are in a very, very tough game with the Russians, very, very tough race, extremely tough," as Prof. Grossman put it. Bill.

YOUNG BOOK REVIEWERS
With Marian E. Shelby, moderator; others
Producer-director: Vera Eikel
25 Mins.; Sun., 9:05 a.m.
WMCA, N. Y.

Carson McCullers' play, "The Member of The Wedding," was the subject of a lively, stimulating discussion Sunday (27) morning on WMCA's, N. Y., "Young Book Reviewers" program.

The high school students showed some keen insights, talked freely of their feelings about the characters and the many hued themes of the play. Perhaps one reason they were so resplendent in their analysis was that the play concerned the pains of growing up, a subject which they could easily identify with. Many of the remarks showed a maturity way beyond the high school level, a ripe richness, in fact, possessed by too few adults.

Mrs. Marian E. Shelby served excellently as the moderator. Another guest was George Freedley, curator of the N. Y. Public Library's theatrical collection. Freedley lent some personal recollections of the authoress to the proceedings. Horo.

Friendly & Murrow: Ad Writers

If Ed Murrow and Fred Friendly confine themselves to grey flannel in the next few weeks, don't be surprised. They've taken to calling themselves "the lowest-paid copywriters in the business," though their remuneration from their more orthodox activities puts them in the upper strata.

Fact of the matter is that they've begun writing commercial lead-ins for "CBS Reports." Friendly started it in the "Money and the Next President" outing a few weeks ago, when he pointed out to sponsor Philip Morris that its commercials, produced for spot and other network telecasts, seemed too abrupt a change of pace on "CBS Reports" and that the institutional and prestige values of the show weren't being pressed to their full advantage. He proposed to the sponsor that he and Murrow sit down and write a couple of lead-ins which would frame the cigaret "sell" properly within the mood and context of the program itself.

Friendly and Murrow proceeded to write two such lead-ins, both of which were accepted by Philip Morris. In essence, they pointed up the sponsor's belief in the importance of the subject of the show, stating (paraphrased) that "it's America's business. But now, if you'll pardon us for a moment, we'd like to tell you about our particular business, the manufacture of fine cigarets." Commercials followed.

Pair then wrote another lead-in for one of the blurbs in Friday's (25) "Harvest of Shame" special on migratory farm workers. They're doing 'em gratis, hence the "lowest-paid" tag. But they figure the lead-ins are important to the program and pay off in goodwill for the sponsor as well.

CBS 'Eyewitness' In Two-Ply Coverage For More Flexibility

CBS News is beginning to double-team its news coverage for the Friday night "Eyewitness to History" series. Idea is to cover two major stories during the week, then select the hottest of the two for the Friday night half-hour, even if the other has to be scrapped entirely.

On Monday (28), the network dispatched two news teams for this Friday's (2) show, one under narrator Charles Kurault to New Orleans to cover the integration story there, the other under co-producer Ernest Leiser to Caracas to cover the Venezuelan rioting.

Footage from both sources will be worked and edited right up to Friday afternoon. At that point, exec producer Leslie Midgley will choose between them. The loser may not find its way to the air thereafter, although it's conceivable some of the footage could be salvaged in the event of a subsequent flareup in either of the two areas.

New policy of flexibility was made evident a couple of weeks ago, when the show scrapped a half-hour on the Japanese elections in order to do a two-subject show on the initial New Orleans flareups and on the closeness of the election. Last week's stayed on schedule with the story of the U. S.'s gold problem.

Zenith's Extra Divvys

Zenith Radio Corp. directors voted two extra dividends of 50c each Monday (28), in addition to the regular quarterly dividend of 40c, bringing total divvies for the year up to $2.60 a share. Year's total is the same as in 1959, when company declared two specials of 65c each.

One of the specials, plus the quarterly divvy, is payable Dec. 20 to holders of record of Dec. 9. Second special is payable Jan. 27 to holders of record Jan. 6.

WHOM Primer On Spanish Market

"New York is the largest Puerto Rican city in the world," declares a research promotion study being distributed this week to ad agencies by Gotham's fulltime Spanish language radio station, WHOM.

The report covers the distribution of New York's Spanish population and analyzes the group's customs and living habits, buying power and the importance of the Spanish language. Radio and tv listening and viewing also are covered.

According to the report, there are 725,000 Puerto Ricans and another 200,000 persons from other Spanish-speaking countries in New York. Median age of the Puerto Ricans is 23, and, the study points out, the needs of young immigrant families exceed the needs of the established families.

On WHOM specifically, the study backgrounds Charles Baltin, veepee and sales manager, and program director Ralph Costantino, "a key figure in foreign language radio for more than 20 years."

Pictured are eight air talents, several of whom were familiar voices to New York's Spanish population before settling in America.

The 5,000 watter is "the voice of La Prensa, the first Spanish language newspaper in New York." The link with the newspaper, says the study, is important in pubservice projects and program promotion.

All New York's Spanish families listen to radio, says the study. Listening to English-speaking stations is a burden, because most of the immigrants understand the written word easier than the spoken. A third indicated in a study that they listen to English-speaking stations, but the prime motivation is to learn the language. Spanish music is probably the most important pull in Spanish radio.

While two-thirds of the Spanish families own tv sets, 75% indicate restricted viewing because of language difficulties. Sports is the big draw for tv, but the viewers must turn to Spanish radio for the sports picture at home.

'International Zone,' UN Series, To Bow

"International Zone," produced and emceed by Alistair Cooke, will debut Dec. 12 on NBC's Manhattan television outlet. It is being offered around the U.S. as part of the plot to help the United Nations, engendered by the U.S. Broadcasters Committee some time ago. Chairman of latter is Tom Shull, of the Storer group of stations and vice-chairman P. A. Sugg of NBC.

Under the letterhead of the committee U.S. stations are being urged to schedule the filmed programs. Stations retain the prints for repeats, if desired.

Victor Borge's 'Special' Brings Fun to Viewers

By BEN GROSS

Victor Borge, the comic Dane who has a way with the piano, brought his long-waited special to ABC-TV (9:30 to 10:30) last night. Highlighting a premiere-filled evening, he offered a blithesome hour of brittle foolery and lilting music.

As usual, Borge's funning gravitated between the clever and the corny; but, at least, his comments and sight gags had some touch of novelty. And, as always, there was the star's piano playing. He is a true artist of the keyboard, as he demonstrated in his performance of Rachmaninoff's "Variations on a Theme of Corelli," his version of Grieg's Piano Concerto and in a comedy duet with another fine pianist, Leonid Hambro.

Other enjoyable items of the show were the Japanese and American songs of the famous Nipponese singer Izumi Yukimura. She has a great deal of artistry. Another feature was Mike Wallace's "interview" with the composer-pianist Franz Liszt (Borge), a skit based on a darned good idea but which wasn't funny enough.

October 10th

The entertainment peak of the week was Thursday night's Victor Borge special. It was a delightful melange of comedy and music, with an occasional so-so spot; but, on the whole, a sparkling hour. Especially when Victor displayed his artistry at the piano (ABC-TV).

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

THE VICTOR BORGE SHOW

The highly stylized impishness of Victor Borge, complemented by his fine piano artistry, was an display last evening for this unique performer's only appearance of the season. It was a variety hour that hit some hilarious high spots and a few dead ones, but never suffered from lack of imagination. (ABC-TV, 9:30-10:30.)

For instance, Borge's "Person To Person" satire as Franz Liszt being interviewed by Mike Wallace was one of the truly funny and more creative comedy sketches of the season. It was climaxed by an equally zany four-handed rendition of the Second Hungarian Rhapsody which also brought in the talents of Philharmonic pianist Leonid Hambro.

Nor has Borge ever been funnier than last evening with his far-fetched whimsical pleasantries such as the one of the cat which died and left all his money to a little old lady.

NEW YORK JOURNAL-AMERICAN

JACK O'BRIAN SAYS:

VICTOR BORGE convened his first lunatic spectacular last night in ABC-TV and it was a dandy. Its contents varied in hilarity—the bullfighter-pianist sketch was too long, and unsatisfactory not simply because of its length, but because it got clumsy, gimmicky and tiresome . . . On the other, funnier hand, a wild, mad sketch about Franz Liszt in the latter part of the show was too short—not in time, only because it was a howl all of its length, which may even have been longer than the musical bullfighter gambit.

The show boasted Borge's deceptively offhand comic touches, whimsical passing comments, wonderfully silly twists on literal phrases and notions, and if the physical production seemed a bit raffish, hurried and ill-conceived at times, the comedy content was good, the writing funny, the Borge personality dependably gifted.

Victor's main guest was Izumi Yukimura, on loan from the exhibition of Japanese art at the Latin Quarter, an exceptionally talented and imaginative change of pace from Borge's characterizations. She offered a traditional Japanese melody, then sang the verse of "My Funny Valentine" in Japanese and the chorus in precisely impeccable American, in a big, unusual, stage-type voice of fine tone, shading and style.

An NBC crew went to Copenhagen, Denmark, to tape the Cirkus Schumann in action and brought back virtually everything that's memorable about a circus except the sawdust smell.

By using Paul Winchell & Jerry Mahoney as hosts, the visit to the circus was given an informal and pleasing atmosphere and served to tie things together nicely during the performing breaks. Show's main value of course, comes from the circus performers themselves. The Schumanns are an amazing family group with plenty of circus savvy. There's Katja Schumann, an 11-year old bareback rider, and 15-year old Benny who does an exciting low-wire act with his 11-year old brother Jacques and there are the elder Schumanns who have an act called the Schumann Liberty Horses, one of the slickest trained horse acts around. In addition to the Schumanns, there were the Nellos Football Dogs, the Flying Marilees, a high trapeze act, Larry Griswold, a trampoline performer, the Six Bertinis, a bicycle act, Douglas Kossmayer, a horse & chariot act, and clowns Leo Gastan and Antonio & Kiki to help round out the magical hour.

The show was paced in a way that made the hour seem to skip by and the camera work was sock. Spotting the program between 9 and 10 p.m. gave the adult viewers a break but it should be done again at an earlier hour so that the kiddies can share the delights of the program. Gros.

Danish Circus:

Everyone who loves a circus must have found joy in the special show enceed by Paul Winchell and his dummy, Jerry Mahoney, on NBC-TV (9 to 10 P.M.).

The program was filmed at the Schumann Circus in Copenhagen, Denmark, founded by the ancestors of present owners 112 years ago. With its clowns, trained horses, aerialists and football-playing dogs the hour brought pleasure to old and young, alike.

The weekend also brought us a wonderful, rollicking circus, filmed in Copenhagen for NBC. It included the greatest unicycle act since the invention of the wheel and a game of soccer played with great speed and skill by little sweatered dogs.

'GIRL OF THE NIGHT' At the Criterion

In the topsy-turvy world of current make-believe prostitutes are glorified ("Never on Sunday," "The World of Susie Wong," "Irma La Douce"), while their smoother, wealthier sisters, the call girls, hoe a hard row in "Girl of the Night," at the Criterion.

This is the view seen from Dr. Harold Greenwald's psychoanalytical study, "The Call Girl," directed by a newcomer, Joseph Cates, and spearheaded by a couple of good performances by Anne Francis, who suffers, and her pimp, John Kerr, who dishes it out.

The picture's structure is a series of ups and downs on the road to redemption, not the familiar religious one but the perhaps equally familiar psychoanalytical one. Anne Francis lost her father when she was young, was rejected by her mother who married again, and wasn't treated well by relatives. She thought of herself as unloved and unworthy. And so forth, as Dr. Lloyd Nolan patiently listens, prompts once or twice lest he be accused of getting his good salary for nothing, and fades out as the picture flashes back and forward to complete its story. These are not startling innovations as therapy.

The picture view of New York City is ordinary, which is something of a relief. Usually a movie maker in New York becomes enamoured of his subject, soon falling victim to sarethumb photography. Everything sticks out. These streets and houses, that East River and Queensboro bridge are thoroughly recognizable, nothing more.

Francis and Johns

The men in the professional life of Anne Francis are ordinary "johns." They have the money, but they are not outstanding in any way, not even in a descriptive or character way. This is good, in its negative way.

Anne Francis stands out enough, because she's still that blue-eyed, good looking blond she was ten years ago. She can act. She's no Duse, but she can make you think she's a working call girl, though it's a little hard to understand how she made her living with that depressed mood.

John Kerr, the fellow who takes her money, pretends to love her, and runs her business engagements, demonstrates what a good-looking actor can do to make himself repulsive without placing Dracula fusks in his mouth or otherwise disfiguring himself. He really convinces you with a kind of inner rottenness that will startle girls who have thought themselves in love with the handsome young actor. This may not be good for his career as an idol, but it's an eye-opener for those willing to see him as an actor.

The producer seems possessed of the sense to know the subject is sufficiently sensational not to need a needle. The performers play it down, the director holds everything in control, and the photography is modest.

Kay Medford, a wise and weary madam, puts out another of her good, uneccented jobs.

The results speak clearly, forcibly for themselves. The rehabilitation of such a girl in such a situation is a story so surrounded with melodramatic and sentimental cliches that it would have been very easy to fall into one of the many pitfalls. Instead they've made a film that holds your interest consistently, touches the heart and gradually persuades you to take sides. That's it, a good picture which improves everything it touches.

like and entertaining effort in which the elements of fine craftsmanship were fused in a pleasant 60-minute session.

The book and score were not designed to live forever, but in its way, it was one of the top variety show efforts of the season. It was good entertainment for an hour.

The book was fairly simple. Janet Blair, mistaken by a genie for Scheherazade, was whisked back a few centuries and a few thousand miles to rejoin the menage of Ali Baba, but Sinbad the Sailor had other plans for her. There were original music and lyrics with a couple of standards thrown in to keep the franchise. The music and its projection were good, advancing the action and providing a few lilting sessions.

The cast was right for the occasion. Miss Blair charmed her way around, and assistance by Louis Nye as the genie, John Vivyan, who moved over from "Mr. Lucky" as Sinbad and John Hoyt as Ali Baba made for a compact and efficient cast .The credit for the music went to Jack Brooks, and the book was by Ed Simmons.

The sets were similiary well-done and the commercials were brought in cleverly. Jose.

Perry Como Show

Perry Como threw a Thanksgiving Eve bash for a group of likable young people on his "Kraft Music Hall" show on NBC-TV last Wednesday (23). Discounting some tired material concerning Bing Crosby, Frank Sinatra and Lawrence Welk, show had a snappy holiday flavor that made an enjoyable hour of song and dance.

Assisting Como in the song department were the Crosby Bros., thus the jokes about pere Crosby, the Lennon Sisters, lammisters from Welk's "one-a-two-and-a-three" beat, and Tommy Sands, FS's son-in-law. The youngsters fit easily into the holiday mood and scored individually. The Crosbys hit with "I Can't Give You Anything But Love," the Lennons came over with "I Don't Know Why I Love You Like I Do" and Sands was in top form on "You Stepped Out Of A Dream." Their group work, with Como leading the way, was bright and colorful on "Dream" and "Keep-A-Hoppin'."

A solid comedy touch was offered by Frank Gorshin whose offbeat impressions of Richard Widmark, Kirk Douglas, Jeff Chandler, Alfred Hitchcock, Steve McQueen and Bobby Darin hit a high note for carbon capers.

Choreographer Peter Ginnaro joined the show this session and his bright touch was evident throughout. The show wound with Como doing his perennial "Bless This House," which provided the proper touch for the holiday. Gros.

"Close-Up"

Not much energy or intelligence is going to be required of Time Inc., the publisher-turned-tv-producer, to do a better job on "Close-Up" than ABC News has done until now. "The Money Raisers" was the subject of the Bell & Howell public affairs series last Friday (25), and, for the third time, this program on ABC-TV was listless and, worse, unimportant. Like, for instance, a videonic discourse on the apathy of American voters; the half-hour (scheduled at 8 p.m.) took a potentially grand theme and slugged it to death with unimaginative writing, ineffectual camerawork and stultifying editing.

The lack of organization and spirit, the lack of incisiveness even more than the lack of courage that has prevailed so far on "Close-Up" (billed—before the season started —as a controversial series) are incentive to turn some adult viewers away. ABC-TV could find no better way to reveal the mechanics of dishonest fund collectors than to recourse to a short, puerile "dramatization" of the leering woman and the tough, bearded mastermind criminal, who mulct a bank director for the "milk fund."

The network's news department (Don Goddard did the interviews this time) demonstrated the same inspiration in its choice of interviewees, windy and stagey to the last. Perhaps this relentless dullness would have been relieved if director Marshall Diskin had suggested some elemental cutting and splicing, which, obviously, he did not.

Under the circumstances, the entrance of Time Inc. as the "intruding novice" of tv public affairs could be welcome. Art.

Bell Telephone Hour

With an array of talent headed by Helen Hayes, NBC-TV's "Bell Telephone Hour" tackled Tchaikovsky Friday (25) in a tuneful program that ranged from the composer's pop adaptations to his more serious works. The opulently produced colorcast was aptly tagged "The Music of Romance" for the script recalled the mutual affection of the composer and Madam Van Meck via their famed correspondence.

Arch Oboler's dialog, based on the letters, would have emerged dated and affected had it been entrusted to less capable hands than Miss Hayes as the Madam Van Meck and Farley Granger as Tchaikovsky. Even so, the dramatic portion of the hour added up to little more than a convenient peg on which to hang some of the composer's more familiar selections.

Jane Powell and Johnny Desmond contributed some lilting vocals of a number of pops based upon Tchaikovsky's music. Pianist, Grant Johannessen, was very much the virtuoso in playing the final movement of the "Concerto No. 1 in B-Flat Minor" while violinist, Michael Rabin, did a stirring solo of the finale of the "Concerto in D."

But the hour's high spot, at least visually, was the sequence in which Lupe Serrano and Jacques D'Amboise danced the "Black Swan Pas de Deux" from the "Swan Lake" ballet. Donald Voorhees' orchestra impeccably backed the entire session. Bell's unobtrusive plugs stressed the value of the company's new Princess phone, among other things. Gilb.

an aggregate of 32% above the last contract.

The actors' guilds as the week began were holding to the concept of weighting city populations to arrive at blurb fees, which management had long and vigorously opposed. It was also reported that another idea, opposed by the agencies who are fearful of too great a rise in the cost of wild spot tv blurbs, had crept back into the talks. It was that blurb performers be paid in cycles shorter than the existing 13-week period.

Saturday (26) morning, both sides met for an hour-and-a-half and in that time rejected each offer's latest proposals. After taking the rest of the weekend off to study the situation, the negotiators reconvened at the informal Monday sessions, where the ice seemed finally to be broken.

Besides discussing blurb fees, the dickerers also got into network wages and working conditions, and a great deal of ground was covered there, too. With considerable detail work facing them, the negotiators found it difficult predicting when they'd actually be ready to say they have a contract that both sides find agreeable, but the new-found tone of amenability has made them all "moderately optimistic."

In its 24-year history of bargaining against them AFTRA has never struck the webs. SAG is co-negotiating with AFTRA for the first time. The two unions, onetime rivals, decided that they need fee parity in the production of commercials, whether on tape or film, to prevent management from using one union against the other.

STREIBERT TO HELM TIME'S MPLS. STATION

Theodore C. (Ted) Streibert is returning to broadcasting as v.p.-general manager of Time Inc.'s WTCN-TV & AM, Minneapolis. He replaces Phil C. Hoffman, who resigned a couple of months ago.

Since exiting his post as director of the U. S. Information Agency in 1957, Streibert has been with the International Basic Economy Corp., the Rockefeller-owned holding and financing company. He was appointed to the U.S.I.A. as its first director by President Eisenhower in 1953.

Streibert was board chairman of Mutual Broadcasting and prexy of WOR and WOR-TV, N. Y., through 1951. At WTCN, he reports to Wes Pullen, v.p. of Time's broadcast division.

Ottawa—Jean Anouilh's "Point of Departure," skedded by CBC-TV then cancelled for fear of offending viewers, is on again at 11:30 p.m. Dec. 2.

gave telling glimpses of the experienced smile at the corner of the mouth, of the honesty of her attitudes, of the reserve that made her allergic to personal publicity. Freeman tried to draw her out on her politics and Miss Signoret denied ever being a Commie, but explained that she was 19 years old at the time of the Nazi occupation of France and any patriot had to take sides. Naturally, Communists were active on the anti-Nazi front, and their cause was shared by many who were not.

Actress who'd recently signed the French manifesto protesting the Algerian war, showed that she would let no considerations of popularity or livelihood bend her opinions. But, being outside her own country, she declined to elaborate on the matter.

On the career front, she modestly brought in director Jack Clayton and costar Laurence Harvey as contributors to her triumph in "Room at the Top." The most moving moments were when she described her life with husband Yves Montand, saying how she liked to be with him during his one-man concert tours. Three times she affirmed that she was a very happy woman——and this came through.

Freeman ignored the current gossip about Montand and Marilyn Monroe, and Miss Signoret implied that such subjects were pretty impertinent anyway. Her daughter, she said, had never been photographed for publicity purposes, and she intended to cling to that sort of privacy.

But, on the whole, Freeman didn't get to the nerve of his subject. It was a nice exhibition of thin-ice skating, and the actress kept her balance throughout. Credit titles were embellished, as usual, by Feliks Topolski drawings; the mystery of Miss Signoret eluded them, too. Otta.

Saturday Spectacular

This was a highly unspectacular sample of ATV's "Saturday Spectacular." Deliberately so, for Richard Greenough had devised a drawing-room, which cunningly opened out for some of the acts, and actor Maurice Denham hosted with cheery informality. If the bill packed few surprises, it had an agreeable frame.

Centerpiece of the show was a 15-minute sketch, dashed off by writer Richard Waring, in which Denham was joined by Peggy Cummins and William Franklyn. Idea of this segment, called "Father Knows Best," was that a daughter brought her latest beau for interview by father. His cross-examination had previously frightened off earlier suitors, so he was persuaded to be less forbidding this time. But, on the way down, the daughter had decided the young man was not for her, and wanted pa to scare him off. This produced some tinny yocks, but was a pretty flat brew for this talented team. Miss Cummins fluttered, Denham blustered, and Franklyn double-took—and that was about it.

Rest of the items were largely vocal. Adele Leigh, a well-distributed nightingale, pleased with "Tonight" and "So Far," which didn't jax her fluent voice though she was a bit heavy with the simpers. Emile Ford treacled through "Counting Teardrops" and "White Christmas," his familiar mixture of bounce and sentimentality. While the Beverly Sisters, appearing at short notice because of Russ Conway's illness, trotted round the set with "Strawberry Fair" and draped themselves over the furniture for "Lights of Home."

The show was sparked off by the Wallabies, who had some good twists on the trampoline. And Denham's emceeing was affable enough to suggest that he might be tried again, if provided with a couple of new gags. Producer Francis Essex was enterprising with his cameras. Otta.

Wometco's $3,000,000 For Canadian Border Station; Floats a Loan

Wometco Enterprises, based in Miami and operators of WTVJ, Miami, have purchased KVOS on the Canadian-American border (covering Vancouver in Canada and northwestern Washington state) for $3,000,000. Purchase is subject to approval of FCC and an Internal Revenue Service Ruling.

In a report to stockholders, Wometco sets KVOS '59 earnings at $400,000, and says '60 earnings are running at a comparable rate. Company has negotiated a $2,000,000 loan to fiance the deal.

Besides the Miami outlet, Wometco operates WLOS-TV, Greenville - Ashville - Spartanburg in the Carolinas, and owns 47½% of WLOS-AM-FM, Ashville, N.C. Other holdings include theatres in Miami, Tampa and West Palm Beach; Florida and Bahamas vending operations; and the Bahamas Pepsi-Cola franchise.

be among these goals.

First show accomplished neither. Choice for the leadoff guest was Sen. Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut, and the questioning tended to wander all over the international-national map, without purpose and without consequence. Only two questions concerned local issues, one on the New Haven fare increase and the other on the matter of N. Y. state income taxation of non-residents who work in the state. Sen. Dodd thought the fare increase too high and the tax unfair, but that's as far as the issues were pursued.

Otherwise, the questions ranged from the unanswerable (whom do you favor for cabinet posts) to those which Sen. Dodd has already expressed himself on (opposition to U. S. participation on the World Court bench). Trouble is, Cochran and panelists Murray Davis (N. Y. World-Telegram & Sun), Bill Leonard (CBS News) and Carey Cronan (D. C. Correspondent for several Connecticut newspapers) are all pros. There's no doubt that had they interviewed the Senator separately, they would have gotten a story out of him, and probably a good one. But in concert, they dealt in irrelevancies, and lacked the kind of direction and determination that's needed to develop a story. Chan.

U.S., England, Canada, Aussie TV Combine on Pubaffairs Venture

Telecasters in at least four English speaking countries will jointly underwrite and produce a series of public affairs programs it is understood. Associated - Rediffusion, a commercial outlet in England, Westinghouse Broadcasting Corp. and the National Educational Television & Radio Center of the United States, the Australian Broadcasting Commission and probably the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. will be involved in this precendental international venture.

Telecasters have co-produced and co-financed one-shot pubaffairs programs before, but the understanding this time is that when an accord is finally signed among nations it will be on a longterm basis.

Announcement of this international pact has been delayed while the Aussies and Canadians present the plan to their boards for final authorization, it is reported. Belief is there will be no serious obstacles to an agreement.

As it is understood, the four nations (maybe others) will rotate the production. A central group will decide which of the nations is best suited, in each instance, to handling the particular program and its subject matter, and after it is made it will be guaranteed exposure by each of the other contractors.

Details of financing were not divulged. As a matter of fact, the reported participants, while admiting there will be "an announcement on international television," will not officially discuss any details.

Outside Packages

capabilities and weaknesses of men who are not fulltimers, and so it's relatively hard to offer a convincing defense in their behalf.

A second concrete objection is that the hiring of outsiders will invariably lower the morale of network news departments, at least in the cases of NBC and CBS, where the staff men have had long and exclusive experience in the news and public affairs realm. "Why hire outsiders when we've got good men here?"

A fundamental and final objection comes in this form: That network management cannot learn either the values or the complexities of news and public affairs programming if they hire outsiders, regardless of how closely they say they'll scrutinize and control the independent output. "Outside production does not create a feeling of rapport with the subject matter of news, because it lacks the intimacy of doing it yourself."

While the analogy is inadequate in relaying the full story, the network opponents to outside pubaffairs production are fond of saying that to use any but one's own staff to produce news or pubaffairs is much like a newspaper that hires freelancers to write the daily editorials.

The time may come, if news and public affairs tv programs ever begin to take up a large part of the networks' schedules, when it becomes absolutely imperative to hire outside support because the networks simply won't have the manpower or time to fill all the programmatic needs. "But," said a vigorous opponent, "that seems as far off as Orion."

Radio-TV Election 'Behavior' Sifted

Washington, Nov. 29.

The Senate Yarborough Subcommittee which has authority to probe the way radio-television stations handled political coverage in the campaign will meet here next week to decide what to do about "thousands" of complaints it has received.

Subcommittee counsel Creekmore Fath said he had several file drawers filled with "thousands" of gripes about the political behavior of licensees and hasn't yet finished reading all of them. He declined to discuss the course of action he will recommend to the subcommittee. He wouldn't predict whether hearings will be held, saying no such decision can be made until the subcommittee meets.

Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.) is chairman and members are Sens. Gale McGee (D-Wyo.) and Hugh D. Scott (R-Pa.).

Victor A. Sholis, v-p and director of WHAS, in a report carried by both WHAS radio and tv, said the station, while raising the record amount in the radio and television marathon show, kept its expenses to a new low of 6.96%.

McCollough's 'So Proudly We Hail' On Breakthrough

Federal Communications Commission's disposition to change some of the basic requirements for relicensing radio and tv stations represent a major breakthrough for broadcasting, Clair R. McCollough, chairman of the NAB policy committee and prexy of the Steinman stations, Lancaster, Pa., told the windup regional session of NAB this week in New York.

"The burden of this proposed new policy," said McCollough, "involves a plan in which broadcasters will be asked to establish the means by which they have consulted and measured the public interest requirements of their communities, and responded to it, rather than the present procedure which requires them to show program patterns by percentages.

"This would appear to be a major breakthrough for broadcasting. Paradoxically enough, this breakthrough was born during the travail that attended the investigations of the broadcasting industry during the past two years."

Another breakthrough, he said, appeared imminent as a result of the recent tv debates by the Presidental candidates. "This whole subject," he said, "revolves about the successful efforts of the broadcasting industry during the last Congress to obtain relief form the stringent requirements of Section 315 of the Communications Act. Broadcasting was told that it could use its own judgment during the recent campaign . . . Seemingly, broadcasters have attained, at least in part, an objective they have long sought and for which they have struggled without pause."

During the two-day session ending yesterday (29), eastern area brodcasters attended sessions simllar to those held in other regions during the Association's fall conference program. Public relations and sales were discussed by NAB staffers Howard H. Bell, James H. Hulbert, John M. Couric and William Carlisle. Staffers also held a half-day session on broadsting and politics. Tuesday morning sessions covered engineering techniques.

out of the three years of investigations of the regulatory agencies. The report will handle the probes in the broad expanse and suggest legislative remedies.

Harris has been in touch with James Landis, former federal official and Harvard Law Dean, who has been designated by President-elect Kennedy to study the regulatory agencies and propose what should be done about them. Harris said he will also confer with Kennedy on the agencies and possible legislative reforms in December or January.

Under terms of the House resolution which created the Legislative Oversight Subcommittee, its life expires Jan. 2.

which Hubbell Robinson is at work (see separate story), the Ollie Treyz-Tom Moore team at ABC has initiated dickers with playwright William Inge for a 60-minute series based on his "Bus Stop" legit click. This will be an entry out of the 20th Fox-tv shop under the production helm of Roy Huggins (who was a major factor in the ABC-Warner Bros. alliance on "Maverick" and "77 Sunset Strip.") Inge will be the executive writer on the projected series.

Also on tap is an hour series to be filmed in Africa tabbed "Tanganyika." This, too, will come in under the 20th TV banner as a pet project Huggins has been mulling for the past two years. It will bypass any controversial Congo aspects and will be geared strictly for entertainment purposes with a thematic "Americans on a holiday in Africa" romantic white hunter background.

less than 100,000 behind CBS, with a total of 7,910,000 average-audience homes reached.

(3). In the top 15, ABC alone is represented with a brand new entry. This is the Fred MacMurray "My Three Sons. (In the Nielsen Top 40, only nine of the new shows make the grade with a 20 or better rating, and ABC has four of these—"My Three Sons," "Surfside Six," "Flintstones" and "Stagecoach West." CBS has three: "Candid Camera," Andy Griffith and "Checkmate" and NBC has two: "Tall Man" and "Outlaws.") None of the new shows makes the Top 10.

(4). ABC leads in average audience ratings four nights of the week—Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday; CBS leads two nights of the week, Saturday and Sunday, and NBC on Wednesday night. Ratings cover the 7:30 to 11 p.m. time periods (6:30 to 11 on Sundays.)

Heretofore it was a question of "Who's rating do you read'" with ABC usually clobbering the competition in the 24-city Nielsen studies where all three webs are competing, but CBS out in front on the more conclusive national average audience ratings.

For the first time ABC triumphs no matter how it's sliced.

O'seas TV Set Count: 38,650,000

Washington, Nov. 29.

Number of television sets abroad vaulted to 38,650,000 as of Oct. 1, according to a worldwide survey by U.S. Information Agency. A jump of 4,100,000 sets was reported since June 1, compared with an increase of only 2,500,000 for the first five months of 1960.

The survey, covering June 1-Oct. 1, also showed an increase of 116 tv station for the period, bringing the overseas total to 1,353.

Of the total sets in use, 32,650,000 were in non-Communist nations and 6,000,000 behind the Iron Curtain. Western Europe reported an increase of 1,900,000 for a total of 22,100,000 sets. There were 3,300,000 in Latin America, a 400,000 increase; 170,000 in the Near East and Africa, a 80,000 increase; and 7,050,000 in the Far East, an increase of 1,300,000. In the Communist bloc, there were 4,000,000 sets in Russia (increase not estimated); 810,000 in East Germany, an increase of 170,000; 750,000 in Czechoslovakia, an increase of 150,000; and 311,000 in Poland, an increase of 51,000.

Of the 116 new tv transmitters abroad, 97 were in non-Communist areas, distributed as follows: 65 in Western Europe, 13 in Latin America, two in the Near East, and 17 in the Far East. In the Red Bloc, Russia accounted for 10 new outlets; Poland for four; Hungary, two, and Czechoslovakia. East Germany and Communist China, one each.

During the four-month period, USIA said its Television Service sent a total of 226 programs to 51 countries, with an estimated viewing audience of 135,250,000.

Huffaker's CBS Pact For 'Marina' Pilot

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Clair Huffaker, scripter-novelist, has closed a hefty deal with CBS to write the pilot teleplay for an hourlong seafaring adventure series tabbed "Marina."

Writer will receive an initial payment for script, a royalty on any and all segments to be written for series plus 10% of profits on entire project. Hunt Stromberg Jr., CBS vp in charge of Hollywood program development, arranged pact.

Sample 60-Second Soaper

CBS Radio's soaper block went off the air for good Friday (25), marking the end of an era. But WNEW, N. Y. indie, preserved some sort of continuity and possibly inaugurated some kind of new era Monday (28) with a group of what it calls "Sixty Second Soaps," brief satires of the soaps which it intends to run on a Monday-through-Friday basis.

With Frank Gallup as narrator, the one-minuters are constructed so as to complete a single "story" in a week, then turning to a new yarn. Each one-minute "episode" is repeated several times a day. The comic (soap) operas were created and written by Bill Persky, station's assistant program director, and Sam Denoff, continuity director. Leadoff story is called "Bradley at the Bar," and first-day's script read like this:

ANNCR: WNEW presents "Bradley at the Bar". . . the story of Bradley Arlington, Attorney at Law . . . Episode 1 . . . As you recall, Bradley Arlington has been attending law school for the past four years . . . Upon the advice of his roommate, Rip Newcomb, Bradley decided to postpone his law career, in order to play pro football for one year . . . Kitty and Bradley were somewhat abashed to learn that Rip Newcomb had then taken Bradley's job at the law office.
After the wedding, on the way to the stadium, they received an urgent wire from ruthless Judge Morris Binder, requesting that Bradley come to work for him. After leaving Kitty and the children at their Scarsdale estate, Bradley went to see Judge Binder, and was faced with the most difficult problem in his five years as a lawyer. We join them as we hear Bradley say:

BRADLEY: This is the most difficult problem I have had to face in my five years as a lawyer . . .

ANNCR: Tune in tomorrow to find out Judge Binder's answer, and whether Wellington Thoon will keep his promise to Margaret. "Bradley at the Bar" has been a special presentation of WNEW and will be heard again tomorrow at almost this very same time.

Four subsequent scripts take the hero through 30 years, six wives and three Judge Binders.

'Witness' Axed; New Western Set

dropped altogether.

CBS has conceeded that 7:30-8:30 wasn't the right timeslot for "Witness," yet it was also unable to secure the necessary clearances to shift it to 9-10. Consequently, it decided to scrap the Talent Associates package altogether and bring on the western. That accomplished, it then succeeded in getting the two comedy shows moved.

Warren, who produced "Gunsmoke" and currently produces "Rawhide" for the network, originally planned the new western as a pilot "spinoff" on "Rawhide," that is, as a pilot which would be integrated as a "Rawhide" episode. Now, however, he's been given the greenlight to get the series into actual production as quickly as possible, and the first two scripts are already being written.

Series is set in the post-Civil War west, and title character (still uncast) is a civilian troubleshooter for the Army in its policing duties in the less settled areas. Warren will produce the new series, at least to start with. "Rawhide" is nearly finished with its current cycle of 30 shows, and consequently he'll have no conflict in production. If the new show succeeds, he'll stay with that and probably turn "Rawhide" over to his associate producer, Andre Boehm.

So far, only holdover sponsor on "Witness" is R. J. Reynolds, which has a fourth of the show. CBS is hoping to persuade the ciggie-maker to stay with the western replacement.

—so they're used not only for entertainment but for information, education and marketing. It goes beyond show business and pay television. Adult education, for instance, will put the medium on a new level of values and income.

"There are new areas of effort which Hollywood has not touched in films or television. We hope this plan will be an opportunity to explore these areas. Our schools will be enormous and circular, having a central broadcasting area in the middle. We'll have a 'Think Factory,' a 100-acre scientific park where scientists will be sent from major American companies."

Philco's Woods Retiring After 35 Yrs. Service

Philadelphia, Nov. 29.

Leslie J. Woods, veep for research and engineering and a director of Philco Corp., will retire at the end of the year after 35 years with the company.

The Philco exec joined the firm in 1925 when modern communications was in its infancy. Woods played important roles in the development of the battery systems used in early models of portable radios, which led to today's transistor radios. When he was transferred to Philadelphia in 1928, he became Philco's first television engineer.

Hosiery Firm's 110G For Inauguration Pickup

CBS-TV has sold a 45-minute live special on the Inauguration Ball on Jan. 20 to Hanes Hosiery. It's now beginning to search for a sponsor for the pickup that day of the Inauguration ceremony itself.

The ball telecast will run from 11:15 p.m. to midnight, as in previous pickups. For Hanes, it's believed to be the hosiery outfit's first network buy. H. R. Flanagan agency set the deal. In years past, Maybelline bankrolled the event on CBS. Under the Hanes deal, web retains the right to sell off partial sponsorship of the ball if it so desires. Entire package comes to around $110,000 for the telecast.

Global Cable Aid To BBC's Radio

London, Nov. 29.

Although BBC-TV has made frequent impressive use of the existing transatlantic cable system to flash brief filmed news items from U. S. to U. K. and vice versa, it sees "no tv implications" in current plans for the laying of a round-the-world system of large capacity cables at a cost of $224,000,000. But the new links will provide more reliable communication with Commonwealth countries in the relaying of radio programs.

The cable-laying schedule provides first for a transatlantic link between Canada and Britain, to be constructed next year. Next stage will be a large-capacity cable system across the Pacific which it's hoped to complete by 1964. Latter will bring Australia and New Zealand into contact with Canada and then by way of a microwave system across Canada and the transatlantic cable, with the U. K.

'Milkman's Matinee's' 25th Anni

Granddaddy of All Late-Niters Still Pulls In $150,000 a Year

Granddaddy of all-night radio shows, "The Milkman's Matinee," will celebrate its 25th anni next week on WNEW, N.Y. It was near the end of 1935, just a year after the trailblazing indie went on the air, that Bernice Judis incepted "Matinee" as an all-nighter, and the midnight-to-6 segment (now it's till 5:30) proceeded to blaze some trails of its own.

For one thing, it spurred recognition among advertisers of the existence of an all-night audience —a permanent one, not just stay-up-laters, and it drew business into that field. For another, it spelled out to stations across the country the programming and promotional virtues of a 24-hour-around-the-clock operation.

Twenty-five years later, "Matinee" is still going strong, accounting for its best sales marks since its inception, with annual billings running to $150,000, not bad considering that a package buy can run as low as $28 a spot. It still has failed to generate much formidable opposition in the N.Y. market, and it still captures a lion's share of late-night ad expenditures aimed at that permanent all-night audience of some 500,000 night workers.

"Matinee" has had three principal majordomos, Stan Shaw, who started with the all-nighter and held down the post till 1942; Art Ford, who took it over near the end of the war and held it until 1954, when he moved into WNEW daytime and subsequently to NBC; and Jack Lazare, who's been in charge since '55 and is still going strong.

It all started when Miss Judis, then bosslady of the then Bulova-owned station, figured it wouldn't cost very much more to stay on the air 24 hours than the 22 (6 a.m. to 4 a.m.) that it was running then. (Changeover effected a savings on equipment maintenance too, since it's more economical to keep equipment on continuously than to shut it on and off.) At the time, station was programming midnight-to-4 with live dance remotes—in fact, all the station then was live; it didn't own a turntable.

"Matinee" was then incepted to cover the midnight to 6 a.m. period, with most of the dance band remotes integrated into the overall format, and with records, chatter and live guests added. As the dance remotes started to diminish, what with increased costs, labor hassles, and the increasing importance of the disk industry, "Matinee" moved closer to its present format.

War years and the earlier preparedness era were a big boon, multiplying the stay-up-laters. After the war, things settled back to the permanent night-working audience plus the stray stay-up-pers. Commercial business on the show then tended toward the male products, gasolines, beers, shaving products and late-night items like all-night restaurants, etc., because of a 2-1 predominance of men in the audience. Most of the business was primarily local at the beginning—in fact the station itself didn't get its first national account (20-Grand Cigarets) until 1938. Gradually, though, a mix of local and national business came through.

Today, majority of business is national, but there's an artificial reason for this which also explains the $150,000 a year billing rate, an alltime high. Three years ago, WNEW inaugurated a package plan sales operation, with all sponsors required to include "Matinee" in their overall purchases. Discount structure was such that "Matinee" amounted to a virtual bonus, but the 150G rate is its proportion of the overall take.

Nevertheless, over its 25 years, "Matinee" has billed an estimated $2,500,000, in the opinion of v.p.-general manager Jack Sullivan.

The Definitive 'Peter Pan'

"Juno & the Paycock" was lifted by the Abbey Players from stage to film, where it was presented with absolutely no changes whatsoever. Yet today the film is scratchy, the sound is poor and this letter perfect rendition, already faded into technical obsolescence, would not survive a time capsule or the rigors or even demands of contemporary exposure.

"You don't have Katherine Cornell in the "Barretts of Wimpole Street," said director Vincent Donehue the other day. There is no record of Helen Hayes' 'Victoria Regina.' You don't have Alfred Lune and Lynn Fontanne in anything, because, until now, everything, except for western reruns, has been made for one use.

"So not only are we missing the great plays but we're also missing the great performances of this period," he added. Donehue is directing the new "Peter Pan" tape. NBC-TV presented "Peter Pan" twice before, but technical weaknesses four and five years ago disallowed permanence.

This new Mary Martin performance (she did it on the stage initially) is going to be the definitive "Peter Pan," Donehue said. (The network definitely plans to use it again and again, and it's already made provisions for additional payments for the fifth and sixth showings.)

The economics of television allow sometimes for the faithful reproduction of classics, while all of motion pictures adapt such classics, adaptations meaning changes are made to satisfy boxoffice requisites. Even Shakespeare has never been done without cuts to fit a tv time availability or changes to fit a chief actor's personal desires.

Donehue confided that the only reason Mary Martin, who did the two previous tv performances of "Pan" as well as the legitimate theatre production, decided to make it once more is because "she wants to see a permanent record of it."

According to the director, NBC technicians have been laboring long to make sure that the "definitive 'Peter Pan'" lasts forever. "The technicians," he noted, "have been warming up the cameras to the same temperature every day. We're going to shoot it over 25 days and we want to make sure that the quality is perfectly uniform."

As an afterthought the director, who came into television in 1950 after running his own legit theatre, said, "We don't know whether it'll work," but the artist's tone made him seem positive that technicians could do just about anything.

WCAU'S RATE CARD: 'GOT YOU IN MIND'

Philadelphia, Nov. 29.

WCAU Radio has issued a new, vastly-simplified rate card, which is a radical departure from the familiar old-style cards that featured row upon row of numbers.

Tom Swafford, WCAU veepee and g.m. of the CBS Radio web, said card was designed with the buyer in mind. General sales manager Jack Kline also points out "Card No. 34 offers the following innovations—an opportunity for advertisers using announcements and programs to combine the two types of buys for total discount purposes." In other words, an advertiser using "large space" and "small space" may combine to earn total discounts.

Discounts range from 5% for 300 units to a maximum of 30% for 3,000 units or more.

Chi-to-Frisco Shift For NBC's Bill Decker

Chicago, Nov. 29.

On the basis of his click performance as manager of WMAQ here the past year, NBC is transferring William Decker to San Francisco Dec. 16, where he'll replace George Fuerst as general manager of the radio o&o, KNBC. Fuerst is understood to be retiring after some 30 years in the NBC employ.

Decker, with chiefly a sales background and practically no experience in radio, had been named manager of the Chi station about a year ago by Lloyd Yoder, veep and general manager of the NBC stations here. It proved an inspired choice, with Decker jockeying the station up in the ratings via some radical changes in the program concept, many of them borrowed from FM. The o&o is also having a banner sales year under Decker.

At the San Francisco outlet he'll report to Thomas C. McCray, NBC veep and general manager of KRCA in Hollywood. Decker's replacement in Chi hasn't been selected yet.

Coast Staff Expansions

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Stepped-up tv production in Hollywood has necessitated staff expansions at three companies. Compton ad agency added three, CBS Films and Procter & Gamble one each.

William Chalmers as veepee and account supervisor was formerly with Fletcher Richards, Calkins & Holden; Tom Lowey, account executive, was ad chief at Hoffman Electronics, and Burnell Grossman, radio-tv supervisor, erstwhile production manager for Filmrite Associates.

George Giroux, program manager in Hollywood for P & G, has hired Dave Lawrence as program supervisor. Howard Alston, former production operations manager for CBS in Hollywood, joined CBS Films as production manager reporting to Jack Ballard, manager of programs.

Philly's United Fund Takes Rap in Lowering Boom on Sun. Grid

Philadelphia, Nov .29,

Rigid National Football League rules cancelled an announced video tape telecast of the New York Giants - Philadelphia Eagles pro football game Sunday night (27). League forbids telecast same day in city where game is played.

The grid match at Franklin Field here had been sold out a week in advance, the entire 60,000 seats at the U. of Pennsylvania's Franklin Field. Alert officers of the United Fund, which fell $324,000 short of its $13,500,000 goal, made a deal with WCAU-TV and the Eagles to play a vidtape of game Sunday night (27) and then ask viewers to send in $1 to make up the Fund deficit.

Stunt was widely heralded and publicized as final major effort of the Fund drive. With tickets being scalped at fancy prices, there is little doubt that plenty viewers would have kicked in bucks to aid drive for bringing them the big game.

Project was no more than settled upon, however, when the station made repeated announcements postponing the vidtape show and stating the League had lowered the boom. The game program was set back until 11:15 Monday night (28), which lost all of the immediacy and made it a dubious fund-raising device.

Jersey entrepreneurs reaped a harvest by pulling in the telecast of the Sunday afternoon pro game from a N. Y. channel and showing it on large screen.

Dallas—"Great Music From Chicago" will be presented on WFAA-TV in a 26-week series premiering Christmas Day at 2 p.m. Featuring the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, the series also will include grand and light opera productions, contemporary jazz, and popular music, recorded by WGN-TV, Chicago, in the Sheraton Towers Grand Ballroom.

Mex Stand: No Nationalization Of TV or Radio

Mexico City, Nov. 29.

Mexico is completely against any moves for nationalization of the radio and television industry throughout Latin America as detrimental to freedom of speech.

Cuba has made preliminary feelers in this direction, outlining the nationalization idea at the recent economic meeting of the Inter-American Announcers Association in Tegucigalpa, Honduras.

There is no documented information as to Cuba's next move, but rumors allegedly infer that delegates of republic may bring up matter within or outside agenda of the forthcoming Inter-American Announcers Congress, which will convene in Bogota in February of 1961.

Cuban delegates have sounded out the Mexican National Announcers Association for its views and received a categoric "not interested" reply. Mexican delegates, if matter is brought up in Bogota, will fight proposal on basis that it would curtail liberty of expression and pose other serious problems, not least being that radio and television would, in effect, become the voice of the State and "abused" for political ends.

Freedom of speech is a "precious" thing, according to Pedro Ferriz, president of the Mexican Association, and the industry here has no patience with any nationalization projects. Ferriz pointed out that his organization as well as the Inter-American Press Association, and other bodies, have precisely come into being to "safeguard the inhabitants of this continent via the free dissemination of thought."

Mexican delegates to the Congress have completed its agenda of suggestions, including some major cooperative proposals.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

WBKB, the ABC-TV anchor in Chi, has published in mimeo a leaflet entitled "Advice to Aspiring TV Writers" as chiefly a public relations gesture to answer the numerous requests for such info. Believed to be the only booklet of its kind, it's being offered gratis on request. It was prepared by continuinity acceptance editor Marcella Braun, with an assist from Sterling (Red) Quinlan, veep in charge of the station, whose literary credits include two novels.

Basically it recommends (1) that aspiring writers study certain current series carefully and try to create storylines tailor-made for them; (2) that they make previous inquiry of the producers before submitting their scripts; and (3) that, best of all, they try to get representation by a reputable literary agent in Hollywood or New York. A fourth suggestion, especially for the young writer, is that he try to get any sort of job with a telestation, even sweeping floors, to acquire background.

Text comes with four attachments, the first a list of New York literary agents classified by whether they're open for new clients and whether or not they charge a reading fee. Code rates the fees as moderate, high or very high. Other attachments are a list of booking agencies that handle scripts, a list of current tv productions that might buy freelance scripts (with names of producers or story editors), and a rundown on pilots in progress this season.

National Assn. of Broadcasters has asked Federal Communications commission to extend until Feb. 1 the deadline for commenting on the proposed revamping of the financial data reports required of broadcasters. Present deadline is Dec. 9.

In a petition filed at FCC, NAB said the revised form differs so much with the present version that many licensees might desire to submit individual comments or consult with NAB on developing a general industry statement.

The additional time for comments, NAB argued, would benefit FCC in its considerations and lead to a more "affirmative result." John F. Meagher and Charles H. Tower, NAB vice presidents for radio and television respectively, urged operators to study the new form carefully and consult their legal and accounting departments.

National Labor Relations Board has ordered representation elections for announcers and announcer-technicians of four Portland, Ore., radio stations to choose between American Federation of Television and Radio Artists and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

NLRB ruled that the representation unit should be comprised of all employes who appear regularly or frequently before microphones, as sought by AFTRA. The stations wanted technicians to be included also. Covered by the NLRB directive are stations KPOJ, KGW, KOIN, and KXL.

The American Baptist Convention is calling for nominations for the 1961 Radio-TV Awards, which will be made next June at the group's 54th annual meeting. Deadline for the nominations from broadcasters and others is March 1.

Two of the awards are for a "unique contribution (via tv or radio) to the advancement of world peace" and the "non-professional who has done the most to further an American Baptist outreach in radio and tv."

Bernard Posner, director of radio and television for Veterans Administration since 1950, has been appointed Asst. Executive Secretary and Assistant to the Chairman of the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped.

scene and witness the progress first-hand. It's remarkable, the development of commercial tv here in just a few short years.

"I have visited and talked with officials of all the companies. TV in Japan is in very good hands. These are intelligent men, far-sighted men, dedicated men.

"I found no place in my conversations with tv operators and even with Government officials which would indicate that there will be any arbitrary restrictions against the import of American films.

"I was particularly interested in color tv here," Jones continued. "There seems to be two areas of thought, one is optimistic, the other is not. I'm not an expert, but I found the color to be exceptionally good and would assume that the progress of color in Japan will have the same pattern as in the United States. It will to a large extent depend on the price of sets on the retail level."

Before returning to New York early next month, Jones will swing through Southeast Asia and the Middle East and visit Moscow.

moveover to standard time throughout the country.

Traditionally, it takes longer for a new 60-minuter to build a following. Despite that, many newies fell safely higher than the 17 rating needs to give the participating advertiser a good shake in the cost-per-thousand milieu. The countdown includes: "Stagecoach West," with a 20:6 rating and a 32.7 share of audience; "Thriller," 19.9 rating, 31.6 share; "Route 66," 18.9 rating, 31.6 share; "Naked City," 18.5 rating, 41.3 share.

There also were some surprises in the pre-election National Nielsens. "Walt Disney Presents" was shifted by ABC-TV from Friday night last season, when it was up against some westerns, to Sunday night from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. The shift helped "Disney," which also contains oater stories, putting it in the top 10 hourlong vidfilm derby with a 21.4 rating.

The success of "Sea Hunt" in syndication didn't brush off on "Aquanauts" on CBS-TV. Both are being produced by Ivan Tors in association with Ziv-UA. But "Aquanauts" placed 21st in the National Nielsens in a field of 26.

Cleveland—Art Schreiber, news director of radio station WERE here, moves over to Westinghouse outlet KYW in the similar post. He succeeds Gary Franklin, resigned. At WERE, Schreiber's news staff won the Cleveland AFTRA Award for best local news coverage of 1960. "Fabulous Fifties," a news documentary written, produced and directed by Schreiber, also won an AFTRA award for best radio public-service show of the year.

INTERNATIONAL CAFE
With Rudy Orisek, Trio Los Panchos, Nandor Feher Ensemble, Balkan Strings, others Producer: Hal Stein
Director: Anton Kalman
Distributor: Rudie Productions
60 Mins., Sat., 7:30 p.m.
WGN-TV, Chicago (tape)

Hal Stein and Rudy Orisek, who brainstormed "International Cafe" as a Chicago localer several years ago, have revived the format for syndication, via tape, and could well have a sleeper in it. "Cafe" is a capital television idea, still unique because it's never been imitated. Moreover, it had never been produced so well at the WGN studios as it is today at the independent Graphic Pictures facility, where the set is large and the decor quite believably that of an intime, candle-lit cabaret.

A modest show in terms of the production budget, the very unpretentiousness is its charm. Somehow it manages to project that checkered tablecloth atmosphere beyond the picture tube, giving the performances a feeling of immediacy that is vitiated only occasionally by unjudicious tape editing. As title suggests, it's a variety show with an ethnic slant, the talent being professionals culled from the various nationality circuits of the American melting pot rather than those who work the popular frontline niteries.

Outing caught for review (20) spotlighted the Trio Los Panchos, a terrific Mexican group of guitar-strumming tenors, and the Nandor Feher Ensemble, a juicy violin-vocal group from Budapest, both making their first appearance on U. S. tv. The two folk idioms were surprisingly congruent, perhaps because both the Spanish and gypsy musical expression tend to be effusive. Balance was effected by the show's regular group, the Balkan Strings, which gave out in the authentic Serbian-Croatian genre and detonated most of the dances—kolo, waltz and hora.

Dancing, incidentally, is done for the most part by non-pros in the "Safe" audience, who really know their onions when it comes to ethnic terpology, whether it be group dancing or every-couple-for-itself. It's all to the good that they're dressed in conventional American clothing instead of costumes and that they seem spontaneously motivated to the dance floor.

Program was brisk, diverting and always eye-filling, thanks largely to Anton Kalman's peripatetic cameras and his keen eye for interesting facial studies in the audience. Orisek plays host with commendable restraint, appearing on screen only at the opening and close but otherwise doing the intros voice-over.

An audience predisposed to ethnic entertainment will receive this as satisfying fare, while the uninitiated should find it refreshing television, if not downright exciting. Les.

Lopert Package's $1,500,000 Gross

The Lopert package of 62 pix, now sold in from 40 to 50 markets, has grossed about $1,500,000.

With the Chicago sale to WBBM of about 20 pix in the group, the Lopert pix have been sold in many of the key markets. Buyers for the American dubbed imports include WABC, N.Y.; KRCA, Los Angles; WFIL, Philadelphia; WGR, Buffalo; WCKT, Miami; WWL, New Orleans; and KROD, El Paso.

Group includes such titles as "La Parisienne," "The Horse's Mouth," and "The Third Key."

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Dinah Shore (Capitol): "I AIN'T DOWN YET" (Frank-Rinemer*) is a bright and catchy version of the marching song from "Unsinkable Molly Brown." "I GOTTA LOVE YOU" (Manchester*) has a neat rhythmic line and a vocal styling that's quite intriguing.

Paul Winchell (Epic): "WHEN YOU COME TO THE END OF A LOLLIPOP" (Topper*) using the voice of Jerry Mahoney, Winchell has a cute novelty item that will be good for holiday play and could hold on for some time after. "ROLY 'POLY SNOWMAN" (Topper*) rolls along at a nice pace that will please jocks looking for seasonal material.

Vince Mauro (Decca): "IF EVER I WOULD LEAVE YOU" (Chappell*) gets another strong romantic interpretation that will win deejay attention. "OH, WHAT A DIFFERENCE YOU MADE" (Leeds*) a fair ballad that seems to fit the mood this time of year.

Jeff Barry (RCA Victor): "ALL YOU NEED IS A QUARTER" (Stratford*) salutes the juke industry with a frisky beat and a vocal the kids could take to. Tune's out of the legituner "Do Re Mi." "TEEN QUARTET" (E. B. Marks†) has a good jumping sound for the juke market.

Carmen McRae (Mercury): "OH! LOOK AT ME NOW" (Embassy†) gets a bright and zingy interpretation that will get this oldie plenty of current spinning time. "THE VERY THOUGHT OF YOU" (Witmark*) is another standard headed for new play because of a solid vocal styling.

Al Tousan (Seville): "BACK HOME IN INDIANA" (Shapiro-Bernstein*) rides into the spinning sweepstakes with a swinging instrumental headed by Al Tousan's piano that will give the younger set another oldie to take hold of. "NAOMI" (Tidelandt) shows off more of Tousan's piano in a likable instrumental setting.

The Secrets (Columbia): "QUIEN SABE?" (Larry Taylor*) is a romantic blending of melody and lyrics delivered in a warm and persuasive manner. "NOW IS THE HOUR" (Leeds*) supplies another good showcasing for this new group.

Sandyl Cordell (Sunbird): "MY ROCKIN' HOME ON THE RANGE" (Lambert*) is rocked with a frisky beat that will give the jock and juke crowd a new perspective of the range. "I SURRENDER DEAR" (Mills*) shows her in an emotional groove that she brings off quite well.

Barbara Lantz (PhilTone): "TALL BOY" (Saunders*) is an interesting ballad that's heightened by thrush's stylized handling. "WISHING RING" (Acuff-Rose†) rocks in familiar fashion but she does sing it with an unusual fervor.

Buddy Knox (Liberty): "LOVEY DOVEY" (Progressive†) works up into a happy swinging item that should see some action on the jock and juke levels. "I GOT YOU" (Simon-Jackson†) has a frisky style that could build into a juke-pleaser.

Kitty White (Dot): "WINGS OF A DOVE" (Bee Gee†) is a nifty rocking ballad projected with strong commercial impact by this songstress. "WIMOWEH" (Sun-Vine†) is a potent slice also due for big returns.

Best Bets

LAWRENCE WELK ORCH (Dot) ..... CALCUTTA
..... My Grandfather's Clock

Lawrence Welk Orch's "Calcutta" (Pincus-Symphony House) shapes as the year's end instrumental click. Its catchy melodic beat, of German origin, has an infectious quality that will take it far. "My Grandfather's Clock" (Harry Von Tilzer*) beats in the familiar and acceptable Welk way.*

* * *

VIC DAMONE (Columbia) ..... IF EVER I WOULD LEAVE YOU
..... I'll Be Your Lover

Vic Damone's "If Ever I Would Leave You" (Chappell) is one of the big ballads out of Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe's "Camelot" with a stirring vocal rendition that gives it top-drawer quality. "I'll Be Your Lover" (Mogul*) has a warm ballad feel that develops into good programming material.*

BEN E. KING (Atco) ..... FIRST TASTE OF LOVE
..... Spanish Harlem

Ben E. King's "First Taste of Love" (Rumbalero-Progressive-Trio†) has the highly rhythmic lines that are surefire to take over the spinning circuits for a big payoff. "Spanish Harlem" (Progressive-Trio†) is an offbeat mood piece that will develop playing interest.

* * *

PAUL ANKA (ABC-Paramount) ..... RUDOLPH, THE RED-NOSED REINDEER
..... It's Christmas Everywhere

Paul Anka's "Rudolph, The Red-Nosed Reindeer" (St. Nicholas) should get off the strong seasonal rides because of its bright and snappy treatment. "It's Christmas Everywhere" (Spanka†) is an ordinary Yule-time effort.*

ROY ORBISON (Monument) ..... I'M HURTIN'
..... I Can't Stop Loving You

Roy Orbison's "I'm Hurtin'" (Acuff-Rose†) has a swinging ballad mood that is sure to grab top spins. "I Can't Stop Loving You" (Acuff-Rose†) is in the rocking ballad form that's okay for juke tastes.

* * *

JOE JONES (Roulette) ..... HERE'S WHAT YOU GOTTA DO
..... One Big Mouth

Joe Jones' "Here's What You Gotta Do" (Kahl, Lloyd & Logan†) has a beat and a vocal delivery that's just right for current spinning market. "One Big Mouth" (Tyro-Peanuts†) works around a lyric and rhythm angle that the juves take to.

BILLY BORLYN (Columbia) ..... I WANT A GIRL
..... I Just Don't Know

Billy Borlyn's "I Want A Girl" (Dymor) will hit the spinning circuit in a big way because of the way it works the lyric idea and vocal sound for teenage appreciation. "I Just Don't Know" (Korwin*) builds up a gospel shout into a good commercial side.*

* * *

BOB LUMAN (Warner Bros.) ..... WHY, WHY, BYE, BYE
..... Oh, Lonesome Me

Bob Luman's "Why, Why, Bye, Bye" (Acuff-Rose†) makes the alfalfa sway in a way that will capture a pop audience for big returns. "Oh Lonesome Me" (Acuff-Rose†) is a revival of the Don Gibson hit that could go on another clicko spinning round.

* * *

HANK & DAVID (MGM) ..... LOP-SIDED, OVER-LOADED
..... Lovelight

Hank & David's "Lop-Sided, Over-Loaded" (Sheldon†) is built for the teen market with a novelty peg that will ride strongly on jock and juke levels. "Lovelight" (Sequence) flickers with an okay rocking beat that could keep the juke crowd happy.*

JIMMY COOK ORCH COPS AFM BAND COMPETITION

Detroit, Nov. 29.

Jimmy Cook, saxist and head of a 15-piece band from Las Vegas, copped the first prize in the "Best New Dance Band of 1960" contest sponsored for the second year by the American Federation of Musicians. Cook was judged tops last week (22) in the national finals held at Cobo Auditorium where five sectional winners competed.

The Steve Laughery band, of Moses Lake, Wash., was rated second and Jimmy Wilkins' band, from Detroit, was given third place. In addition to winning an AFM trophy, the Cook band shares in $30,000 worth of new instruments, a network tv shot, a Las Vegas booking and a disk pact.

Album Reviews

Percy Faith Orch: "Camelot" (Columbia). Percy Faith has once again taken a Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe score and turned it into a tasty instrumental dish. Faith did the same for Lerner & Loewe's "My Fair Lady" four years ago. In this takeoff of the "Camelot" score, Faith has some rousing numbers as well as warm ballad moods to play with and he gives them all a rich orch coloring that will develop as steady programming material.

Della Reese: "Della Della Cha Cha Cha" (RCA Victor). Although she's made her mark as a straight blues and big ballad singer, Della Reese shifts easily into the swinging cha cha groove. In this package, she takes a flock of standards, sprinkles 'em with a chile flavor and belts 'em with a flavorsome lilt. Some of the sides, like "Tea For Two" and "Love For Sale," should find their way to the deejay turntables.

Buddy Greco: "Songs For Swinging Losers" (Epic). There's a disk comeback due for Buddy Greco and this package is a step in that direction. He's a solid belter whose style is straight and potent on an extremely tasty repertoire. Working with arrangements by Chuck Sagle, who also conducts the orch, Greco gets a lot of mileage out of "These Foolish Things," "Something I Dreamed Last Night" and "Blame It On My Youth."

Dick Jacobs Orch: "Written In The Stars" (Coral). This is an original instrumental package that should build Rod McKuen's reputation as a composer. McKuen has gone to the signs of the Zodiac for his melodic moods and works from Aries to Pisces with meaningful and appropriate musical phrases. Dick Jacobs' orch delineation gives it the beat that will please those who go for straight instrumental material that's a little off the beaten track.

Bing Crosby-Louis Armstrong: "Bing and Satchmo" (MGM). Team-up of Bing Crosby and Louis Armstrong provides a lot of listening pleasure. Both are masters of their craft and know how to pack a vocal punch with seemingly little effort. Most of the arrangements are by Johnny Mercer and most of the tunes are familiar but worth hearing again.

Don Ralke Orch: "The Savage and the Sensuous Bongos" (Warner Bros.). The sound of the percussion took over the disk market this year and now Don Ralke has come up with a set that can take its place along side the "Persuasive," etc., Ralke delivers with a vitality that's exciting and melodically dramatic. He's assembled some of the top percussionists around to build up the Afro-based beat to a high pitch.

Kay Starr: "Jazz Singer" (Capitol). There aren't many singers around today who have the persuasive piping attack of Kay Starr. She puts a lot of passion into her work and it takes hold. Under Van Alexander's slick orch beat, Miss Starr comes across strongly with such standards as "Hard Hearted Hannah," "I Never Knew" and "My Man."

"Doug Harrell" (ABC-Paramount). This is a novel entry into the comedy album sweepstakes. Doug Harrell is a North Carolina medico with a sense of humour. His wry look at the profession has already scored on disks so there should be a built-in market for this LP. Included are his popular "Hospitality Blues" as well as such nifty items as "Nurse's Lament," "Exsangination Blues" and "The First Year."

The Coasters: "One By One" (Atco). This is a fresh try for the Coasters and could swing open up new avenues for the group. In addition to toying with a standard catalog, they each take off on their own for solo stints that are quite impressive. Jerry Lieber & Mike Stoller, who wrote many of the Coasters' pop single hits, produced this package with an ear for song's intrinsic value as well as current pop tastes. It's a blending that should give this set a good sales run.

Ernie Heckscher Orch: "Dancing On Broadway" (Verve). Ernie Heckscher's orch has been keeping the crowd stepping at San Francisco's Fairmount Hotel for some time. He again shows what draws the terpsters to the floor in this package of Broadway showtunes. Everything here is done with a crisp beat and "Can-Can," "Sound of Music," "South Pacific," "Oklahoma," "Gypsy," "My Fair Lady," "West Side Story" and "Bells Are Ringing" get a lilting representation, and a vocal chorus fills in occasionally. Gros.

BIKEL GIVES GLOBAL O.O. TO FOLK REPERTORY

Versatile singer-actor Theodore Bikel has gotten together some 80-odd folk songs, of all lands, into "Folksongs and Footnotes: An International Songbook" (Meridian; $2.95 and $4.95, latter the clothbound edition) and it is all the title indicates.

Multilingual Bikel, now featured in "Sound of Music," the Mary Martin starrer, has been around the bistros and stages of the world. Originally an Israeli, he is probably proficient in all the 17 languages featured in these 84 songs, many of them Yiddish traditional along with American, Norwegian, Slovak, Greek, Russian, German, Hebrew, Scottish, Gypsy, Irish, Romanian, Armenian, French, Spanish et cetera.

Many are Bikel's own arrangements and each is still further embellished with a translation or sprightly anecdote, so as to make the "footnotes" to these international folksongs a well-rounded reading and/or performing book. Many also have been recorded by Bikel and there is a comprehensive discography. Abel.

Copland on Music'

"Copland on Music" by Aaron Copland (Doubleday; $3.95), is a lively, penetrating tome by one of America's foremost composer-conductors who has also gained eminence as writer and lecturer.

Copland admits he reacts more readily to stimulus of soundwaves produced by instruments than to word-ideas. Nevertheless, he has assembled enlightening, often amusing comments on his art and its practitioners. He submits pertinent passages on Koussevitsky, Stravinsky, Mozart, Berlioz, Liszt, Faure, Schuman, Milhaud and Britten, among others. He discusses America's "young composers" at length. He has pithy observations on European music festivals, and writes understandably of South American composers. Copland also disgorges some short-snorters: "I hate an emotion - drenched voice"; "In a certain mood reading about music can excite one . . .'; "Nothing pleases the composer so much as to have people disagree as to the movements of his piece they liked best."

Copland also examines, critically, the position of music in our national cultural life with keen awareness of its many problems of survival. Rodo.

A&R MEN NEAR TOTAL ECLIPSE

Film, Pop Writers' Beefs Playing Role in ASCAP Board Election

Beefs of the younger pop song writers and the Hollywood film score writers are now playing a role in the elctions for new writer board members for the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers. The Screen Composers Assn., headed by Miklos Rosza, has already actively intervened in the election fight with a blast against incumbent board member L. Wolfe Gilbert for allegedly being against liberalized payments to background composers.

Gilbert, who has a committee campaigning for his reelection, stated that Rosza has been "maliciously informed by someone." Gilbert pointed out that he had voted to approve every measure proposed by ASCAP Stanley Adams in the background writers' favor. However, Gilbert has stated that ASCAP cannot compete with Broadcast Music Inc. which he charged with giving "extravagant guarantees and longterm contract" to the background writers. "If anyone else on the ASCAP board or in any official capacity tells them something to the contrary, then he is misleading them and currying favor."

Meantime, the group of pop cleffers, organized in the Current Writers Committee, are backing Hal David and Sid Tepper as candidates for the ASCAP board. Charles Tobias, another nominee, is also getting support from this group in recognition of his long services as proxy of the American Guild of Authors & Composers. Sammy Fain is heading the committee backing Tobias.

UA Stepping Up O'seas Operation

United Artists Records, which recently launched a new LP line under the Ultra Audio label, is now stepping up its activity in the foreign market with the appointment of Sidney Shemel as foreign operations director. Shemel has been legal counsel for the UA disk operation. He'll work under David Picker, UA Records' exec v.p., and Art Talmadge, the diskery's v.p. and general manager.

With the completion of distribution agreements inked recently to cover Venezuela, Argentina and Chile, UA now has globe-girdling network with 28 reps located in all the major countries of the non-Communist world. According to present plans, a series of overseas meetings are being scheduled between UA execs and foreign distrabs for early next year. It will be the first such meetings to be held by the UA diskery and Picker returned from a European trip last week to prepare the ground for the meetings.

Steve Morris, meantime, has been named liaison between the New York homeoffice and the foreign reps, working under Shemel.

CAP IN XMAS DRIVE FOR B'WAY, PIC PKGES.

Capitol Records will push Broadway and Hollywood for the Christmas buying season. Label has set up a special program for its original cast albums and soundtrack sets which offers dealers a month-long one-for-10 deal on 11 packages.

To qualify for the special offer, dealer must order a minimum of 30 LPs in any combination.

Platinum for Silvester

London, Nov. 29.

Britain's first platinum disk has been awarded to Victor Silvester by EMI (Electric & Musical Industries) Records. Though the maestro has never been on the hit parade, he has, in more than 25 years with the label, sold over 30,000,000 singles. He will also be collecting EMI's first silver LP to mark the sale of 250,000 LPs by the Silvester orchestras.

He has had about two disks released almost every month since he started recording for EMI.

ASCAP Retains Judge Rifkind As Special Counsel

Former Federal Judge Simon H. Rifkind, of the law firm of Weiss, Rifkind, Wharton & Garrison, has been retained as special counsel for the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers. The use of outside legal eagles, to supplement the activities of ASCAP's general counsel Herman Finkelstein, has been a longtime practice by the Society. INDIE PRODUCERS MAKE THE HITS

By HERM SCHOENFELD

The artists & repertoire chief has come to the end of his era. Once the almighty oligarch of the pop disk industry, the a&r men have gone into a slow but relentless eclipse over the past couple of years coincidental with the rise of a new music biz phenomenon—the independent record producer.

While a&r execs like Steve Sholes at RCA Victor, Frank De Vol at Columbia, Milt Gabler at Decca still play key roles at their respective labels, it's no longer primarily the job of mating the right artist with the right tune. If anything, their jobs as a&r chief could more accurately be as supervisors of producers.

At the present time, the indie producer is now in the pop saddle. He's the one who selects the tune, very often publishing it, gets the talent, packages the session and then offers the master to one of the major companies or one of the hotter smaller labels. In many cases, the producers control the artist and master by means of leasing deals in which they can earn from 5 to 10% of the retail price, depending on the money offered in front.

Indie producing has turned the pop disk biz into a wide-open enterprise for publishers, writers, talent managers or anyone else with a platter idea. The indie produced master is a direct outgrowth of the demonstration disk which the a&r chiefs used to insist upon for auditioning new material. Since it cost about $150 to turn out an acceptable demo, publishers and writers decided to spend a few more dollars to make a full-fledged master which they could sell directly.

Probably the most successful indie producing team in the business is Jerry Lieber & Mike Stoller, the young rock 'n' roll writing team who also turn out disks by other writers for Atlantic Records. Another hot team is Hugo & Luigi

Lieberson Sees Disker Competition For B'way Cast Sets 'Verging on Hysteria'

By MIKE GROSS

The current disk company competition for original Broadway cast albums has created a situation that borders on hysteria and that will eventually collapse if it is allowed to continue along the same lines. That's the sumup of Goddard Lieberson, Columbia Records president, who feels that dealings between disk companies and legit musical producers have been thrown out of perspectve because of the diskeries' desire to latch on to an original cast album at any cost.

Lieberson believes that a number of musical shows will now be coming in because of a disk company's misplaced enthusiasm which will result in financial support that the production otherwise would have not received. Lieberson analyzes it this way: "For a producer to ask a record company for money is immoral, and for a record company to give it is ignorant."

"At some point or either," he adds, "some standards have to be established." By that he means that all planned musicals aren't equal and that the disk company "hysteria" has caused many producers to think that they are. Lieberson admits that musicals by Rodgers & Hammerstein (and now Rodgers alone), Lerner & Loewe, Harold Arlen, Cole Porter and about a half-dozen other top writers deserve special consideration, but after that the shows take listening and investigation and not a haphazard investment just to get the original cast album rights be-

Col Advance On 'Camelot' LP Nears $1,250,000 Mark

Columbia Records has already racked up close to $1,250,000 in advance billings on the original Broadway cast album of "Camelot." The Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe musical, which opens on Broadway Saturday (3), has an advance ticket sale of nearly $3,000,000.

According to Col's sales department, the advance orders coming from special three-inch gift disks, which were put on sale to take care of sales that may have been lost due to the delay in the album's release date, have passed the 200,000 mark. The musical was originally scheduled to open on Broadway Nov. 19 but was pushed back until Dec. 3 and now Col has scheduled a Dec. 11 recording session with hopes of getting it into the stores by Dec. 15 or 16.

Meantime, Col has released Percy Faith's instrumental album version of the score and is pushing singles by Johnny Mathis, Tony Bennett and Vic Damone with special four-color sleeves.

Nix Philips Ltd. Dicker for Dot

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Paramount Pictures has turned down a reported multimillion-dollar offer made by Philips Ltd. of Holland for Par's recording subsidiary, Dot Records. Philips, one of Europe's largest manufacturers and distributors of electrical equipment, pitched the offer with the understanding that Randy Wood founder of Dot Records, would remain as prexy of the label, concentrating on U.S. and western hemisphere biz. Wood sold Dot to Paramount three years ago in a $2,000,000 deal, negotiated by Jules C. Stein, head of MCA. Dot has since doubled its annual take and is heading for an $11,000,000 gross this year.

Understood Philips' move to purchase Dot is step in direction of creating a stronger foothold in the U.S. markets. Philips has a reciprocal distribution agreement with Columbia Records in the U.S. but that pact expires in two years. Deal under which British London Records distributes Dot outside the U.S. is also due to expire in 1962. London is a subsid of Edward R. (Ted) Lewis' British Decca company.

RAY ELLIS EXITS AS MGM'S A&R DIRECTOR

Ray Ellis has exited MGM Records. For the past several years he had been diskery's artists & repertoire chief and musical director. No replacement has been set yet.

Ellis moved out of the MGM fold to concentrate on independent production, writing, conducting and arranging. He plans a move-in on tv and is presently scheduled to arrange and conduct two tv specials in 1961 and is negotiating for a special tv series.

Ellis, who also did several albums and singles under the MGM banner, will remain on the diskery's roster as a recording artist.

FTC Stepping Into Song Shark Racket; Pins Label on L.A. Firm

Washington, Nov. 29.

Federal Trade Commission has charged Stephen F. Singer, owner of Star-Crest Recording Co., Hollywood, with using deception in luring fees from songwriters for recording their works.

FTC's complaint accused Singer of making false royalty claims in advertisements. Instead of paying royalties to those whose songs are recorded, FTC said, Singer charges his customers the cost of producing the records plus a profit to himself.

The complaint also challenged Singer's advertising claims that he employs outstanding Hollywood vocalists to record accepted songs; that his "Music of America Series" albums, in which the songs are recorded, contains successful current hits; and that there is a shortage of songs which can't be alleviated by professional composers.

Singer was also accused of sending telegrams to prospective customers giving the false impression that vocalist Jimmie Rodgers would record their songs. FTC said that lesser-known Tony Rogers actually does the recordings.

BMI Parlays Hampton, Civil War Routine For D.C. Press Club Party

Washington, Nov. 29.

Broadcast Music Inc.'s recent emphasis on making friends in Washington continues to pay off. Latest development in the effort, now about four years old, was providing the show for the President's Ball of the National Press Club Saturday (26), only black tie affair of the year at the famous saloon. (BMI moved in with something fancier after ASCAP had established a solid success of the annual luncheon it stages for the club. Club members write the news about music's troubles in Washington, as well as everybody else's.)

For the occasion, BMI, with board chairman Sidney Kaye among those in the audience, programmed the world preem of "Names From the War" by Bruce Catton, distinguished historian, with music by Alec Wilder. Catton did the narration. It is on a new LP on the Gold Crest label with Dave Garroway narrating.

It's questionable whether Catton's work has literary dimensions worthy of elaborate treatment by orchestra and chorus. The theme is the Civil War, the tragedy forever affixed to the peculiar names of its battles and the enigma of it as a whole. But the composition lacks dramatic tone and rhythm of language. It is interesting without being memorable.

Lionel Hampton and his band created more excitement for Washington newsmen than they've had since election night. In the end, Hampton gave out a jam session and got back one of the loudest ovations ever from club members.

In the femme vocalist billet, Peggy King was a happy selection. She's fine in the looks and music categories, but there was irony for BMI in the fact that her best number, "Frankie and Johnny," is P.D.

The Jordannaires sent it all off to a lively start with four interpretations of "You Are My Sunshine," as barbershop, country, popular and rock and roll. There's excessive yak between their offerings taking away from what otherwise is a good act. BMI v.p. Robert J. Burton did the emcee chore.

Carlton Moves Into Instruction LP Field

Carlton Records is moving into the instruction album field. Diskery has revamped a "Hear How" series that is being produced by Dick Kleiner, tv and record columnist for Newspaper Enterprise Assoc.

The "Hear How" series will be kicked off with six LP's. Covered in the initial release are albums on golf, bridge, typing, bowling, planning a dinner party and physical culture. The albums, which will retail for $1.98 each, will be primarily channelled for supermarkets, drug stores and other mass market outlets.

BRIT. DISK BIZ HIT BY SHARP DROP IN EXPORTS

London, Nov. 22.

Manufacturers' sales of disks in September, according to the official figures released by the Board of Trade, dropped by 2% compared with September, '59, with $3,584,000 being garnered from a total 6,713,000 platters produced Part of the minor decline due to a 5% cutback in the output of 33 rpms.

But in the quarter July-September, total manufacturers' sales were 9% up on those for the corresponding 1959 quarter, with production at 3,276,000 copies being 5% more than the 3,003,000 registered in July-September last year.

The September statistics once again confirms the decline of the 78 rpm. disk—263,000 against 704,000 in September, '59, a fall of 63%. Production of 45s showed a 14% upswing, totalling 4,897,000 as against 4,290,000.

Though the diskeries don't regard that 2% September decline in cash reaped as anything really significant, they nevertheless have some cause for concern over export sales. In September last year these were $1,072,400, but this year dropped to $658,000. In the third quarter of 1960, the comparative decline was 12%.

Lieberson

fore anyone else. (Lieberson says Col put money into "Bye Bye Birdie" by newcomers Charles Strouse & Lee Adams because he "believed in it.")

With recording costs of an original cast album now coming close to the $25,000 mark (cast gets a week's salary) and promotion, advertising, merchandising, etc. costs reaching over $100,000, Lieberson figures that the record companies can no longer afford to grab a musical just because it's a Broadway entry. "It takes a lot of album sales to make up that investment," he says.

The publishers of the scores, too, says Lieberson, are taking advantage of the disk companies' original cast album "hysteria." "Their demands for singles and which artist should record what song completely discounts the intelligence of the record man whose business it is to know what song fits a certain artist's capabilities."

The publishers as well as the writers have moved into the artists & repertoire act, too, by insisting that a particular artist is the only one who can do justice to their song. "If they feel they are so expert about a&r," says Lieberson, "they should see me about a job with the company."

On the original cast album level, Lieberson insists that it is an area in which the recording man and not the theatre man should have his way. "It's not enough to just record a stage version," he says, "you have to do something different for a record just as you have to do something different in a film version of a stage musical."

The Lieberson "difference" has resulted in such original cast album clickos as "My Fair Lady" and "Sound of Music" among others.

DEEJAY LARRY FINLEY NAMED TOPS VICE-PREZ

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

Larry Finley is giving up all his radio and tv projects, aside from his KABC-TV show, "Music Is My Beat," in order to accept post of veepee in charge of operations at Tops Records. Label, headed by prexy Robert Blythe and board chairman Al Bloomingdale, is attempting to branch into a larger market other than the lowpriced field it currently is engaged in. Plans call for rthe signing of big names.

Dave Pell will continue functioning as artists & repertoire head under new setup but will work under Finley's direction.

Mathis Unit Grosses Big 32G in Cleveland

Cleveland, Nov. 29.

Johnny Mathis' concert grossed a hearty $32.000 in eight performances at Cleveland's legit stand, the Hanna Theatre, last week (21-26). Scaled at $5.50 in the 1,515-seater, the package had a potential of about $48,500 but best orchestra seats did not move as rapidly as lower-priced tickets for young Mathis fans. They rang up sellouts in Friday and Saturday matinees.

Nat Cole's new musical, "I'm With You," had been scheduled by the Hanna for current week but it was cancelled with only one week's notice by house manager Milton Krantz.

Abeles' Aide, Ex-Fed'l D.A. Clarke's Pubservice Kudo

Former Assistant U.S. Attorney John S. Clark, who resigned from office in July to join the staff of Julian T. Abeles, was honored in recognition of his public service, by U.S. Attorney S. Hazard Gillespie Jr. and his staff at a party in the prosecutor's New York office last week Members of the Federal bench, ex-assistants, and the prosecutor's entire staff attended.

Gillespie presented Clark with a plaque bearing a replica of the seal of the Department of Justice and an engraved citation. He congratulated him on his record as an assistant prosecutor, noting that he had successfully represented the Government in many major civil and criminal cases while in office. The Federal Prosecutor recalled that, among other things, Clark had smashed the so-called Sham Marriage Racket and had defended the multimillion dollar suit against the Government involving the patent on the bombsight employed in the Air Force's post war bombers. He noted that his former assistant had likewise conducted several special grand jury investigations of great importance to the Government in recent years. In making the presentation, Gillespie declared that Clark's service had been "truly outstanding".

Attorney Abeles' practice is largely music and motion picture copyright and infringement, wherein ex-U.S. d.a. Clark is now specializing.

3 Ink Payola Orders

Washington, Nov. 29.

Federal Trade Commision has approved anti-payola consent orders affecting three record companies.

Barred from disbursing payola to disk jockeys and other broadcast personnel were General Distributing, Baltimore; Triumph Records, N. Y.; and Jay Kay Distributing, Detroit.

Inside Stuff—Music

Broadcast Music Inc., which made its Broadway breakthrough with Sheldon Harnick and Jerry Bock on the scores for "Fiorello" and "Tenderloin," has a new writing team on tap for the legituner sweepstakes. The writers are Marvin Schofer and Michael McWhinney (lyrics) and Don Wolf (music), who are doing an adaptation of Virginia Rowan's "The Loving Couple." It'll be their first Broadway effort. McWhinney is currently represented by songs and sketches in Julius Monk's "Dressed To The Nines"; Schofer was an assistant director at the St. Louis Municipal Opera; and Wolf has been writing for the pop song field for the past several years. No production auspices has yet been set for the tuner.

The Voices of Christmas, Coast carol group headed by Sonny Burke and Les Brown, have set Dec. 15 as date for their annual dinner at $50 per couple in the Crystal Room of the BevHills Hotel in Los Angeles. The voices, comprised of both show biz personalities and non-pros, get together every year to make the rounds caroling. They donate their time for the purpose of raising coin for the Michael Burke Foundation, in memory of Burke's three-year-old son who passed away in 1953. All funds raised by the voices during their Yuletide caroling is turned over to various hospitals for explicit purpose of cardiac research and purchasing of medical equipment. Voices include Bob Breckner, John Vrba, Axel Stordahl, June Hutton, Joane Greer, Bud Dant, Jean Detterman and Stumpy Brown.

New issue of the "Calendar of Music Activities in the United States" lists 10,200 music events in 927 cities for the 1960-61 season. The directory, the only comprehensive listing of music dates, is prepared by the President's Music Committee of the People-to-People Program. It covers symphony, opera, band, jazz, dance and chamber music performances, folk festivals, music workshops, congresses and clinics.

Meredith Willson's score for the legit musical, "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," now at the Winter Garden on Broadway, will get a symphonic showcasing in Carnegie Hall, N. Y., Nov. 26 with Andre Kostelanetz conducting the New York Philharmonic. Willson was formerly associated with the Philharmonic as a regular sideman under Arturo Toscanini.

Three entertainment unions have been given U. S. Information Agency's Distinguished Service Award for their cooperation in making talent and music available to Voice of America programs. The awards went to American Federation of Musicians, American Federation of Television & Radio Artists and American Guild of Musical Artists. Presentation to union execs was made in New York last week by USIA Director George V. Allen. Allen said the help of the unions "not only have inestimably smoothed and simplified the functioning of VOA, but have contributed immeasurably to portraying our culture abroad."

As MGM's "Ben-Hur" moves into its second year, the Big 3 (Robbins, Feist & Miller), publishers of the Miklos Rosza score, is continuing to expand their publications of the pic's music. Firm began with a piano edition of themes from the score. Working with Rosza, the Big 3 recently followed up with choral compositions; "The Christ Theme," "Adoration of the Magi" and "Star of Bethlehem." Firm has also recently released "Parade of the Charioteers." a concert band arrangement. Firm is also preparing "Ben-Hur" publication for brass choir, string orchestra and concert orchestra.

News dispatch from Copenhagen reports that redfaced Danish cops had to cancel their annual charity concert after the star of the event, American blues singer Nat Russel, was arrested for allegedly being kingpin of the largest narcotics ring in northern Europe. Russel and scores of nitery hostesses were picked up on information from Interpol that the ring peddled marijuana in Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Belgium and Holland.

Intratrade report persists that Bonnie Bourne, who successfully bid for Bourne Music, may wind up selling the catalog to Columbia Pictures.

who operate under the RCA banner as an independent entity.

Doc Pomus and Mort Shuman, writers of "Save The Last Dance For Me," have also gone into indie producing as have Paul Vance and Lee Pockriss, who wrote the novelty hit, "Itsy Bitsy Teenie Weenie Yellow Polka-Dot Bikini." They are coming up with their own artists and making various deals in which the diskers offer them in advance coin or give them higher percentage deals.

Goldie Goldmark, of Sheldon Music, has been clicking as an indie producer recently via his Jimmy Jones and Five Sattins' etchings for MGM. Other indie producers now active include Al Nevins & Don Kirschner, Aaron Schroeder, Eddie White, Mack Wolfson, and Charlie Grean.

All of the major disk companies have the "masters wanted" shingle up, thus sparking even more indie producers to enter the field. In fact, a lot of established names, like Pat Boone, Louis Prima & Keely Smith and Bing Crosby, are now operating as indie producers, owning the masters released under major labels.

The man most responsible for creating the image of the powerful a&r chief and glamorizing it for public consumption was Mitch Miller during his heyday at Columbia Records around 10 years ago. Symbolic of the new era is the fact that Miller stepped out of the top a&r slot to become a disk producer for Columbia.

COAST NARAS BRANCH TO AID YOUNG TALENT

Hollywood, Nov. 29.

The western branch of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences has set up a scholarship committee for the express purpose of dishing out financial aid to young musical talent in need to further their education.

Project is the primary purpose of NARAS since its formation two years ago. It's understood that the eastern division of the org will soon follow a similar path to that of the west. Walter S. Heebner has been named by NARAS (west) prexy Sonny Burke to head the special committee that will issue the coin grants.

Burke will shortly disclose date for the next Coast membership meeting, at which time plans for third annual NARAS awards, and date of said event, will be set up.

William Colsey Heads Burkan Prize Roster

First prize of $1,000 in the 1960 Nathan Burkan Memorial Competition for copyright studies sponsored by ASCAP, went to William B. Colsey 3d, Villanova law grad for a paper called "The Protection of Advertising and the Law of Copyright." John Rittenhouse Jr., University of Denver Collegee of Law, copped the $500 second prize for a treatise on renewal rights.

The winners were chosen by a panel made up of Chief Justice Paul Reardon of the Superior Court of Massachusetts, Judge Elbert P. Tuttle of the U.S. Court of Appeals, Atlanta, and Supreme Court Justice Tom Clark, who served as chairman.

Although ASCAP inked a new consent order with the Department of Justice early this year, the internal stresses cued by the new distribution system indicate that more changes can be expected. Since the Society is operating under a consent order, each change must be approved by the Justice Department and Federal Judge Sylvester Ryan, of the N. Y. circuit.

Chi Jazz Joints Jump for Juves

Chicago, Nov. 29.

The jazz bonifaces here are starting to tug again for the underage trade.

Birdhouse, newest spot in the atonal idiom, was first to revive the pitch for juve and family patronage on the basis of soft drinks and vended snacks underpinned by an admission charge.

Moving to meet the "challenge" now, the southside Sutherland Hotel lounge is converting in part to add a "jazz gallery" pink-cheeked clientele, also with a cover and cola drinks prevailing.

It's recalled that wooing of minors got lots of attention from the defunct Blue Note, once the town's jazz flagship, which was one of the first spots to cordon off a section for non-alcoholic trade.

Guy Lombardo revue signed for the Music Hall, Dallas, Nov. 30, to be followed by the Glenn Miller band under Ray McKinley on Dec. 6.

Frank Subsid Gets 'Girl of Night' Score

Saunders Publications, an affiliate of Frank Music, has acquired the score to the recently relased film, "Girl of The Night." The score for the pic, which was produced by Vanguard Productions and released through Warner Bros., was written by Sol Kaplan.

Saunders is currently negotiating for the original soundtrack album and is preparing "Bobby's Theme," from the score, for single recordings.

N. Y. NITERIES IN SQUEEZE

If the New York Police Dept. feels that ID cards are a "must" for personnel identification, whether or not the cabaret performers and musicians resent it, every step should be taken not to penalize arbitrarily businesses which (1) create employment and, more than incidentally, revenues both to the Federal and municipal government and (2) are part-and-parcel of what makes for New York tourism and is part of the attraction of the Big City.

Only a few months back, because of another element—the Equity strike—the New York theatre, which is a prime lure to tourists and native alike, caused much peripheral economic damage to hotels, restaurants, parking lots (indoor and outdoor), the niteries and shopping. For the cops to choose to punish going businesses for relatively minor lapses, just because an ID card had been permitted to expire by some busboy or cabstarter or cameragirl is truly capricious. And to have done so on the eve of the Thangsgiving business, one of the few "good" periods that the cabarets need to flourish, was doubly poor judgment.

The N. Y. Police Dept. may have valid reasons for wanting to continue the ID system. Its virtues are obvious. Not too long ago too many public niteries were underworld fronts. There are still plenty of shady characters connected with the business, whether or not they are cabarets (whose personnel must be so controlled) or some of the lesser bars and pubs.

Commissioner Kennedy is a dedicated police official. There is no question about that, regardless of the degree of his attitudes in enforcing one or another departmental operation. Whether the variety talent or the musicians think they are being discriminated against or should be grouped with busboys and waiters and carriage starters is for the authorities. So long as the regulation exists, Commissioner Kennedy is duty-bound to enforce it on all fronts.

Civic pride, however, dictates more conservative attitudes in the exercise of enforcement. Civic pride and normal realities should also give the Police Dept. a new perspective on how to make the ID system 100% efficient. The ideal method is to utilize some central point, in mid-Manhattan, as the registration base, rather than expect "night people," which most cabaret performers are, to make a trek downtown to that remote license bureau on Worth St. in lower Manhattan. Most practical —and perhaps it's so easy that it would be too simple—is to make the cabaret proprietor or management submit his roster of employers and their identities, on cards supplied by the authorities, and make this a mandatory submission, by mail, much as one pays his bills or files his taxes.

As many cops and many more actors know, nobody has done more benefits for the police and fire departments than do the variety performers.

See Acapulco Tourist Boom

New developments in Acapulco indicate that the Mexican resort is reaching for a heavier slice of the U.S. tourist trade. The new boom is expected to start with Aeronaves Mexico's inauguration of regular jet service to Mexico City Dec. 4, along with a projected increase of its service from there to Acapulco.

Another indication of growth is the phenomenal building of luxury hotels in Acapulco, and a step-up in promotional activity which is figured to entice not only U.S. vacationers, but also those from the Latin and South American countries.

The major event this year will be a Pablo Casals Festival in which the famed Spanish cellist, now living in Puerto Rico, will give a series of recitals. Moreover, a heavily promoted film festival opened Sunday (20). The Casals soiree is expected to lure heavily from many parts of the world. His festivals in Puerto Rico have been major tourism builders. The film festival, it's hoped, will bring in major Hollywood and Continental names as a hypo for the pop trade.

Acapulco has been growing steadily for the past few years as is indicated by the rise of many inns in the city. Cesar Balsa has acquired four within the past few years. Emilio Azcarraga, the Mexican theatre and television station operator, has recently built two, the Ritz Hotel, which opened last week, and the Ritz Motor Hotel.

In addition, the Maris Hotel, built by a Mexican City cafe operator, was recently opened. Other major hotels are projected. The big question in the inn industry of the area is the outcome of the huge skeleton of a new Hilton hotel. Hilton was reported building this with backing from Miguel Aleman interests. However, when the former Mexican president pulled out, Hilton abandoned the project.

Since then, the Hilton property has become more valuable inasmuch as new legislation forbids a structure of more than two stories on the beach side of the road. It's unlikely that this project will remain without a sponsor for long because of its beachfront site.

Desert Inn Execs Bow To Nix of Riviera Buy

Las Vegas, Nov. 29.

Wilbur Clark and the other Desert Inn execs, who were denied permission recently by the Nevada Gaming Commission to buy 38% of the Riviera, will not fight the board's ruling last week that DI-Stardust key personnel cannot be employed by the Riviera casino.

Commissioner Bert Goldwater said the DI was "doing indirectly just what the commission had refused to let the group do directly." Last week Riviera execs denied that DI-Stardust show producer Frank Sennes was booking the Riviera shows.

Berman Concerts Net Boffo 155G

One-man shows continue to be one of the more profitable aspects of show business as is borne out by Shelley Berman's recent tour in concert halls and legit houses which grossed $294,606, of which Berman share was $155,304. Undertaking was so profitable that a new tour is being set up for Berman by MCA which will start at Symphony Hall, Boston, Feb. 3, and will include Carnegie Hall, N. Y., March 12, and various college dates.

One of the most profitable stands was at the Purdue U. Field House in October in which he got as high as 60% of the gate. College stands and auditorium dates alternated with legit houses.

One of the factors helping Berman's personal take is the lack of a profit motive in several situations. In one case, he is booked at the Florida U., Tallahassee, for Feb. 9, in which he is guranteed $3,500 and 60% over $4,000. With student tickets selling at $2, and outsiders buying at a top of $4, the likelihood is that the date will be sold out at a loss if only students buy. The student organization will make up the deficit. In another college situation, Marshall College, Huntington, W. Va., their artists service will underwrite the loss for a soiree that will be for subscribers only with wth only 125 tickets sold to the general public.

Berman will come back from Europe in time for dates at the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria in January, and following some teleguesters, will resume the concert soirees.

High Price of Acts Forcing Smaller Cafes Into Role of Talent Columbus

The smaller cafes are reluctantly being forced into assuming the role of talent discoverers. The continuing high price of acts including the ones that they develop themselves compelling the smallies to be the new Columbuses of the performer orbits.

The turns that work out to the point where they draw on their own are promptly hired away by the wealthier spots. Any act not yet ready for a trek to the better heeled niteries, frequently outprices himself via the option route when each period carries a higher price tag.

The bonifaces in the smaller cafes feel that they will either have to continue to take chances on unknowns or pay higher prices. It's a situation that defies any solution for them. Sometimes, the small spot changes policy in an attempt to get away from the merry-go-round, but the same situation prevails no matter what format is entered into.

At present, the small cafes, around New York at least, have been alternating from acts to jazz. Others are forced to continually hold auditions, while still more shop around for intimate revues in an effort to get away from any kind of turn which goes on an upward salary spiral.

Jazz Gallery's Experiment

Within recent months, a nitery such as the Jazz Gallery in Greenwich Village has attempted to go from the instrumental combos to acts, but is not apparently resigned to the fact that it's gonna pay heavy coin to outfits such as Dave Brubeck which it has booked for Dec. 8, and Dizzy Gillespie which goes in Dec. 20. The Village Vanguard went through that phase a long time ago and is apparently sticking to a jazz policy with instrumental and performer names predominating.

The danger is that there ultimately comes a time in the careers of many of the small bonifaces when very little in the way of promising new performers presents itself. They find that either they must take the choice of upping budgets considerably, or trying to make the run with cheaper availabilities.

In this respect spots such as the Blue Angel, N. Y., the hungry i, San Francisco, and others similarly situated, frequently find themselves in the position of having to pay a performer they recently developed at not much more than starting salaries, a sum ranging into four figures. They find themselves with the alternative of paying or doing more developing. They have been known to do both.

Costs have become the major cafe problem with talent contributing no minor share of that headache. The operators, at this point, see no easy solution. It's a problem affecting the intime or the avant garde niteries. The larger operations have the problem of getting names at the right price.

Con Man Strikes Again In Pitt as 'Look' Reporter

Pittsburgh, Nov. 29.

The confidence man, masquerading as Bob Newhart, has changed his identity and is now a "Look correspondent." He struck again here last Wednesday at the Phoenix Motel and clipped the owner for $200. The Phoenix is just down the road from the Holiday House where he had been introduced from the floor as "Newhart" and where he had bilked the Jaye Bros. for $125 after taking the Pitt Hilton for $1,000. He moved down the road on Thursday to the Jacktown Motel where he got $20 on a bad check and left with a bill of $36.

Police were tipped off, but when they got to the Jacktown he was gone. There are no pictures of him around but descriptions of him have been sent all over the country. Basic identification is that he is 35, brown hair and about six feet tall.

Centlivre Control Brings GAC Shifts

General Artists Corp. is undergoing several corporate changes following assumption of its control by Centlivre Brewing Corp., the holding company headed by Philly financier Herbert Siegel. One of the more important shifts is the switch of Cy Donner from the post of comptroller to treasurer. His old spot will be assumed by William Healy.

Donner had long requested that routine fiscal chores be taken off his hands to provide him with more time for policy making. The other major change is the company's adoption of an employee profit sharing fund tied directly to the firm's earnings instead of a pension fund.

Centlivre's takeover of GAC is not yet complete. There are still some details on transfer of stock to be ironed out. However, the principle of the absorption of GAC was settled as far back as Oct. 10 when the closing was made.

New Mexico State Fair Grosses Record $1-Mil.

Albuquerque, Nov. 29.

The New Mexico State Fair, for the first time in its 23-year history, grossed over $1,000,000 during the 1960 exposition, and fair officials have made plans to extend next year's show two extra days.

Tex Barron said gross revenue was $1,007,635, up over the $854,531 grossed during the 1959 show. Income was up in practically every department, he added. Gate admissions totaled $86,531, an increase of more than $12,000 over 1959. Racing revenue, from the pari-mutuel handle at a daily card of 12 races, was listed at $564,723—an increase of more than $112,000 over last season.

Income from the evening rodeo shows in Tingley Coliseum tallied $113,751, a slight increase of $186 over 1959. Carnival gross was up nearly $14,000 over 1959, and grandstand admish went up nearly $2,300. The Coliseum shows featured Peter Brown and Peggie Castle, from ABC-TV's Lawman show, Red Foley and his video gang, Rex Allen and a western show, and Robert Horton of NBC's Wagon Train. The talent nut was $26,000 for the 1960 show.

Puerto Rico Moving Into Big Time; Names Get 8G Wkly. at Caribe-Hilton

Showbusinesswise, Puerto Rico is no longer an underdeveloped country. The hotels are paying big money for talent and are buying top names.

Some of the names booked include Paul Anka and Tony Martin, both at the Caribe-Hilton, San Juan, and they'll be getting $8,000 each for a week. Xavier Cugat & Abbe Lane are also booked there at a sum approximating that figure, and the Hilton has also set Eartha Kitt, among others.

The prices paid for these entertainers constitute a complete reversal from the former practice in that island. Merriel Abbott, who used to book the entire Hilton chain, set talent at that inn on the basis that it would be a holiday. However, entertainers working there would be rewarded with a raft of other Hilton dates.

That day is apparently over and for good. The growth of tourism in that island, plus the excellent returns from the casinos which are connected with the various hotels, and the cheap airline fares of as low as $45 from New York have aided travel to and from Puerto Rico. The start of jet service from New York has also contributed to the general prosperity of the Island.

Thus far, the Caribe Hilton is the only major hotel to have set acts for the bulk of the season. The San Juan Intercontinental hasn't yet started to buy and it's not known just what its policy will be. Shift of managers from Hennings Mogenson to Frank Vidal has also contributed to the uncertainty of its talent policy. However, it's believed that it will be production plus names or semi-names.

'Lewd' Bumps & Grinds Get Atlantic City Nitery 45-Day ABC Shuttering

Atlantic City, Nov. 29.

Paddock International, midcity night spot twice before shuttered by state Alcoholic Beverage Control action for permitting lewd performances, has been closed for a third time. On this occasion the rap was for 45 days after it was found guilty of having an indecent show and permitting female employes to accept drinks purchased by customers.

William Howe Davis, director of the New Jersey ABC, ordered the place shut as of Monday (21) with the reopening date fixed for Jan. 12. Edward Kravis, who runs the nightclub, had entered a plea of non vult to the charges.

ABC agents reported they visited the Paddock last July 24 and witnessed a striptease performance by a dancer they identified as "Mimi," who did bumps and grinds at the end of her number.

The agents testified that another couple danced in a very suggestive manner, and the emcee related indecent stories. They added that the bartender served drinks to two girl performers who sat next to them at the bar and took money from the agents in payments for the drinks.

Changes Loom in Hub's Bradford Hotel Shows

Boston, Nov. 29.

New show policies and formats are seen at the Bradford Hotel here with the naming of Ruth Shapiro as director of entertainment for the hostelry's night spot. These include the 400-seat Bradford Roof, George Wein's Storyville, a 450-seater, on the lower level, and function rooms. Miss Shapiro, daughter of Ralph Snider, owner of the hotel, had a long career in record promotion around the country, and later going into personal management.

She will continue personal management of comedienne Bobbi Baker, and three singers, Dick Caruso, Johnnie McKay and Ricky Buddy Thomas "Black And White Revue," featuring Margie Anderson, last night (Monday) for two weeks, and plans are in the offing for importation of legit type musicals, packaged for niteries, now being put together in New York.

Storyville has Toshiko in for one week through Dec. 1, then the Limelighters for three days, Dec. 2-4, followed by Damita Jo, opening Dec. 5 for one week. Delta Reese comes to Storyville, Dec. 26-Jan. 1.

Albuquerque's City Aud Finally Makes a Profit

Albuquerque, Nov. 29.

Albuquerque's city-owned Civic Auditorium finally started showing a profit in October, the first time since the hall opened in the spring of 1957. Jack Baker, manager of the aud, said that the excess of income puts the hall's operation in the black for the first four months of the fiscal year, which began July 1. Receipts totalled $17,018 through October, with expenses at $16,204.

Partially responsible for the better profit picture was action of Baker in cutting expenses by about $5,000 in the period over a year ago. October bookings at the house included rock 'n' roller Lloyd Price, country singer Ernest Tubb, Albuquerque Civic Symphony, wrestling and other shows.

'Diamond Lil' Not Mae West's Alone, Calif. Court Rules

San Francisco, Nov. 29.

Mae West does not have the exclusive right to use the name, "Diamond Lil," even though she wrote a book using that title and created the role on stage and in films, the California District Court of Appeals ruled last week.

The court held it therefore was not unfair competition to Miss West when Maria Lind, another blonde, buxom singer, billed herself as "Diamond Lil" at Goman's Gay 90's in Frisco last year.

Miss West had sued for $50,000 damages and an injunction to prevent Miss Lind from using the name.

Presiding Justice Herbert C. Kaufman, who wrote the appellate court opinion, noted that never in her career has Miss West been publicized solely as "Diamond Lil." The judge pointed out Miss West has also been known as "The Baby Vamp," "Siren of the Screen," "The Screen's Bad Girl" and "The Original Brinkley Girl," among other things.

The opinion also emphasized that Miss Lind registered "Diamond Lil" as her stage name with the American Guild of Variety Artists and that Miss West did not. Moreover, said the judge, there was no evidence that Miss Lind imitated Miss West, that Goman's Gay 90's was misleading the public or that any of Miss West's rights in her original script were infringed.

BELAFONTE'S BIG 100G IN 2D TORONTO WEEK

Toronto, Nov. 29.

Harry Belafonte's second week at the O'Keefe Auditorium here hit a tremendous $100,600 for eight performances. Last week he scored close to $120,000 which is house capacity.

Belafonte winds up Saturday (3).

Davis 30G, Frisco 2d

San Francisco, Nov. 29.

Second week of "An Evening with Sammy Davis Jr." at the Geary Theatre here grossed $30,000, an increase of $6,000 over the initial semester.

The 1,550-seat house was scaled to a $5.95 top.

Sam Cohen Buys Flamingo Control In $5,000,000 Deal From Lansburgh, Lifter

Las Vegas, Nov. 29.

One of the top financial transactions of the year on the Las Vegas Strip was closed Saturday (26) when Sam Cohen purchased control of the Flamingo Hotel in a $5,000,000 plus deal.

For the second time this year, the Flamingo has been involved in a multi-million dollar ownership shift. Last spring Cohen, Morris Lansburgh, and Daniel Lifter purchased the resort for $11,800,000 from a group headed by Al Parvin. Lansburgh was named prexy of the new setup.

In the weekend transaction, Cohen, who owned 41% of the Flamingo stock, acquired the 6% controlled by Lansburgh, and the 40½% of Lifter and his associates.

Chuck Hull, public relations chief for the Flamingo, said that Lansburgh sold out to Cohen "because of pressing duties in Miami where he has interests in six hotels, including the Deauville, with Cohen as one of his partners."

Hull indicated that Lansburgh will remain in Florida to protect his and Cohen's interests, and Cohen will head the local operation.

The hotel has issued orders that it is no longer to be referred to as "Morris Lansburgh's Fabulous Flamingo."

Lansburgh was reportedly upset over a personal project which boomeranged at the recent Milton Berle preem. He had flown a planeload of eastern millionaires into Vegas, and the casino suffered a severe loss from the players.

It is reported that Lansburgh will make a $250,000 profit on the deal with Cohen. The remaining 12½% of stock is divided among several holdovers.

Bill Miller Takes Over Rein of Reno's Riverside; O'Connor Not With Casino

Reno, Nov. 29.

Reno's Riverside Hotel, the city's oldest hotel and longtime buyer of top supper club talent, has again changed hands. Latest to take the reins is Bill Miller, formerly with the Dunes, Sahara and New Frontier in Las Vegas.

Miller is investing $300,000 in the $5,000,000 hotel-casino, but will control 95% of the operation. Five percenter under the setup is Dr. Robert I. Franks, Beverly Hills dentist who under last ownership arrangement was one of the principal investors.

It was reported that Donald O'Connor would invest in the casino operation, but he later pulled his name. Miller says the songdance man has interest in the physical plant, but has no connection with the gaming operation.

The Riverside has changed hands several times in recent years, the last only about one year ago.

Miller has made no definite commitments re the entertainment policy but has suggested some possible changes. The hotel now features a name headliner in its intimate theatre-restaurant, plus a seconnd and sometimes third act, an eight-girl line, a full orch, plus an emcee-production singer.

Set Dec. 13 Hearing On Lou Walters' Tax Rap

A bench warrant for the arrest of nitery impresario Lou Walters was vacated last week when he surrendered in Magistrates Court, N.Y., on charges of defrauding the city of $16,164 in restaurant, cabaret and gross business taxes. The city claims Walters owes the taxes in connection with operation of the the defunct Cafe de Paris, N.Y., two years ago.

Walters had been free in $1,000 bail. Failure of his attorney to get a continuance while he was producing new shows at the Tropicana, Las Vegas, and the Deauville, Miami Beach, caused Magistrate Edward J. Chapman to issue the warrant. Upon his surrender the showman explained his inability to appear and was paroled for a hearing Dec. 13.

Walters contends he became ill during operation of the Cafe de Paris and signed over all the spot's assets to Sy Pollack who agreed to assume the establishment's debts. This move, Walters asserts, relieved him of any further responsibility in connection with the nitery.

Competition From Modeling, TV, Etc., Hits Flow of Chorines to Cafes: Risman

The problem of getting chorus lines, singers, showgirls and production elements is becoming increasingly grave, especially in the east, says Eddie Risman, managing director of the Latin Quarter, N.Y. Last week he started weekly auditions in hopes of building up a backlog of performers to replace those who resign or are picked up for work in other fields.

According to Risman, it's a discouraging task. The material just isn't coming out, and after hearing about 30 candidates on Friday (18) he found only a few that might even be considered.

Risman intends to make a junket around the country shortly, then go to Europe to pick up material for the cafe. He pointed out that it took about eight months to assemble the present Latin Quarter production corps. This included a session of talent scouting in Europe which resulted in finding four candidates, as well as holding innumerable auditions.

It's pointed out that the Copacabana, N.Y., also had a hard time filling out its requirements for the present show.

The reasons for the decline in suitable material of this type are numerous, says Risman. The pretty girls get assignments in the modeling field. Many prefer Broadway shows, which incidentally provide a source of performers, but after the show closes. Work in television is also a major source of competition, scale being considerably more than in a cafe floor.

Time was, says Risman, when there was a greater interest in cafes. All a dance director had to do was stand in a bus terminal and watch the girls get off and he would have enough material to supply a lot of lines. Today, the situation is different. A secretary can get $75 with little difficulty while the nitery scale is $100.

However, life as a sec is easier, no rehearsals and nightlife are involved. In the past there was more work in films. Talent scouts used to case the cafe lines regularly and come up with likely candidates for film work. But many girls today prefer to start either in Hollywood or Las Vegas.

Risman feels that he has to accumulate a backlog of singers, dancers and chorus people in order to keep the present production up to its current standards. For this reason, he believes that a trip to various cities around the country will stir up interest in cafe work. By holding auditions in various towns, he can award some contracts for immediate work, and can also provide some future pacts.

The auditions, says Risman, are generally discouraging. It's not that many candidates are not good, but they do not suit his purpose. Risman declared that he generally gets his best results from recommendations of people currently working in his show, or a few agents who are aware of the LQ setup.

Swiss Rolls & Souffles Top Bill at Palladium's Sponsored Vaude Show

London, Nov. 29.

It used to be that the animals and kiddiwinks were the show stealers. Now it's Swiss rolls and souffles. They're the items that got a hand enthusiastic at the London Palladium last Wednesday and Thursday (23-24) when Sponsored Demonstrations Ltd. gave a kingpin show in its current season of sponsored vaude.

Admittedly the band conducted by Eric Delaney gained its duly earned applause, the ivory-tickling of Bill McGuffie was warmly received, the harmonizing of Teddy Johnson and Mrs. Johnson (Pearl Carr on the billing) was received raptly, the patter of emcee Cyril Fletcher was colored the right delicate blue and The Dancing Debutantes didn't shake a leg in vain.

But the papered house, wherein 70 women's clubs and organizations were represented, really went for the culinary conjuring of tv personality Marguerite Patten, who handled the commercial side of the venture.

Format was simple enough, the presentation slick and the overall success undeniable. Straight acts alternated with Miss Patten's dexterous demonstrating of products supplied by the sponsoring outfits —a flour company, food-mixer outfit, electric cooker concern, et al. On the two Palladium afternoons, eight sponsors in all backed the two-hour bill.

Sponsored Demonstrations Ltd., formed early in 1960, tried out its gimmick in the sticks before launching into a fullscale tour this fall. In addition to the "Melody Fare" presentation, as seen at the Palladium, it has been and is giving "Fashion Fare" and other shows on similar lines in the provinces and at other London locations.

Besides the extensive Marguerite Patten plugs, the sponsoring product companies get boosts via displays over the proscenium and in a giveaway program. Erni.

CINCY'S CONEY ISLAND MAPS '61 EXPANSION

Cincinnati, Nov. 29.

Coney Island, leading amusement park in this area, will expand its facilities next year. The past season was successful, although attendance fell below 1959, stated Edward L. Schott, general manager, who was reelected president for the 26th year.

Building program includes refreshments and games additions, further parking lot blacktopping and a big new ride may enlarge the midway.

Directors re-elected Ralph G. Wachs, park manager, as secretary-treasurer. No successor has been named for Fred E. Wesselmann, who retired as v.p. and board chairman but continues as a director.

Canadian Icer Leaves Skaters Out in Cold

Ottawa, Nov. 29.

A Canadian-produced show, "Ice-Arama," containing several U. S. pro skaters, folded in St. John's, Nfld., last week after the cast, not paid for a month, went on strike. They refused to play a matinee and refunds were made by St. John's Arena management. Each of several Newfoundland arenas put up advances of $300-$400 to bring in the troupe whose members had no AGVA bond to protect them.

Show's manager, Bill Cunningham, was reported unable to pay off. Performers were mostly stranded and evicted from hotels, were given shelter in railway cars.

Bertolotti's Reverts To Nitery Operation

Bill Bertolotti's, long a landmark in Greenwich Village, N.Y. is switching to a cafe format starting Dec. 8. It'll be an intime supper club operation with initial show having Charlie Manna, folk singer Casey Anderson and Los Romeros & Estelita. Latter team was until recently fronted by flamenco dancer Trini Rayes who has gone into business for herself.

Bertolotti's had a cafe format some years ago and then became a straight eatery.

Latin Vaude Now Boffo B.O. in Gotham; Spanish Moppet Joselito Pulls $70,000

The Latin population of New York has grown to the point where it can support in style approximately a dozen name shows annually. The grosses that are hit on the Castilian circuits are quite sizeable, and the number of houses is also increasing.

The high takes in the Spanish speaking vaudery is evidenced by the fact that Joselito, a moppet star from Spain, nabbed $53,000 in a week at the Puerto Rico Theatre in the Bronx, and will bring up his take to a total of $70,000 in four days at the Jefferson Theatre in Manhattan ending Saturday (26).

The Jefferson gross is somewhat amazing inasmuch as the current film, "Saeta de Ruisenor" ("Song of the Nightingale") played a week prior to the stageshow. Inasmuch as it starred the moppet, it was charm and apparently the material grosses zoomed with Joselito youngster topping the stageshow.

New York supports a limited number of shows per year, but the takes are such that it becomes profitable for headliners to make the trek from Latin America and Spain. American film companies are also interested in Spanish films. The Joselito pic, for example, is being distributed by Columbia.

Jefferson, N.Y.

Joselito, Julio Aldana, Kippy Casado, Hilda Fabiola, Jose Donate trio, Joe Valle Orch, Line (9); "Saeta de Ruisena" (Col).

Joselito is an amiable 11-year old who works with unsual assurance and seems to have a perfect pitch. His boy-soprano is loud and clear and he seems to have an adult view of a song. He is also quite versatile being able to dig the nuances of flamenco singing. He can produce trills, runs and hit the big notes with assurance even when he has to stretch his pipes. His major concession to popular taste is "Granada" which gives him a strong bowoff. In company with the entire cast, he leads the singing of the current pop Latune "Precioso."

The rest of the show at the Jefferson has a hit-and-miss quality. Starter is Hilda Fabiola, a stacked Cuban singer who doesn't show much else. Julio Aldana, from Mexico, projects big with tuneful lilts. He has an amiable manner and ingratiates himself well with the house. Kippy Casado, a comedienne from Cuba, talks herself into a good mitt. She has charm and apparently the material to get along, but needs an exit stronger than her dancing. There is a line of six girls and three boys, who are well costumed, the Jose Donate Trio do well with songs and guitar and Joe Valle provides excellent backing with his stage orch.

The emceeing is by Perucho, who seems to be the reigning fave among local Latins. He clocks a lot of laughs, and some of them quite hearty, but a few are quite indigo. Jose.

Fingerprint Rules Relaxed

of performer licensing fees to the Police Dept. Pension Fund.

Prior to the conference held at City Hall, the officials of all the unions except AGVA held a press conference in the office of Local 802 prexy Al Manuti. They stated that they were engaged in an all-out fight to eliminate the "onerous" requirements of the State Liquor Authority and the Police Dept. in licensing cabaret workers. At the very least, they would seek the creation of a board to pass upon the licensing requirements. They called present summary procedures illegal and arbitrary. They flayed the lack of mandatory hearings for appeals where licenses were not granted.

The cited situations in which a musician or an entertainer after a boyhood arrest had lead exemplary lives for long periods only to have the past crop up again when he requested a card. "How much more must a man be punished after he has paid his debt to society?" they asked. They also attacked the one-to-a-customer policy of police dept. licenses. A musician, who is a cab driver during the day, can get either a hack or a cabaret license, but not both. They also demanded that the SLA licensing procedures be eliminated.

At the same time, the unions revealed a break in what had been regarded as a solid front in the matter. They declared themselves to be unalterably opposed to the piecemeal "sops" whereby permanent registration would be granted instead of having cabaret workers renew fingerprints every two years. They said these bits delayed the ultimate aims of elimination of the ID requirement. However, they went along with the Mayor's concession, which had been advocated as a start by AGVA.

The one enigma of the first reform is the attitude of Comr. Kennedy in this matter. Should he oppose permanent registration, he may also take his fight to the City Council in opposition to the Mayor. That his attitude carries weight is seen by the fact that it was the Police Dept.'s recommendation that caused Mayor Wagner to recommend to Gov. Rockefeller, two years ago, that a bill requiring mandatory hearings for those refused licenses, be vetoed. This bill was put through the legislature by the culinary and Musicians unions.

In other developments during the week, it was indicated that the courts are not in complete accord with Kennedy's campaign against the niteries. In the case of the International Theatre Restaurant and the Palladium Ballroom, where ID card and other violations were found, the N.Y. Supreme Court granted stays so that the matters could be heard by the Apellate Division. This prevented four-day suspensions over the Thanksgiving Day holiday from being put into effect.

During the week, the licensing section of the Police Dept. granted stays to the Copacabana and the Stork Club which were among the 27 spots found with ID card violations.

The press conference called by the unions also took great care to disassociate themselves with the Citizens Emergency Committee, which had accused the police dept. of corruption. CEC called for an investigation into the conduct of the police following the recent death of Dock "Lord" Buckley whose card was picked up after it was found that he failed to disclose two arrests of 19 and 17 years ago. They called the CEC matter a fight with the police. The unions said that they were not fighting the police, only the ID requirements and the procedures of the SLA in this matter.

Joe E. Lewis (with Austin Mack), Evelyn Sharpe, Jimmy Palmer Orch (12); $2.50 weeknight minimum; $4 Sats.

The start of the 85-day Fair Grounds racing season here also signals the return of Joe E. Lewis to Seymour Weiss' plush Blue Room. The puckish Joe E.'s name on the marquee always means money in the till and for the first time this season the big spenders that marked former boom winters were out in full panoply at the Thanksgiving night preem.

Aficionados and new fans had an advance sellout for the first four nights when the Houdini of the double entendre opened a two-week stand.

Lewis socks across a yockful mixture of familiar and brand new parodies, asides and, of course, his Scotch and water refuels from ringside. Laughs of the belly variety are pegged on his personal social habits and likes. Most of his throaty lyrics are on the blue side, but for the ever-faithful, it's a howl-making approach.

He starts many risible rhymes, but interrupts himself to toss off sharp one-liners that increase the hilarity and mifting. That's what they came for: Lewis' wild brand of comedy.

The aged-in-bond Lewis is probably the only entertainer of stature around from whom the aud expects, and welcomes, the adult look at his life and nighttimes, plus pari-mutuels. Table-pounding first nighters were reluctant to let him bow off after more than an hour of satisfying the capacity house.

Lewis' longtime accompanist and teammate, Austin Mack, whom he introduces as "John Philip Sousa," gets his attention from the overgrown pixie's comments and plays the show admirably, as well as keeping the festivities on an even keel.

Joe E. may have had a bad day at the track but his show is a winner all the way.

Teeing off evening is Evelyn Sharpe, lovely British thrush with a big, high voice, who sells a varied 20-minute song cycle with top results and makes a fetching Liza Doolittle in a "My Fair Lady" medley. The personable songstress has a way of getting all hands en rapport in no time at all and scores heavily with the holiday tableholders.

Jimmy Palmer and his expert musical crew, faves hereabouts, provide the backstopping and dance tunes. Anklebenders packed dance floor during terp sessions.

Show holds to Dec. 8. Liuz.

Viennese Lantern, N. Y.

Yvonne Constant, Gina Sewtschenko, Pawel Prokopiene, Anja Pankova, Ernest Schoen, Joe Troppe; $3.50 minimum.

Max Loew is devising a gimmick new to the Viennese Lantern. Singers not on the show are slotted at tables and suddenly give out with tunes. It's been the format at such violin and vocal centers as Chez Vito and some intimeries elsewhere, but new at the Lantern.

In this instance, Anja Pankova, a Bulgarian soprano, is the damask entertainer. She has a fullbodied voice, one sufficient to cover the room sans mike and indulges in the big classics. The violins of Ernest Schoen and Joe Troppe fall in easily with this entertainment scheme, and for a while it has the customers thinking that one of the customers champagned herself into the gemutlich mood.

This feeling continues until Pawel Prokopiene joins Miss Pankova. The basso, having displayed his talents in the show, gives the gimmick away as having been a putup job. Until this happens, however, the effect is very pleasing.

The major cog in the floorshow is Yvonne Constant, who came to the U. S. in "La Plume de Ma Tante." The import shows an extremely Frenchy act, one that is hard for natives to grasp even in this part of town which gets a cosmopolitan trade. The humor and her delivery are overly Gallic and quite offbeat.

A viewer would like something familiar and understandable as a reference point or a measure of comparison. Miss Constant is young and promising, has the verve and the capacity to be bigtime, but needs to essay a different set of material.

Prokopiene booms out a pair of tunes on his part of the show. He has a big and round voice that hits it well in the Russky familiars. Completing the show is another Slavic item, Gina Sewtschenko, a genuine gypsy singer who pours out tunes of Romany entertainingly. Easy to assimilate, she has pleasant and jolly mannerisms that hit applause. She eschews the slower tunes associated with the gypsy wagon trains, but it would be a good idea to alternate. Jose.

New Lotus, D. C.

Washington, Nov. 26.

Mort Sahl, Wyoma Winters, Ellis & Winters, Eddie Diamond Orch (7); $1 cover; $4 minimum.

Mort Sahl either has to develop topical wit faster or take the consequences of overexposure. There's muscular b.o. punch in the reputation he has built, and he has them waiting in line here to get into the New Lotus Club, where he opened for eight days last Saturday (26).

But with the press reporting his best political gags almost as fast as they are developed, plus his LP and television work, he doesn't have much new to offer a nitery. Ip Washington especially, folks are unusually well informed on current events and current Sahl. As a result, he is triggering an embarrassingly small laughter response.

Sahl led off fine with: "It's a boy (pause) as they said at the Democratic National Convention." He did well also with: "The University of California has accepted an invitation from the Kennedy brothers to play in the Rose Bowl."

Otherwise, is was mostly a rehash or rerun of earlier Sahl humor which ages fast. Sahl's name-dropping might provoke yocks elsewhere but isn't worth much here because the practice is conversationally commonplace. So is political humor in general, which may be different and fresh other places, but not in Washington.

While Sahl is a superb showman, he is too slowpaced for untranquilized Washingtonians who spent the earlier part of the evening in various political salons. There, they had no doubt been repeating wittier quips than Sahl's on the news of the day by such nonprofessionals (at Sahl's game) as Adlai Stevenson, Alice Roosevelt Longworth, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N.Y.) and others.

Sahl's subtle excursions into personal political philosophy have an unnerving tone. He observed through some tricky patter that Russia isn't doing anything in Cuba that the U.S. hasn't been doing in Western Europe. Again, his suggestion that the U.S. is doing business with the wrong China was disturbing for a man who may be influencing thought without all the facts required to support an opinion of critical global importance. Who wants to laugh his way into the next war? He did, however, have a great line directed at Chiang Kai Shek: "We lose the nations and retain their leaders—that's the kind of foreign policy we have."

Ellis & Winters are a well above average dance team as the show opener. Songstress Wyoma Winters (no kin to the dancer on the same bill) needs to improve her routine considerably. Carp.

Colony Club, Omaha

Omaha, Nov. 26.

Although this is only her second time around these parts in this reviewer's memory, Linda Merrill shapes up as an old pro in the singer-comedienne ranks. It doesn't take her long to case her aud and then deliver what the payees want. In addition, the well-endowed blonde posseses a wardrobe that gives the fems plenty to talk about.

At her opening show (25) at the Colony, a plush nitery astutely operated by Skee Fisher and Pat Foley, Miss Merrill whipped through 35 minutes deftly, opening with "I Love Everybody," "Sweet Georgia Brown," "Young Lovers" and "That's Entertainment" before imitating Joe E. Lewis, Ethel Merman and Roberta Sherwood.

A risque parody of "Making Whoopee" sets her up for a change-of-pace closer, a spiritual that sends her off to a bangup mitt. Expert backing by the Warren Johnson Trio, which also plays for between-shows dancing, aided Miss Merrill considerably. Trump.

'Commissar' Kennedy Stars in Absentia At International Casino, N.Y.

New York Police Commissioner Stephen P. Kennedy was the loser in the morning and the goat at night in his tangle last Wednesday (23) with Jack Silverman's International Casino.

In the morning, the Police Department received a major setback in its retaliatory foray against New York niteries in the cabaret-card hassle. The International won a court stay of the Department's four-day entertainment license suspension (imposed after Sophie Tucker appeared with an expired performer's permit).

Same night, headliner Joey Adams opened with a volley of insults aimed at the Commissioner, and he kept the boss cop topical through the 90-minute show. Kennedy missed both sessions.

"Commissar Kennedy," Adams cracked, "is probably home reading 'Mein Kampf' . . . he doesn't mind muggers and killers; he just doesn't like actors . . ." and so on. It was sort of a vitriol roundup, since several of the gags had already been planted in the dailies.

"Americana Revue," with Joey Adams, Al Kelly, Buck Buckner, Tina Robin, Lane Bros. (3), Boots McKenna's Boys (4) and Gals (7), Michael Durso orch, Aviles' Rumbas; $6 minimum.

Adams pointed out his many benefit performances for the Police Department, his six books and his presidency of AGVA, and even managed to get his AGVA election foe, Penny Singleton, into the act: "She's with Richard Nixon; they're still counting votes."

The top cop, however, may have won part of a round. The revue, in for five and a half weeks, opened to about a fifth of a house (mostly paper) in the 1,100 capacity Broadway nitery. This, in spite of, or because of, all the publicity attending the threatened closing (Wednesday p.m.'s carried major stories on the court stay, however).

Revue itself has some bright talents and turns, but could be easily stepped up for better pacing. Adams, who is an extrovert even by show biz standards, tailgates every act, winding with a dance or song duet or laborious clowning, and it all could be dispensed with. His scoring seg is as straight man with double-talking comedian Al Kelly, who is a poised funnyman whether he's double or single-talking, or just mugging it up.

Diminutive blonde Tina Robin sets a pair of old style foggy pipes against hip presentation, and her bridging chatter has just the right amount of sophistication for the likes of the International set.

Little Buck Buckner, sepia terper, does tap-acro with heroing verve. (Adams raised an extra mitt for the dancer when he told the aud Buckner had spent several hours in the fingerprint line to get his card for the night).

Three Lane Brothers open with a catolog of standards in a straight harmony style that's again fresh these days. Boys also take up string instruments for a rock 'n' roll rhythm rendition.

Boots McKenna line, leggiest and flashiest in town, has two production numbers, and they land about an hour apart. A middle appearance would beef up the show.

Revue apparently gets its handle, "Americana," from the chorus line's opening number, featuring the chicks in red, white and blue briefs terping to a patriotic doggerel lyric that should shatter the statue of George M. Cohan down on 46th Street. Dig: ". . . Nathan Hale showed the way, with his affront'ry, saying he regretted he had but one life, to give to his country. . . ." Bill.

Mister Kelly's Chi.

Chicago, Nov. 21.

Herb Shriner, George Alexander, Marx-Frigo Trio; $2.50 cover.

Herb Shriner, who's been concentrating on fairs and concert dates plus an occasional supper-club since he left tv, is making one of his infrequent nitery stands, and his first in an intime room since his newcomer days.

It has the smack of a "daring" booking, such as the Kelly's management has been lately springing in a convincing test of flexibility. What makes it appear a defi (as indeed previous startlers seemed) is the room's potent rep for up- and post-dated entertainment—the far-out jazzites, and the vogueish socio-politico and sicknik commentators—the Mort Sahls, Lenny Bruces, Mike & Elaine, et al.

Shriner, of course, doesn't run with them, being only by definition a tame precursor of the bared fangs school of latterday acceptance. The Hoosier man himself still sees it by the same gentle light that has characterized his multi-media malarkey for the span of his career to date.

Shriner has shrewdly integrated baritone folksinger George Alexander (armed with a rare harp guitar) into his 70-minute turn, bringing the balladeer on for some midspot music and banter, then leaving him to render a farrago of folkology and showtunes. He's commercial, tends to be stagey and too self-aware, but registers with some choice titles and impressive pipes.

Initially standup, Shriner on his pickup pulls up a chair and really warms to the intimacy with the ludicrous minutiae of his "hometown" as grist, and fending off over-eager stagesiders in kindly and amusing fashion. Clean-as-a-whistle session is capped with coupla harmonica numbers for fillip affection. In sumup, no intrinsic powerhouse, but a potently satisfying jester.

An ace assist, as usual, comes from the skillful Marx-Frigo Trio.

Bob Newhart and Sandy Stewart open Dec. 12. Pit.

Neve, Frisco

San Francisco, Nov. 23.

Buddy Lester, Red Norvo Quintet, Penny & Jean, John Mosher Trio; $1.50 admission.

Buddy Lester, one of the real standup pros, can still shake laughs out of a crowd. Indeed, the Neve's crowd was so small as to discourage many a lesser comic, but not Lester, who worked 50 frantic minutes and took the slim turnout in the best of (public) humor with such lines as, "I'm a pretty fair comedian, but when I get too conceited I come back to San Francisco."

Lester devotes first part of act to warmup gags, one-liners, little stories, nearly anything that comes into his head. One of his funnier "shticks" is a takeoff on Jack Lalanne pupils, followed by a bunch of misquoted pop songs—all very short, light and bright.

Eventually he goes for his "hat box," and, using a series of prop hats, does what he calls "imitations." These are a series of wild parodies of such well-known material as "Beau Geste," a baseball umpire, "Ramar of the Jungle" and "Ben-Hur."

Those on hand could have sat for another hour as this top-notch pro dished up his hilarious bits in rapid-fire style with the wonderful timing that comes only from long experience.

Red Norvo Quintet, featuring Jerry Dodgion on alto sax, provides 35 minutes of fine jazz, including such splendid numbers as Dodgion's own "The Forward Look," Quincy Jones' "For Lena and Lenny," "Cookin' at the Continental" and such standards as "Tenderly" and "Little Girl Blue."

Penny & Jean open (see New Acts) this excellent 105-minute show which runs through Dec. 3. Stef.

Steuben's, Boston

Boston, Nov. 24.

Billy Kelly, Rose & Cavalier (2), Don Dennis, Tony Bruno Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

Billy Kelly, the splinter-built comic, who returns here after a one-week stand earlier in the season, has updated his fastpaced stint. In for two weeks opening Thanksgiving, Kelly stands up for 40 minutes peppering with one liners for boff returns. He doesn't throw anything away.

His big bit is a slick Ted Lewis impresh in which he uses two hats, a top hat for himself and an outsize bowler for stooge brought up from the audience. This gets heavy yocks with Kelly using stooge as his shadow, admonishing and complimenting him at the same time as he does "Me and My Shadow." Kelly ankles off way ahead with his topical and family stories and "Old Soft Shoe" routine.

Rose & Cavalier, reviewed under New Acts, open the show. Don Dennis, perennial singing emcee, pulls some oldies out of his hat with a lilting "Trolley Car" for slick effects, segues to "Orchids in the Moonlight" and signs off with a ringing medley from "Oklahoma" Guy.

Hotel Pierre, N.Y.

Stanley Melba presentation of "Naughty Marietta," adapted by Melba and Dolores Pallet from Victor Herbert's "comic opera" (original book and lyrics by Aida Johnson Young); directed by Miss Pallet; featuring Jimmy Carroll, Ronnie Cunningham, Wilbur Evans, Beverly Luria, Didi Van Eyck; musical director, Carroll; arrangements and conductor, Lee Hulbert; lighting, Leslie Wheel; opened Nov. 22, 1961 at Cotillion Room of Hotel Pierre; $4 minimum.

Next thing to booze-and-the-Bard and/or legit-on-the-rocks is the Hotel Pierre's tabloid operetta and musicomedy policy in its Cotillion Room. Converting the yesteryear hit musicals into streamlined versions running under an hour, to the accompaniment of class dining-drinking-dancing, is the nearest to legalized boozing for legit.

Legit houses, of course, have long eyed the West End (London) policy of bars catering to drama patrons' thirsts between-the-acts, technically tabu in New York, with the exception of the Sherry's concession at the Met.

Victor Herbert's "Naughty Marietta" preemed in 1910 on Broadway and "Mlle. Modiste," from which score Wilbur Evans has chosen to borrow "I Want What I Want When I Want It" for one of his specialties, dates back to 1905. It is to the tribute of the great composer that the melodies have the same durability and appreciation akin to the traditional observation about rare vintages improving with maturity.

If the same may not be said for Mrs. Rida Young's libretto, it is a credit to the free 'n' easy adaptation by producer-stager Stanley Melba and Dolores Pallet that they have transmuted this "comic opera" into a thoroughly serviceable canvas for the tiptop cast that projects the plot. As a mattter of fact the yesteryear Rida Johnson Youngs, Harold Atteridges, H. B. Smiths, Cyrus Woods et al. have naught of which to be shamed at least so far as their durable lyrics are concerned.

For that matter, even the (from today's viewpoint) naive librettos still have a special old world charm which must conjure up to the average patron of a plushery like the Pierre a way of life in contrast to today's global tensions. As such, these operetta condensations perhaps have a subliminal value not originally envisioned in producer Melba's quest for a class entertainment that won't break the budget.

The tabloid musicals are an advancement and an enhancement of Melba's pioneering with the "composer's nights"; after he had skimmed the cream off the giants of musical comedy and contemporary pop songsmithing he came up with these miniature musicals.

They're all done tongue-in-cheek, in al fresco manner, with the Cotillion Room and its customers "serving" either as guests or club-members or "patrons" of the Maxim's, or whatever the libretto flavor requires.

Not dated but in the best 1960 manner are the castings. Melba manages to come up with strong performers, all with seasoned backgrounds. For one or more, these operetta-musicomedies may prove excellent showcases.

Wilbur Evans is an old pro and Ronnie Cunningham, Beverly Luria and Didi Van Eyck, for all their summer musical stock, national roadtouring and other backgrounds, may be spotlighted anew in this presentation. That goes also of course for maestro juvenile Jimmy Carroll whose seasoned tenoring is w.k. around the metropolitan spots. He's now also emcee-bandleader, later surrendering the podium for Lee Hulburt's professional backstopping of the show.

Beverly Luria is a pleasant surprise in the title role; Ronnie Cunningham proves a very okay dancing comedienne who also knows how to handle lines: Didi Van Eyck's trained sopraning is fortified by blonde pleasant personality; Evans of course has been around and seemingly goes with the Cotillion lease, invariably as the old roue with ingratiating leer.

Withal a solid 55-minute tabloid musical which is novel nitery divertissement, in contrast to the tussle of names, and has a value all its own which should keep host-Gogi and maitre d'hotel Pasquali in good form handling the trade. Abel.

NOREEN PARKER
Songs
25 Mins.
Le Cabaret, Toronto

Making her first club date appearance in Canada at the posh Le Cabaret, Toronto—though she has been guest star for Denny Vaughn at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, Montreal, and on "Holiday Ranch" for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. tv series—Noreen Parker is breaking in her "Non Dimenticar" and "Bill Bailey" here, with arrangements by Jack Olsen and Ben Bennett.

In alternating whisper and belt style, Miss Parker has no trouble in getting over with the customers from her opening bounce number, "Start of Something Big" to her lusty "Mack the Knife" finish. Interpolated for change of tempo are "Lulu's Back in Town," "Yes, Indeed," "Just Say I Love Him," "Misty" and "I Enjoy Being a Girl."

A sexy brunet, Miss Parker has appeared in the plush nitery spots of the United States and the West Indies; sings in Italian and Spanish and, of course, English; and has no difficulty in registering on individual styling. McStay.

NORA EVANS
Songs
Ye Little Club, L. A.

Ease of delivery and appreciation of a lyric are qualities possessed by Nora Evans, tip-top pop songbird in for a two-week stint at this BevHills proving ground for up-and-coming young warblers. Miss Evans, pretty protege of musicman Elmer Bernstein, has promising ideas on how to tackle, phrase and caress a tune, needs only the showmanship sheen she's sure to develop in the course of her showcase stay at Marshall Edson's stable for fresh foals with lofty goals.

Standards appear to be Miss Evans' forte. She rattles off the oldies and established newies with a straightforward style and a gift for enunciation. She's at her best on the slow-sexy ballads such as "Do It Again" and "Get Out Of Town," and on the soft-sell sobbers such as "Little Girl Blue," treating them with taste and sincerity. Miss Evans, however, would improve her act by incorporating at least one specialty number, a so-called "show-stopper," to attract attention and generate excitement. An unbroken array of standards, no matter how varied the pace and admirable the choice, tend to grow monotonous. Tube.

PENNY & JEAN
Songs
16 Mins.
Neve, San Francisco

Penny (Palmer), 18, and Jean (Amos), 19, are two long-stemmed, guitar-playing singers fresh out of a Van Nuys, Cal., highschool with a pleasant repertoire of folk songs.

They come on with a calypso-type "Run Joe," go into "10,000 Miles," do an English musichall specialty, "It's the Same the Whole World Over," harmonize on "Danny, Where Have You Been So Long?," and wind up with a Negro work-song, "Workin' on the Levee."

Their voices blend splendidly, with Miss Palmer taking the lower parts, Miss Amos the higher, and they both seem to be pretty fair hands on the guitar. Both are very attractive brunets and, while they don't have any particular line of patter between numbers, they manage to project interesting and lively personalities.

Their chief debit, as an embryo act, is something of a lack of poise, an asset which usually takes time and experience to acquire.

But they are very sound, musically, and represent an appealing switch—to femininity—among folk groups. They do their own arranging and, given a little experience, may become a strong act in the nitery circuit. RCA Victor evidently thinks so, since it already has cut a Penny & Jean LP. Stef.

House Reviews

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, Nov. 22.

Robert Earl, Tommy Fields, Don Lang & Frantic Five, Benson Dulay, Ray Alan, The Angelos (2), Joe Church, Averil Jean & Aurel Verne, Gordon Rolfe orch.

This is run-of-the-mill vaude, a somewhat uninspiring layout, lacking in any real star personality, but with none of the individual acts disappointing. It's symptomatic of the current state of U. K. vaude, which has most of the top acts concentrating on London engagements and few accepting dates in the so-called provinces.

Robert Earl, a personable singer, offers his tribute to show biz with impressions of various greats, such as late Richard Tauber, Maurice Chevalier, and Rodgers & Hammerstein. For his Tauber number he gives out effectively with "My Heart and I," and represents Chevalier with "Thank Heaven for Little Girls." Pleases the outfronters but makes no memorable impact.

Tommy Fields (he's brother of Gracie) is a tall, slim and smiling singer-comedian with a happy style. His melody is stronger than some of his jokes, the latter very much in the category of oldies. Performer, however, has definite personality and is a solid bet for musical comedy.

Don Lang, backed by five instrumentalists, gives out loudly in fast numbers, and scores with the younger set. Joe Church is a likeable English comedian making the most of audience reaction and lack of it!).

Benson Dulay, magician, has a polish in familiar illusionist act, in which he utilizes the services of three small boys from audience. It's a safe recipe, with yocks coming lively when kids find chairs exploding under them, a fake guillotine being used on stage, etc.

Ray Alan offers solid ventriloquial act, the two Angelos are mixed pair of aerialists, and Averil Jean & Aurel Verne tee off both segments with probably the slickest act on layout, a dance offering which shows off the duo as intensive rehearsal team who are putting all they've got into stylish terping.

Gordon L. Rolfe batons the house orch. Gord.

Bobino, Paris

Paris, Nov. 23.

Lucienne Delyle, Aime Barelli Sextet, Kuban Cosaques Dancers (3), Mathilde & Paul Dougnac Marionettes, Bob Brampson, Jack Gauthier, Imperio Bros (2), Nicole Derby; $1.25 top.

Lucienne Delyle has been off the boards for three years due to illness and comes back in fine form. She is vulgar in a good sense with her earthy songs of desire, love and the torch, which are expertly limned and sung.

She also can inject a note of pathos by her sincerity and know-how. Her husky, musically savvy voice also helps. She remains one of the oldtime belters who is still effective.

Aime Barelli Sextet has eight men despite its billing. They give out with a neat, disarming impersonation of a Yank jam session helped by smooth arrangements though they try to put over the impression of improvisation. It is a bouncy interlude and warmly mitted in this nabe supported house.

Kuban Cosaques Dancers (3) seem weak imitations of the real thing for they lack the electric dynamism that visiting Russo folk terp troupes have shown. But this trio is okay for house needs. Jack Gauthier does fine imitations of leading song faves and can also bring off a line of patter.

Imperio Bros (2) add a fillip to hand-to-handing in using a bar prop and ending in a headstand atop one underling with two bottles, also end to end, between them. It is an excellent filler as ditto Bob Brampson in a besty juggling bit with hula hoops.

Marionettes of Mathilde & Paul Dougnac are handled from below and supply titillating Hispano take-offs with an extremely funny bullfight bit. It is an expert entry and a solid bet for U.S. tv.

Nicole Derby essays special material comedic songs. She has a quavery voice and good delivery but needs better material and more control. However, she could emerge an okay specialized singing bet.

Show looks in for a good two weeks of biz. Mosk.

Opera, Buenos Aires

Buenos Aires, Nov. 25.

Jane Russell Show with Dominique, The Jazz Singers, Harold Schaefer Orch, Roberto Galan, emcee:

Too much of this show, booked by Clemente Lococo for only four days, was taken up with the Jazz Singers, who are good of their kind, singing "Stormy Weather," "My Prayer," "Jezabel" and an Al Jolson medley, but could have been cut down to fewer songs.

The second part of the bill was ably taken up by Dominique, who has a pleasing stage personality, keeps up a running chatter of gags in French, with smattering of all languages, while performing feats of legerdemain, depriving spectators of their wallets, watches, keys, chains, ties and even shirts. He works with amazing speed and is a top calibre turn.

Then Jane Russell filled up the second half of the bill for a relatively short time. The curtains parted to reveal her back to the audience, wearing a long-sleeved red sequined suit, giving emphasis to well-turned gams. To local audiences, who were eager to see the bombshell of "The Outlaw," this charming, rather gentle singer was something of anticlimax. The oomph was all in the orchestra pit, where Harold Schaefer worked like 100 men, keeping orchestra and singer together, and manfully trying to keep the show at high pitch, where there was no big stage personality to provide it.

Miss Russell made quick costume changes, diving into a large hatbox provided with an airplane propeller, which presumably took her to France, ("La Vie en Rose"), Italy "Nel Blue di Pinto del Blue"), to "Buttons and Bows" and some Negro spirituals. The gal has a nice voice and knows how to use it, but it just was not a big evening. Nid.

Casino, Toronto

Toronto, Nov. 25.

Arthur Braggs' "Idlewild Revue of 1961," with Arthur Prysock, Harlem Bros. (2), The Four Tops, Choker Campbell, Lon Fontaine Trio, Roger Fluker, Dell St. John, Mona Desmond, The Braggettes (14); Archie Stove Orch (15); "Nights of Lucretia Borgia" (Col).

Deserting the strippers, Casino is going in for a new policy of revues and Western music units, with Arthur Braggs' "Idlewild Revue of 1961," teeing off on a four-a-day that sees the 1,121-seater scaled at $1-$1.25. It's a fast-moving potpourri with some 40 on stage for company roundup. Show runs 75 minutes.

Braggs' revue plays summer season till Labor Day at Idlewild, Michigan, 20 miles from Detroit, and has been on the road five years. This is its first Canadian visit.

All-Negro unit has swift pace, plus luxuriant wardrobe of the show girls and femme singers, the big and exuberant production numbers, including a "Fantasque" strobe effect. From opening to finale, quickness is the keynote, interpolated by the singing of Arthur Prysock, the Four Tops, Dell St. John and Mona Desmond.

With Prysock starred, singer baritones "Very Though of You," with his "I Get the Blues" scoring particularly. The Four Tops have no difficulty in "Only Have Eyes For You," "Still of the Night" and "September in the Rain." Dell St. John and Mona Desmond, scoring on "Kansas City."

Dancers score in precision work and their jungle dance, plus primitive chants. Acrobatics and challenges of the Harlem Bros. and the Lon Foutaine Trio excite the customers. McStay.

Dallas Accents Revues

Dallas, Nov. 29.

Revues are becoming an important part of the supper club entertainment picture. Joe Reichman has scheduled three revues for the Hotel Adolphus next season and the Statler is presenting its first revue in January.

The latter will star comedienne Phyllis Inex and Earl Humphreys.

Sees End of Ballet Touring

Costs Becoming Prohibitive for Import of Major Dance Troupes, Sol Hurok Warns

San Francisco, Nov. 29.

Sol Hurok, in Frisco recently with Royal Ballet, warned "this may be the last time I'll ever be able to bring to this country a major ballet troupe like the Royal or the Bolshoi Ballet." He blamed present economic conditions, saying the cost of touring a big dance company with full scenery and other paraphernalia had risen prohibitively. A few breaths later, however, he admitted he was bringing the Moiseiev Ballet, which travels in buses without scenery, and London's Old Vic Company back to the U.S. in 1961.

Of the Royal Ballet's New York engagement, the impresario declared, "We grossed $563,000. Would you believe it, our profit was not much over $15,000. Soon the chance for any profit at all will be wiped out. All there'll be will be loss and risk."

Expanding on his current problem, he asserted, "in the Royal Ballet we travel 142 people. But we have to buy 270 first-class railway tickets in order to get the use of the nine baggage cars we need for settings and costumes. To put on our full-length 'Ondine' we'll need 62 stagehands and 20 electricians. We carry our own orchestra of 42 musicians, and pick up an extra 23, including necessary rehearsals, for the local engagement.

"To persuade a stage carpenter to come on tour with the Royal Ballet, we have to pay him $350 a week. This isn't a matter of union scale. It's just supply and demand. Stage carpenters have so many chances to work at home in New York that they don't care to travel."

Stratford, Ont., Season Earned $64,309 Profit On $795,129 Total Take

The 1960 season was the most successful thus far for the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival. That was disclosed at a recent annual meeting of the Stratford Shakespearean Festival Foundation of Canada. The net profit for the semester was $64,309, after allowing $56,301 for depreciation of fixed assets.

A total gross of $795,129 included $683,514 for 99 performances of "Romeo and Juliet," "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "King John," as well as $99,789 for the music offerings, including 24 performances of "H.M.S. Pinafore," and $11,826 for the two-week film festival.

A Canada Council grant of $75,000 was credited as being "of great assistance" by Wilfrid P. Gregory, president of the Foundation's board of governors. He added that there are still heavy financial obligations, with a bond mortgage of $534,300, and that besides interest requirements of $36,077 the Festival also has to meet an annual sinking fund of $39,000.

The Festival, in ballyhooing next season, which will be its longest, running 14 weeks from June 19-Sept. 23, has sent out 200,000 brochures to all parts of the world. The promotion piece includes gift certificates for any number of tickets for any performance exclusive of opening nights.

London's Drury Triples Divvy on 'My Fair Lady'

London, Nov. 29.

Associated Theatre Properties, which owns the Drury Lane and other West End Theatres, is hiking its half-yearly dividend from 6⅔% to 20%.

Though the company suffered a loss in 1957, last year was reported to be excellent. The current show at the Drury Lane, of course, is "My Fair Lady," which has been running to capacity for two-and-a-half years.

Another of the theatres in group, Her Majesty's, has been housing "West Side Story" for nearly two years.

Toby Rowland will stage the London production of "Look Homeward, Angel." Eric Glass handled the deal.

Stratford Fest Troupe Drops Repertory Setup

The American Shakespeare Festival Theatre Co., has droped its "repertory" status for the balance of its road tour. The company, which discarded "Winter's Tale" from its two-play "repertory" program when it moved into Chicago for a three-week stand Nov. 14, will continue to limit future hinterland bookings to performances of "Midsummer Night's Dream" only.

The company, which headquarters during the summer in Stratford, Conn., is scheduled to follow its Chicago stand with dates in St. Paul, Denver, Los Angeles, San Francisco and other cities.

Hal Holbrook To Vacation 'Twain'

Hal Holbrook intends temporarily retiring Mark Twain characterization next May. The actor, who recently presented the impersonation of the famous humorist on a State Dept.-sponsored European tour, begins another of his U.S. road hikes next Friday (2) in New Haven. The hinterland trek will run through May.

Holbrook began performing "Mark Twain Tonight" show about six years ago on an irregular basis. But, it wasn't until he opened off-Broadway in April, 1959, that the one-man presentation really caught on. Since then the offering has run up a string of bookings. Holbrook figures that by next May he will have given about 400 performances in the two years since his off-Broadway click.

The actor, who'll be playing mostly university and concert dates the next few months, plans seeking regular stage roles at the conclusion of the tour. The frequency of future Twain programs will depend on his other activities.

John Lotus, who presented Holbrook off-Broadway, gets producer credit for the one-man offering, which is booked by the William Morris Agency and in the southwest by the Pryor-Menz Concert Agency.

Baraccin's Scouting

Paris, Nov. 29.

Francois Baraccin, general manager of the Comedie Francaise, has left here for a couple of weeks in New York to confab with S. Hurok re the upcoming American tour of his troupe.

He will visit Philadelphia, Boston, Princeton, Washington and Montreal (which is the extent of the Comedie tour) prior to returning to Paris.

'Camelot' Sliced To 3-Hour Time, Still Not 'Frozen'

Boston, Nov. 29.

"Camelot" will have about three hours' running time when it preems next Saturday night (3) at the Majestic Theatre, N. Y. That will represent a cut of 30 minutes or so from the original performance time when the Alan Jay Lerner-Frederick Loewe musical version of T. H. White's novel, "The Once and Future King," began its tryout tour Oct. 1 at the O'Keefe Centre, Toronto.

Since its Canadian bow, the changes in the show include three new scenes and two new songs. Two other numbers are scheduled for insertion during this week's rehearsals and previews in New York, so the show may not be "frozen" until the actual opening. One of Oliver Smith's new sets is used to introduce featured player Roddy MacDowall in a more serious vein as the evil Mordred. Music for the second act fairy ballet has also been rewritten.

The musical, costarring Richard Burton and Julie Andrews, is being co-produced by Lerner, Loewe and Moss Hart. The latter dropped out as stager shortly after the show's Toronto opening, because of a heart attack. He was hospitalized in Toronto, but is now back in New York.

Lerner, who has also been laid up in Toronto with bleeding ulcers, took over the direction of the musical following Hart's hospitalization. In recent weeks, Philip Burton has assisted in the staging.

"Camelot," which played three weeks in Toronto, ended a run of four weeks, plus three performances, at the Shubert Theatre here last Saturday (26).

Chita Rivera to Do London 'Birdie'; Finance Tour From B'way Profits

Chita Rivera will repeat her current assignment as femme lead when "Bye Bye Birdie" musical is presented in London late next spring or early fall. The tuner will be at Her Majesty's Theatre, where Miss Rivera also repeated her original role in "West Side Story." The latter musical has been running at the house since Dec. 12, 1958.

"Birdie," presented on Broadway by Edward Padula in association with L. Slade Brown, will be produced in London in partnership with H. M. Tennent, Ltd. Two other editions of the musical are also scheduled to bow by next summer. One will be an Australian venture, to be produced by J. C. Williamson, Ltd., for a Feb. 25 opening at Her Majesty's Theatre, Melbourne. The other is the touring company, scheduled to open April 24 at the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, as the Civic Light Opera season starter in that city.

The road company will be financed from the profits on the Broadway production, which moved into the black last Oct. 29. The recovery of the show's $300,000 investment does not include income from the sale of the film rights to Columbia Pictures for $850,000 against 10% of the distributor's world gross.

The basic amount is to be paid in installments beginning with a $250,000 payment. The production's 40% share less 10% commissions of the total basic revenue from the film deal will be $306,000, which gives the musical a paper profit of over 100% thus far on its investment.

Low Admish Prompting Legit to Quit Mex City

Mexico City, Nov. 29.

Mexico's legit producers are seriously considering a mass movement outside the limits of the Federal District (this capital and its suburban environments), to the nearby state of Mexico, in order to escape the boxoffice price freeze of 96c imposed by the Mayor's Office here in Mexico City.

The governor of the state of Mexico, as well as chief executives of Morelos and other states bordering this city, have from time to time indicated they were ready to give "protection" to producers seeking higher boxoffice prices.

Talks with some of the leading producers here reveals that they feel hemmed in, and discriminated against by the low scale in Mexico City.

'With You' Calls It Quits in Det.

The Broadway-targeted Nat King Cole-starrer, "I'm With You," folded in Detroit last Saturday (26) at an estimated $200,000 loss. The musical, which underwent a shakeup of its production staff shortly after its opening Oct. 31 in San Francisco, had a flock of road dates scheduled prior to a planned Broadway bow early next year.

At the time of its bow in Frisco, the credits on the show listed Ray Rasch and Dotty Wayne as composer and lyricist, respectively, and Tom Clapp as additional material contributor. Others were subsequently called in to help with the writing. Paul Gregory, who was billed as co-producer of the venture with Cole's firm, Kell-Cole Productions, when the show opened in Frisco, subsequently exited that assignment.

Ike Jones, vicepresident of Kell-Cole, became producer of the musical following Gregory's departure. Other post-preem withdrawals included Bill Colleran, who was replaced as director by Joe Sargent. Clapp's material was also scrapped in Frisco.

Former Theatre Lessee Sues Carnegie Hall, N.Y., For Contract Violation

A $750,000 damage suit has been filed in N. Y. Supreme Court against corporations and individuals connected with the ownership and operation of Carnegie Hall, N. Y. The plaintiff is Ben-Lar Productions, Inc., of which Lawrence Rothman is president. The case involves an alleged arrangement relating to the rental of the basement and mezzanine Carnegie Hall Playhouse to Ben-Lar for a seven-month period from Oct. 15, 1959, to last May 15.

The plaintiff contends that the Playhouse lease contained a clause relating to the contemplated demolition of Carnegie Hall soon after last May 15 giving Ben-Lar an option to renew in the event the building was not razed. The building, instead of being demolished, was sold by Carnegie Hall, Inc., to the city of New York, which leased the premises to Carnegie Hall Corp.

The complaint further alleges that the deed conveying the premises from Carnegie Hall, Inc., to the city specified that the transfer was subject to existing leases, concessions and rights of occupants and tenants. The damage claim is based on the allegation that the plaintiff has not been permitted to renew the Playhouse lease and that the property has been leased to others.

Defendants in the action are Carnegie Hall, Inc., Carnegie Hall Corp., the City of New York, William H. White & Sons, Inc., real estate agent for the building and the firm's representative, Howard G. Sloane, and Arthur Smadbeck, manager and operator of the Playhouse.

Eye Tanglewood Setup For Music at Stowe, Vt.

Stowe, Vt., Nov. 29.

The establishment of a summer cultural area in this resort town has been proposed by Broadway producer Peter Lawrence. The project, similar to the setup in Tanglewood, Mass., has been outlined by letter to Gov. Robert T. Stafford.

Lawrence's plans for a "Stowe Summer Festival" include construction of a convertible hardtop-al fresco showcase for concert presentations and a separate music school building.

Run-of-Repertory Ripsnorter

Met Opera's 'L'Elisir d'Amore' Packs Punch Of Broadway Musical

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Nowadays a certain amount of intellectual "lip service" is paid to the ideal of repertory, of which new American examples are in prospect. Meanwhile the Metropolitan Opera is almost alone in operating under this expensive and occasionally ponderous system of presentation. Few remember to remark that its run-of-season average is pretty consistently high. Seldom does the Met fall on its face. How really fine it can be on occasion was displayed last Friday (25) when Gaetano Donizetti's great opera buffa, "L'Elisir d'Amore" was restored to repertory after 10 years absence.

Redesigned, restaged and, of course, re-cast it immediately assumed stature on several counts. First, it was a triumph of repertory, an opera with the zing, pace and bounce of a hit Broadway musical. Second, it was positively infectious, creating an audience warmth and enthusiasm which is rare indeed in any opera house. Thirdly, adding up all the factors, this was a crashing lesson that opera can be downright entertaining, without a dull moment.

The success of this venture in "lightness" lies in the fact that the score is one of the sheerest singingest sessions ever assigned a cast of five principals. Again and again there are prolonged opportunities to sing their heads off. Add that the 1832 libretto of Felice Romani stands time's passage remarkably well, in no way denying the very evident freshening implicit in the new stage direction of Nathaniel Merrill, the simply, compactly and imaginatively engineered sets of Robert O'Hearn and the numerous nice little dancing (not ballet) touches of Todd Bolender.

An element of personal excitement was added to the first performance by the debut of Dino Formichini as Nemorino, after Ceasar Valleti conked out on illness. At first glimpse the newcomer did not seem prepossessing. He wore the usual elevator footwear of the short Italian tenor. His costume was difficult. But as he began to sing there was a pleasant surprise and when he began to act it was even more agreeable—he achieved characterization.

Formichini certainly had himself a fine night, even though he was distinctly better in the first act than in the second, and did not altogether master opening night occasional constriction of pipes. He came a stranger. He ended with an ovation. He carries now the promise of being possibly the Met's finest tenor promise in seasons.

Meanwhile as the medicine show man (Merrill brings him on stage in a balloon, a delightful inspiration) the Met's regular, Fernando Corena, was giving a performance of superb gusto combined with impeccable restraint. Never descending to hokum, yet thoroughly comic. Coreno may well be hailed this season, as George London was three years ago, as "opera's best actor." The point, of course, is that he was first the completely masterful musician in the part and hence free to be so much more.

Elizabeth Soederstroem sang Adina with vocal sweetness and accuracy. The two lesser roles were entrusted to Mildred Allen and Frank Guarrera, both very pro. Fausto Cleva, a generous man when audience applause holds up the proceedings, was on the baton. As to that, one may ask, how often does the audience want to hold up the proceedings?

One of the disadvantages of repertory is that fine nights get lost in the general rotation of all sorts and kinds of performances. There will be many grateful spectators to spread the word of mouth about the happy return of "L'Elisir d' Amore." This reviewer would add a small scoffing noise for the effort the Met squandered in recent seasons on "La Pericole" and "The Gypsy Baron," the one based on a donkey and Cyril Ritchard and the other based on a pig and Walter Slezak. Moral, it's better when the leading man is a singer!

"Watch It, Sailor" switched to the Apollo Theatre after nine months at the Aldwych.

When "Whisper to Me" was tried out by the late Margo Jones in the summer of 1955 at her tiny theatre in Dallas, it was given a brush review by VARIETY.

Greer Johnson adaptation of William Goyen's story, "The Letter in the Cedarchest," was tested again a couple of seasons ago at the White Barn Theatre, Westport, Conn., and somewhere along the line has apparently undergone considerable rewrite, including revision of the story line and the elimination of three characters.

Even the traditional myopia that afflicts theatre people regarding hopeless scripts doesn't completely explain the persistent durability of "Whisper to Me." Although it's possible to read meaning into virtually anything, there's no apparent reason why anyone should bother in the case of this whimsical fable about three daffy widows (one the grass variety) in a small Texas town in the early 1930's.

Several normally capable actors are involved in this indiscretion at the tiny Players Theatre in Greenwich Village, and they avoid disgracing themselves. Otherwise, Marcella Cisney, who directed the presentation in Westport, has staged the piece with what may be described as determination, while Boyd Dumrose has provided a grotesquely oversize, over-elaborate setting.

Even granting good intention, there's little excuse for a show like this. Hobe.

Hans Rosbaud's N. Y. Debut

(CARNEGIE HALL)

With debuting maestro Hans Rosbaud on the podium and the Soviet fiddle virtuoso Leonid Kogan as soloist, N. Y. Philharmonic attracted overflow audiences for its Thanksgiving weekend concerts. A Handel Concerto Grosso, Mozart's "Jupiter" and the Beethoven violin concerto included no contemporary musical idioms to frighten or mystify the paying customers and the program met with enthusiastic acclaim.

Guest-batoneer Rosbaud is one of the crop of Central-European conductors who rose to world-wide eminence in the post-war years. He is a lean, angular man who directs the band with economical gestures. No showman, he nevertheless made a most impressive New York debut with sound music-making. There were no interpretive peculiarities in his readings, but the Philharmonic sounded great and responded to its pro-tem leader's musical wishes. The sidemen joined in the ovation that a grateful audience tendered Rosbaud.

Kogan is one of the Soviet wizards who has orbited outside of the Iron Curtain with triumphant results. Though not as well-known as Oistrakh, he nevertheless is a stylish fiddler with warmth of tone and technical polish. His reading of the Beethoven concerto was brilliant and yet musicianly, a performance without a noticeable flaw. Although most of the Philharmonic's current concerts have been sellouts, this one had gone clean at the b.o. weeks ago, another tribute to the pulling power of the Russian visitors who have made reputations, first through their long-playing disks and following up with socko results on their personal appearance tours, engineered by Papa Hurok. Wien.

Well, That's Show Business!

Making a title change on a marquee when a show moves out of a theatre and a new one moves in can cause confusion. That's evident in the snafu that occurred recently when "Hostage" vacated the Cort Theatre, N.Y., to make way for the incoming "Advise and Consent."

Abner Klipstein, pressagent for "Hostage," made arrangements to have the show's title painted out on the marquee following the exit from the house. However, the painter didn't get around to doing the job until the Wednesday afternoon preceding the official preem of "Advise" at the theatre.

In the meantime, however, Betty Lee Hunt, pressagent for "Advise," hired someone else to paint out the sign the day before Klipstein's man got on the job, because "Advise" was having a preview at the Cort that night. The following morning she had the "Advise" title painted on the marquee. When Klipstein's man showed up that afternoon to paint out the lettering on the Cort marquee, he did just that, obviously not realizing that a new title had just been applied.

As a result, there was no "Advise" sign on the marquee for the Wednesday night preview. The title was back on for the show's opening the next night, but by that time another mishap had occurred. In about 50% of the Playbill programs for the preem, half of the title credit page was missing.

Washington's Arena Stage has found the recipe for a delicious dish in "The Egg." Felicien Marceau's commercially erratic comedy. For the American preem, Zelda Fichandler's resident in-the-round theatre has mixed together a new and previously untried English but witty, lively translation by young Robert Schlitt, imaginative, propulsive staging by F. Cowles Strickland and the importation of William Shust as an actor up to the heavy demands of the leading role.

The result is a hit, collecting unanimous applause from local critics and joyous audience response. There are indications that the long-discussed Broadway production would, if attempted, have the odds on its side.

Schlitt completed his translation two years ago (with North American rights owned by Alexander Sandor Ince), and prospects for producing the play for New York have been talked since then. "The Egg" was a big Parisian success, but was a London flop in another English translation. It has also been played in Budapest, Berlin, Stockholm and in Israel.

Misgivings about financing a Broadway production might understandably revolve around Marceau's novel form of dramatic expression, which, among other things, has given the leading male role excessive talk and total dominance of the play.

Shust, in this part of Emile, spends virtually as much time rattling off lines to the audience as he does to his fellow players. His is the play's only major role, with all other members of the cast except one taking two or more parts.

Shust is a sort of Mr. Average Frenchman out to learn what life really is. He thinks it's as other people tell him; i.e., an "egg," round and perfect, but with no doors and windows for him to get in. His pursuit of the truth is carried out through various sexual experiences, and the sybolism of the egg becomes cracked and scrambled.

Shust plays Emile to the hilt with whimsy and an almost juvenile charm combining sparkle and dash. His interpretation of Emile, plus Strickland's direction, make the most of the humor in the writing. Schlitt's translation has constructed seemingly rhythmical lines which make Emile's long monologs pleasant to the ear and offsets the possibility that some of his lengthy gab would be a bore.

"The Egg" is a more enjoyable play than Marceau's "The Good Soup" which tried and failed in New York last year with several stars, headed by Ruth Gordon. "The Egg" is also less expensive to produce. Its Gallic wit and exhuberance is retained here in a free-form stage design which virtually amounts to no scenery.

Marion Morris and Robert Prosky, each in two comic roles, are standout members of the local company. Shust on opening night received the loudest and longest ovation ever given at the Arena Stage. Carp.

Road Fair; 'Hero' $46,708 in 9, N.H.; Silvers $66,590, Lucille Ball $54,704, Fonda $27,283, Wayne $14,337, Phila.

The road was generally okay last week, but soft in spots. "Conquering Hero," the latest of the Broadway-targeted entries to debut out-of-town, did well in its getaway frame in New Haven.

"I'm With You," the Nat King Cole-starrer, folded last Saturday (26) at the end of its Detroit tune-up stand.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

COVENT GARDEN OPERA 'FIRSTS' AT EDINBURGH

Edinburgh, Nov. 29.

Covent Garden Opera will make its bow at the International Edinburgh Festival in August, 1961.

The Earl of Harewood, Artistic Director of the annual Scot culture-junket, and himself a former director of the Royal Opera House, London, has arranged for the company to present four operas. They will be Benjamin Britten's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor," Gluck's "Iphigenie en Tauride," in a new production, and Rossini's "Il Barbiere di Siviglia."

"Midsummer Night's Dream" will thus become the first British opera to be staged at the Edinburgh Festival. It will be conducted by George Solto and Meredith Davies, and produced by John Gielgud.

Geraint Evans is pacted as Bottom, Andre Turp as Lysander, Joan Carlyle as Titania, and Louis Quilici as Demetrius.

Rita Gorr will sing the title role in "Iphigenie en Tauride," which will be staged by Frederick Ashton.

Legit Followup

At the Drop of a Hat

(NIXON, PITT.)

With the house packed, madmen Michael Flanders and Donald Swann were in rare form in the second week of their post-Broadway tour. Any uncertainty as to whether road audiences would accept their English brand of nonsense was apparently dispelled by the Pittsburgh response.

At the performance caught, the audience roared and tittered through most of the throwaway material that nearly always caught fire. The exceptions were some of the topical or dated material, such as a reference to Antony Armstrong-Jones.

But "At the Drop of a Hat" and its very funny stars, Flanders and Swann, need only rely on their own funny twists of the waspish, droll and civilized humor. The reference to such things as cannibals, buses, wart-hogs and disgusted tennis umpires is hilarious. The mad approach to comedy should be acceptable throughout the country. Lit.

He is the former Broadway producer but doesn't want to return to producing and isn't sure what he will do when he returns to the U.S.

CASTING NEWS

Following are available parts in upcoming Broadway, off-Broadway, and touring shows, as well as ballet, films, industrial and television shows. All information has been obtained directly by the VARIETY Casting Department by telephone calls, and has been rechecked as of noon yesterday (Tues.).

The available roles will be repeated weekly until filled, and additions to the list will be made only when information is secured from responsible parties. The intention is to service performers with leads provided by the managements of the shows involved rather than to run a wild goose marathon. This information is published without charge.

In addition to the available parts listed, the tabulation includes productions announced for later this season, but, for which, the managements, as yet, aren't holding open casting calls. Parenthetical designations are as follows: (C) Comedy, (D) Drama, (MC) Musical Comedy, (MD) Musical Drama, (R) Revue, (Rep) Repertory, (DR) Dramatic Reading.

SAGA OF A RUGGEDLY INDIVIDUALISTIC STAR

"Charles Macklin" by William W. Appleton (Harvard; $5) is a scholarly, eminently readable biography of the great English actor (1699-1797). Author, an associate prof. in English at Columbia U., has used untapped manuscript sources at Harvard, the Garrick Club in London, and at the Folger and Huntington libraries.

This is the first biography in 70 years of an early player in the "naturalistic" style whose personal integrity and rugged individualism brought him a tempestuous life on and off the boards. Macklin once stabbed a fellow player (Thomas Hallam) to death with his cane in an argument over a wig. In his nineties, the doughty actor bathed in warm gin. As a playwright, Macklin lived to see his major works, "The Man of the World" and "Love a la Mode," universally successful. Overshadowed in his lifetime by David Garrick, Macklin's Shylock was, nevertheless, a beacon in performing art and Macklin played the role well into his eighties.

This volume is a delightful addition to stage lore, a tribute to its author's diligence, and a remarkably complete portrait of a neglected artist. Rodo.

Legit Bits

Peggy Cass, who withdrew recently from her costarring stint in "Thurber Carnival," planed Saturday (26) to Hawaii for a picture assignment, following a stay in Los Angeles for several Jack Paar television shows. The actress expects to rejoin her husband, legit general manager Carl Fisher, in New York around Christmas.

British playwright John Osborne arrived in New York from England last Monday (28) en route to the Acapulco (Mexico) Film Festival. He's due back in Manhattan for a few days prior to returning next week to London, where his latest play, "Luther," is to be presented by the English Stage Co. next spring.

Mrs. James Bridie, widow of the Scottish author and playwright, returned to Edinburgh last Saturday night (26) after a week's stay in New York, preceded by visits to Boston and Toronto.

Michael O'Shaughnessy, moppet actor in "Take Me Along," has changed his name to Patrick at the request of Actor's Equity, to avoid confusion with legit and screen actor Michael Shaughnessy.

John Gielgud will perform "Shakespeare's Ages of Man," his one-man show, Dec. 11, at the Society of the Four Arts, Palm Beach, Fla.

Frances Reid and Philip Bourneuf will appear in Eugene O'Neill's "A Touch of the Poet," at the Actors' Workshop, San Francisco, opening Dec. 10. They will be members of the Workshop company, directed by Herbert Blau, for the 1960-61 season.

J. K. Oelbaum's drama, "All Else Is Commentary," will receive a cast reading at the American Playwright's Forum, Tuesday evening (6), at 8 p.m.

Fred Coe and Arthur Cantor will present "Gideon," a one-act drama by Paddy Chayefsky, and an as yet unwritten companion piece by the same author.

Dore Schary will have a financial stake in William Mercer's comedy, "Hemingway and All Those People," which will be presented in late March by Laura and Allen Rivkin, in association with Walter Reilly, Schary's aide.

Martin B. Cohen and David Gordon have joined Michel Bouche, Mark Schoenberg and Marilyn Shapiro in sponsoring Ugo Betti's drama, "Queen and the Rebels." With Viveca Lindfors starring, the play has been slated for February presentation.

M. Edgar Rosenblum, owner of the Woodstock (N. Y.) Playhouse, and Arnold Tager will present "When I Was a Child," dramatized stories for adults about children, beginning Dec. 8, at the 41st Street Theatre. Included in the program, which Tager adapted and directed, are stories by Dylan Thomas, Virginia Woolf, Frank O'Connor, Shirley Jackson, Sholem Aleichem, Katherine Anne Porter and Kahlil Gibran.

Ed Fisher's musical "———, ——— and Corruption" has been re-titled "Wine, Women and Woad."

The Broadway Chapel Players will present Manuel Mendez-Ballester's "El Melagro" in English at the Broadway Congregational Church, Dec. 4-Feb. 5. Bill Penn is founder-director of the group.

Alfred de Liagre Jr. has postponed "Kwamina," the Richard Adler-Robert Alan Arthur musical, from May to next October. Tony Richardson is still slated to direct.

The opening date of "All the Way Home" at the Shubert Theatre, New Haven, in a recent VARIETY review of the pre-Broadway tryout at that house should have read Nov. 10.

Out-of-town legit critics in New York this week include Stan Anderson, Cleveland Press; Harlowe Hoyt, Cleveland Plain Dealer, and Virgil Miers, Dallas Times Herald.

Demetrios Vilan, managing director of the Huntington Hartford Theatre, Los Angeles, reveals that Huntington Hartford had an investment of $10,000 in the unsuccessful Coast production of "Best Man," which was financed at $40,000.

Jay Ingram will try out his new legit comedy, "The Lunic Affair," on the Coast before taking it to Broadway. He has booked it into the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, for a Christmas opening. Billy Gilbert is the first of four stars to be signed.

Show Out of Town

Holiday in Japan

Cleveland, Nov. 16.

Steve Parker presentation of revue in two acts (15 scenes) by Parker; staging and choreography, Paul Godkin; musical director and arrangements, Ted Dale; Japanese musical consultant, Hiroshi Watanabe; traditional settings and costumes, Hachiro Nakajima; modern costumes and sets, Nicky Nadeau; production manager, Edward Strum; lighting consultant, Larry Parker. Stars Izumi Yukimura; features James Borges, Nagata Kings, Rie Taniuchi, Smoky Rangers, Haru Tominaga, Rocky-Fellers. Opened Nov. 14, '60, at the Hanna Theatre, Cleveland; $5.50 top.

Cast also includes Emi Higuma, Chusiro Sato, Shizuko, Yagi, Hisoo Konuma, Takashi Hoshino, Atsumi Nishimura, Kimihiko Saijo, Kenny Sato, Victor Toyota, chorus.

Steve Parker has transformed his original all-Japanese package show, which toured major cabarets for nearly two years, into a fast-paced musical revue with lots of razzle-dazzle values. "Holiday in Japan" reflects smart showmanship on the part of Paul Godkin as stager and choreographer. By glorifying ancient forms of Nipponese folk arts with lavish pageantry in the first act, then accenting the robustly satiric impressions modern Tokyo show-biz in the second, he makes the production a captivating novelty.

The show now runs about two and one-quarter hours, but there are no obvious signs of padding. Troupe of 65 Japanese performers works with considerable intensity, displaying delicate grace and oriental beauty in eight traditional numbers. They offer genuine spectacles, with the benefit of beautiful costuming and inventive choreography by Hachiro Nakajima.

One of the eye-catchers is a "13th Century Procession of the Courtesans," in which several wear kimonas of multi-colored splendor. Two other pictorially rich scenes are a folksy "Hungry Raccoon" and "Kyoto Doll." The latter dealing with a courtesan, a doll and a sculptor of a living statue, has real action when a dozen agile sumarai warriors battle each other with huge swords.

The second act contains a number of bouncing humorous modern skits. Most of them rib such Yankee institutions as tv westerns and commercials, hillbilly singers, beatniks, jazz and rock-'n'-roll music Satire follows familiar patterns but the gleeful Asiatic accents and witty incongruities makes all of it unusually amusing.

Outstanding entertainers are Izumi Yukimura, James Borges and Rie Taniuchi. Versatile in traditional as well as contemporary impressions, their showmanship would be eloquent in any language.

Miss Yukimura is a dainty beauty with a surprisingly warm, lyric voice. Wearing American evening gowns elegantly, she capably chants "3' Wonderful." "Loving That Man of Mine" and "Balls of Fire," in addition to a vivacious Al Jolson medley in a man's white tail suit.

Borges, tall and dapper, has a pleasantly effective tenor, crooning "Poor Butterfly" in a medley as Frank Sinatra might do it. Rie Taniuchi is the tawny, dynamic dance hit of the revue. Her free-wheeling hips get a workout in "Beatnik Blues," spicing it with brassy satire. It's also a vivid showcase for the chorus of 25 dancers whose footwork is brisk in jazz or folk ballets.

Three Smoky Rangers shuck up a boisterous hillbilly travesty but it isn't as funny as the Nagata Kings' screwball baseball game or Chico Nagata's sly dead-pan mockery as a western badman on a killing spree. A quintet of Rocky-Fellers use a couple of lusty-voiced kids to show how the East meets the West in a session of heated rocking rhythms.

These acts still have a strong nitery-vaude flavor, but "Holiday in Japan" has enough picturesque novelties to get along on the legit circuit. Pullen.

'IGUANA' NEXT SEASON; 2 PRODUCERS IN LINE

No deal is set for the Broadway production of the new Tennessee Williams drama, "Night of the Iguana," which was recently tested at the Coconut Grove Playhouse, Miami. Viola Rubber, who was associated in the tryout presentation, is interested in doing the script in New York.

Also a candidate to produce the play on Broadway is Cheryl Crawford, whose presentation of the same author's comedy, "Period of Adjustment," is currently in its third week at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N.Y. It's assumed that Williams and his agent, Audrey Wood, of Music Corp. of America, will have a substantial share in the show regardless of who gets formal billing as producer on Broadway. Also, the play will probably not be done until next season.

Miss Crawford, besides presenting "Period of Adjustment," also produced the author's "Rose Tattoo," "Camino Real" and "Sweet Bird of Youth" on Broadway.

Touring by bus Goldovsky Grand Opera Theatre from Boston displays the ingredients that make for solid opera success artistically and at the boxoffice here in a one-nighter (7) before a full house at the 1,800-seat Shrine Mosque with Mozart's "Don Giovanni."

Singers proved fresh, talented and youthful. The production was buoyant and fast-moving. Singing throughout was just short of magnificent. The result was a solidly satisfying performance that should shape up as a gilt-edged entry either on the road, and not excluding big cities.

Goldovsky, the Boston impresario and network commentator, has brought some unique innovations to the opera. He has "restored" Mozart's opera to its original form by eliminating numerous interpolations, cuts and distortions. There is no prompter used in performance. The singers are trained to execute their roles with rarely a glance at the baton, relying on the music for cues. In rehearsals, they even went through the opera with their backs to the orchestra.

What has emerged is a naturally flowing performance with a simple and unpretentious charm.

Ronald Holgate was capable as Don Giovanni. He boasts a powerful, resonant voice which he employed in the dashing, swaggering vein of his role and he added a generous measure of plain good acting. His damnation scene was particularly gripping.

His servant Leporelo was expertly played by Paul Ulena who displayed a winning humor along with a virile, mobile baritone voice. Marguerite Willauer sang her role as Donna Anna with compelling warmth.

James Wainner as Don Ottavio, added some memorable moments with his ringing tenor and Constance Fisher was adequate as Donna Elvira, although hers was the only leading role in which the English language lyrics were difficult to understand.

Jeanette Scovotti as the peasant girl Zerlina was bright and sparkling and Sherrill Milnes neatly played the role of the bumbling Masetto. Harold van Goldern was the statue of the Commendatore. His singing from behind an armored faceplate was properly funereal, but hardly intelligible English. Lucien Olivier played the Commendatore before his death.

The multi-purpose set was designed to help project the singers' voices in the acoustical void of certain road halls or arenas. It was not needed here. While comparing favorably with more lavish scenery, it suffered from a basic

Is a 'Substitute' Just as Good?

Paris Musicians Oppose Julian's Drive to Pin Down Pitmen at Opera

Paris, Nov. 29.

Here's a new twist in labor relations. Ever hear of a strike by employees who are perfectly satisfied with wages and conditions—but don't want a contract? That's what happened here a couple of times in the last couple of weeks between the musicians and management of the Paris Opera.

It's more involved than that, of course. A. M. Julian, managing director of the Opera and Opera Comique, has two fine orchestras and wants to keep them that way. But it is customary in Paris for musicians to double or triple all over town. This is what Julian objects to. He wants musicians, to whom he guarantees a full weekly wage, to work exclusively for the Opera and Opera Comique. He doesn't care how much they play with other orchestras when he doesn't need them, but wants his own men and his own men only, when he calls them.

The musicians (and their union) don't feel the same way about it. They admit that Julian (or any other employer) is entitled to a full complement of tooters when he calls them—and they are always careful to send him substitutes for any of the men when these latter are employed elsewhere for a night or two. This, they think, should be satisfactory.

The difficulty comes from the fact, mostly, that there are eight major symphony orchestras in Paris, none of them playing more than one concert per week—some weeks. The top Paris musicians have a habit of shuffling from one orchestra to another, depending on what the program is or who the conductor is. They feel that they are better musicians if they can shift around, play with different leaders, change their repertoires. Just having a year-round job at mutually satisfactory wages doesn't suffice for their "artistic needs," they claim.

Since Julian is holding out for a contract (including the exclusivity clause) the musickers went on strike twice in the past two weeks. Half hour strikes immediately before the start of the show, delaying the beginning by that long. What they want, they claim, is to continue as at present, same hours, same conditions, same pay—but no individual contracts.

(Editor's note: AFM musicians, too, frequently double or triple with various orchestras and theatres, or for recording sessions, always supplying a substitute when "unavailable," but this is usually with the aquiescence of management. Paris is not alone. Many European cities are notorious for substitutionitis, one set of faces showing for rehearsal, another set for performance).

Louis Macloon Footnotes Clark Gable's Career

Albuquerque, Nov. 29.

The death of Clark Gable in Hollywood last week brought out these remarks from a former Coast legit producer, Louis O. Macloon, who believes he gave Gable his "first theatre job."

Macloon, now connected with a lead and zinc mining concern in Silver City, N. M., stated, "I gave him his first job in the theatre, carrying a spear at $25 a week in 'Romeo and Juliet'. Four years later he was my star in 'The Last Mile' going from there into the movies."

Dance Review

New York City Ballet

Two new ballets in search of an "occasion" were the meat in a George Balanchine hero sandwich at the New York City Center last Wed. (16) when capital was made, somewhat synthetically, of Italy being 100 years a nation. The salute to Italy sold some extra tickets, brought out the Italian diplomats and overtured with the Italian anthem.

"Monumentum Pro Gesulado" proved a seven-minute divertimento with the dancers in practice clothes. It had a certain professional simplicity that commanded respect. Following came "Variations From Don Sebastian," a more elaborate showpiece for the gloriously gay Melissa Hayden, with a notable assist from Jonathan Watts.

Lew Christensen's witty ballet, 'Con Amore" opened the program with much delightfulness as led by Violette Verdy, Edward Villela, Jiliana and her sundry lovers. Continuing in the Italianate idiom the closer was "La Sonnambula."

The company and the soloists were in generally good form though it is not possible to predict that either of the two new ballets will rank high in the Balanchine repertory. Land.

Brooklyn Eagle Suspends

About a month after the Brooklyn Eagle resumed publication last Oct. 23 as a Sunday sheet it suspended.

Publisher Robert Farrell, originally the Broadway columnist for the old Brooklyn Eagle, refused to comment on a report it would not be published again. He had hopes of making it into a daily as in former years but, after the initial fanfare, apparently there was not enough enthusiasm for a borough sheet exclusively. Several metropolitan dailies have special Brooklyn (also Bronx, etc.) supplements, with accent on the local news.

World's 40% Divvy

In the continued bullishness of the publishing stocks, World Pub. Co. will pay a 4% stock dividend as of Dec. 8.

This is in addition to the regular 10c quarterly divvy.

Dear Sir, You Cad—

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

A word about Scul's notice (VARIETY, Nov. 23) of my new book, "How To Write Ten Different Best Sellers Now in Your Spare Time and Become the First Author on Your Block Unless There's an Author Already Living on Your Block, In Which Case You'll Become the Second Author on Your Block and That's Okay Too and Other Stories."

Scul is unique. While many newspapers have reviewed the book, Scul is the first to review the dust jacket.

Why can't other critics do a little trail blazing, too? Conservative, set in their ways, all—all, but Scul—have confined their remarks purely to the contents of the book. The stuffy old Chicago Tribune, for example, calls it the "best commentary on contemporary best-sellers and a very funny spoof."

The Saturday Review says it's a "colossal satire (which) devastatingly ridicules publishing." And the staid and tweedy King Features claims it's a "brilliant book, virulent, observant, and analytical."

Okay, maybe so. But why has only Scul had the courage to forge ahead to track new frontiers in book reviewing? For Scul alone ignores the book itself, that obsolescent feature known as the text. He'd rather talk about the photograph of the author (sorry, Scul; that's how I look).

George Kirgo.

(Scul is, of course, our own Sir Francis Scully.—Ed.).

Bantam's H'wood Tieups

Bantam Books' new Book Development Program will be disclosed in Los Angeles next week with the arrival of president Oscar Dystel and associate editor Robert H. K. Walter for a series of conferences with writers, producers and motion picture studio executives.

Dystel states the distinguishing characteristic of the new program of financial and editorial participation in the development of both fiction and nonfiction in hard and softcover tomes will be "selection" and "quality."

Book execs will confer with studio heads on film-book tie-ins on Bantam soft-cover titles "Hawaii," "The War Lover," "Spinster," "Aimez-Vous Brahms?", "Splendor in the Grass," "The Naked Edge" and "The Young Doctor."

Impending purchases of film rights to recent major books for which Bantam has acquired paperback rights include John Hersey's "The Child Buyer" (Knopf); Stanley Ellin's "The Winter After This Summer" (Random House); Max Ehrlich's "The Takers" (Harpers); Tom Lea's "The Primal Yoke" (Little, Brown); David Walker's "Where The High Winds Blow"; and Frank Harvey's "The Lion Pit."

Democratic Digest May Fold

The Democratic Digest, official mag of the Democratic National Committee, is winding up its eighth year in trouble, despite the recent Kennedy-Johnson victory. The experiment of publishing political messages monthly was a red ink adventure from the start, although national party headquarters in Washington considered it worth the loss to keep up interest in a party which was outside the White House looking in.

Latest action at headquarters involves shifting the Digest to a new non-profit corporation (it had been handled on the Democratic National Committee books previously) and giving advertising a try-out. The special inaugural edition will accept ads, and on the basis of how that works, the decision will be made whether to fold the mag or keep it going. At present no editions are planned beyond the one in January.

Catholics' 'Obscenity' Blast

Annual report of National Office for Decent Literature bewails "continued extremely liberal attitude of higher courts" toward obscenity cases. The Catholic outfit said in view of general ineffectiveness of Government action, job of cleaning the racks of smutty paperbacks and magazines must be assumed by distributors and publishers themselves.

So far this year, NODL has found 39 magazines "objectionable for youth." Of a monthly average of 111 paperbacks reviewed, 52 have been classed objectionable.

Bette, Marlene and Greta

Bette Davis will have her autobiography published by Putnam's either in late '61 or early 1962. Putnam also has Greta Garbo's life-story slated for publication next month. It's by Swedish actor Fritiof Billquist, a longtime friend of the film star.

"Marlene Dietrich's ABC's," due under the Doubleday imprint next summer, will be autobiographical in an al fresco manner, presumably as a prelude to her ultimate memoirs. The ABC's portion refers to her alphabetized attitudes on "S," for example—sex, Sinatra, sugar, etc.—with an opinion or explanation pertaining to each.

Competition From Within

Experience has proved it possible for newspapers in the same city and in under the same ownership to "maintain competition and distinct newsgathering and editorial policies," Daniel E. Button, executive editor of the Albany Times-Union, told members of Albany's Monarch Club at its meeting last week.

The Hearst Corp., publisher of the Times-Union, recently purchased from Gannett's Press Company the Knickerbocker News, an afternoon sheet. Both are now located in the Times-Union building, although occupying separate news-editorial department space. There is only one mechanical plant.

Button spoke on "Your Daily Newspaper."

Not Sensitive

Hugh Burnett, BBC producer of tv's "Face To Face" and "Lifeline" programs, has just published a book of cartoons signed "Phelix," and titled "Top Sacred."

It pokes witty, gentle fun at monks. Horror from the Church? Not a bit. The Abbot of Downside, top Roman Catholic school, says: "Being a monk or a friar is funny enough seen from within. What a pleasure it is to learn that it can also look funny from without."

Rosenthal's Books

Harold Rosenthal, N.Y. Herald Trib staffer, has pacted for book on top baseball managers, with Macfadden doing paperback and Thomas Nelson hardcovers. Book, due for spring distribution, will include takeouts on Leo Durocher, Paul Richards, Danny Murtaugh, Al Lopez, Charlie Dressen and Casey Stengel.

Segment on Stengel will triple others.

A Stylish Book

"Esquire's Europe In Style" (Harper; $4.95) edited by that mag's travel editor, Richard Joseph, is as the title indicates a truly stylish book. This is no first-time, how-to book.

It's a slick collection of sophisticated closeups on the many lands that comprise the European scene, with legends and lore, gas (or petrol) and gastronomy, hotels and hospitality, showoffs and shopping tied in a pleasant package, expertly served up by such byliners as the editor-anthologist himself, who is no mean reporter of the global scene, and especially Europe, along with John Gunther, Alberto Moravio, Robert Ruark, Sacheverell Sitwell, Eric Sevareid, Paul Gallico, Joseph Wechsberg, Andre Maurois, Aldous Huxley, Martin Mayer and others, not forgetting Scott and Zelda Fitzgerald. Despite war and holocaust Europe remains durable so the Fitzgeralds' dual byliner holds up 30 years later.

As Arnold Gingrich, editor of Esquire says in his foreword, this is the 16th book that has derived from the pages of that once ribald now more staid monthly. Dick Joseph has done a tiptop job in culling his travelog pieces which, per the copyright credits, stem back to 1934 and yet have contemporary appeal. Abel.

Monks' Boon

which was built in 1228. The huge throne room, complete with fabulous 14th century tapestries, vaulted blue-and-gold ceiling, golden throne and red-velvet canopy, was created in 1926 when the Franciscans hoped that the Pope would make the trip to Assisi to mark the 700th anniversary of Francis' death. The Pontiff never made the journey, but the monks kept the vast layout intact in case a Pope ever came to Assisi.

Francis in the film is played by Bradford Dillman. The Pope is portrayed by 82-year old Finlay Currie. Players in this Triton-20th Century-Fox production also include Dolores Hart as St. Clare and Stuart Whitman. Picture will do the interiors in Rome and additional exteriors in Spain. It carries a $2,800,000 budget Producer Skouras this week pointed out that permission to use the Papal apartment not only gave the film an added element of authenticity, but also represented a huge saving vis-a-vis the necessity of having to construct such a set on a sound stage. He figured that it would cost about $80,000 to create a replica of the 90 x 24 ft. room in a studio.

In addition to the priceless tapestries, the monks also lent the production other valuable props, such as several 13th and 14th century crosses and a number of very rare antiphonari of the 15th century, bound in pigskin and with beautifully illuminated letters.

"Francis" has been shooting in the Umbrian hill country since Oct. 28 and should wind up around Christmas. It has been using a number of historical locations although the Lateran Palace scene was the most impressive done to date. The Palace no longer exists and descriptions of its interior are rare. Francis himself, however, who was born in Assisi and lived and died here, told how he approached the Pope's chamber via a corridor lined with huge mirrors. Effect was duplicated for the film.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Eye Irritation, Calif., Nov. 22.

Six days before the country's plebes held their quadrennial plebescite, Steve Allen, who can get into more hot water than if he owned Virginia Hot Springs, aired the minds which NBC didn't want to meet. Heaved off television last January, he eventually had his masterminds meet and discuss crime and punishment in a Beverly Hills school auditorium, under the beneficence of the School for Nursery Years. No observer of President-Elect Kennedy or President-Reject Nixon was there, but I traveled 250 miles to represent both of them.

When NBC and/or/Plymouth cancelled the "Meeting of Minds" 10 months ago on account it didn't think minds ought to be meeting on Allen's comedy program a dossier of protest piled up from coast to coast. Much of it was mighty good indignation stuff. Marie Torre of the Herald Trib, Charles Denton of the L. A. Examiner, Hal Humphrey of the L. A. Mirror-News (a sort of John Crosby trying to breast the tide of culture which normally flows from east to west), Jack Gould of the N. Y. Times and such outposts of horticulture as Larry Ingram of the Denver Post and Norman Shavin of the Atlanta Journal were particularly sharp in clobbering frontoffice interference with a seminar on such a cosmic cruelty as capital punishment.

Who Was That Critic?

Harriet Van Horne and Jack O'Brian were not represented in the brief and I was wondering if either of them was the tv critic whom Steve Allen meant when criticizing a critic by reducing him to anonymity in Steve's lively baby book, "Mark It and Strike It Rich." I meant to ask him that but he lives on top of a magnificent hill above California's San Fernando Valley and I was so out of breath on arriving there I kept talking to get my breath back and never did get around to asking him any questions.

When I was leaving he asked if I wanted to see his workshop? I said sure. It was a tiny room with bound files of crime stories, a bridge table and some chairs. This is a workshop? This is where this boy-wonder of tv, stage, screen, radio, concert and the book world has turned out seven books and hundreds of poems, songs and skits? Why, it's hardly big enough for him to stretch his six-foot-three frame without putting his tortoise-shelled skull out the smog-scented window.

Little Workshop, Big Overhead

But Helen Colton Field told me he has an office on Ventura Boulevard staffed by several people.

"If this overhead is on his cuff," I said, "it will land him on Skid Row. It must cost $5,000 a month to handle this operation."

She nodded. "But he owns a flock of Polaroid stock," she added.

"He'd better! Even with bestsellers he'll never make it as a writer. I know. Some of my best friends are bestsellers. I've had bestsellers myself. So has Somerset Maugham and H. G. Wells and they both described books as '90-day wonders.'"

"He writes magazine pieces too," she explained.

"Oh, well, that's different. That's money. But books—that's what we lost abroad. Prestige. Shredded wit tastes better than books or prestige."

Among the crix who approved of Allen's standing up to the Philistines of Radio City was Bob Williams of the New York Post. But I did not see him, nor any other critic at this deferred Beverly Hills meeting of the minds.

The Evening Post Of Yesteryear

I couldn't help thinking how different this was from the New York Post of Fabian Franklin and Simeon Strunsky. In the era before the First World War the Post was the paper that didn't bother to report a fire but showed up three days later to find out who caused it. Its staffers were scholars who wrote with quills. But good quills.

I often feel today I'm a ghost of that staff because I don't care what the feud was about but how it was resolved. I don't care if Caryl Chessman was fired, but how is the world getting on toward the abolition of all capital punishment? I don't care about the first atomic bomb but when are we going to drop the rest of them into an unfathomable sea?

Thus I'm just the guy to go to watch Steve Allen act as traffic cop while radio actors assuming the characters of Aristotle, Hegel, Dostoevski, Freud, Montaigne and Darrow discuss whether hanging isn't too good for the human race.

N.B.C. Should Have Let It Ride

Allen explained to the audience that in his tv script he planned to have actors costumed as of their time and walking around while telling why they were against the death penalty. Whether he planned to have them talk in their original tongues, with translators cleaning up their dialog, like Khrushchev's boy-translator, Allen didn't tell us.

Some of the dialecticians he picked to act these pundits could have been helped by translators but having now read the script as well as heard it I am not sure anything could help it. NBC should have let it ride. In a Plymouth naturellement.

Little George Hegel (1770-1831) was played by Robert Ellenstein, Stagira Aristotle (384-322BC) by Jan Arvan, Michel de Montaigne (1533-1592) by Bob Duggan, Fydor Dostoevski (1821-1881) by Shep Mencken, Sigmund Freud (1856-1939) by Byron Kane and Clarence Darrow (1857-1939) by Michael Granger.

Steve explained to the audience that except for a couple of cracks like "Good Heavens!" from Fyodor and expletives like "Baloney" by Darrow the dialog was from the authentic writings of these civilized gents. He added if what these scholars said wasn't enough to rid the listeners of the joy of having the state kill somebody for them they should read "Reflections of the Guillotine" by the late Albert Camus and "Break Down the Walls" by old Anon.

Has The Death Penalty No Friends?

Seems to me Thomas Mott Osborne, George W. P. Hunt, Alexander Berkman, Ed Morrell and Jim Tully (especially in his "A California Holiday") came up with livelier comments in the same gruesome field, but it was comforting to know that even pagans, agnostics and anarchists don't approve of killing as an instrument of social justice.

Of the speakers Clarence Darrow as played by Michael Granger was loudest and seemed to have the best arguments. His crack about giving all prisoners the same treatment was like giving every patient in a hospital the same operation was cute.

Not A Plug For Tracy and March

Poor Aristotle had little to say but maybe it was his first time on a panel and even the most brilliant conversationalists have been known to become mute, inglorious Miltons on a panel show.

I looked around to see if Stanley Kramer were in the audience but he wasn't. So I guess Darrow stole the show on his merits and the whole thing was not a rigged trailer for "Inherit The Wind."

You have to watch for these rabbit punches.

Especially in a political year.

Miami Beach Bets On Show Biz

"free to guests only" gimmick that will bring a veritable "Who's Who" of talent here this season.

This has become a "must" for the highly competitive oceanfront establishments in recent years, sparked by the originator of the idea, Morris Lansourgh, who masterminds the fortunes of the Miami Beach Associated Hotels — the Deauville, Sherry-Frontenac, Casablanca, Versailles, Crown and Sans Souci. Lansburgh was also the first to "big sell" the modified American plan, with the joining in this method of operation by the majority of the larger hotels. Of the major hospices, only the Fontainebleau and Eden Roc now concentrate on the European plan, with luxury overtones that are maintained throughout the posheries and includes the bookings for their night club adjuncts.

Free Extras

In the Lansburgh case, his annual programs began to include more and more "free extras" with topper the "Cavalcade of Stars" concept, whereby his guests are bussed from the five member hotels to the Deauville, twice and three times weekly, there to gather in theatre-seat arrangements for over 3,000 persons in the huge convention auditorium.

They see top acts that appear for one performance each and that will include this winter, such diversified talent as Bobby Darin, Judy Garland, Carmen Cavallaro, Victor Borge, Betty Grable, Allen & Rossi, Myron Cohen, Jack Carter, Sophie Tucker, Mickey Rooney and Mitzi Green, Ray Bolger, Robert Merrill, the Ritz Brothers, Jose Iturbi, Jimmy Durante, Milton Berle, the McGuire Sisters and a host of others.

Of aforementioned names, the top-draws such as the Ritz freres. Darin, Tucker, et al. will play full week runs in the Deauville's "Casanova Room," a 650-seater that is in competition for public patronage with the other biggeries on hotel row. In addition, there'll be Sacasas and his orch plus late-show features with acts of the Don Rickles caliber booked, in the open-'til-dawn Musketeer Room, a 250-seater with direct entrance from the street.

The Lansburgh setup was the first to achieve a solid lineup this season, thanks to the higher-offer base on which he can work; each of his inns is assessed so much per room as a contrib to the budget for talent. Well over 2,000 rooms are involved.

Battle For Talent

Of annual interest to the trade is the battle for talent between neighboring rivals, the Fontainebleau and the Eden Roc. As of now, the Roc's proxy, Harry Mufson, has set Paul Anka to start the season at Xmas, with Johnny Mathis, a big moneymaker in his Cafe Pompeii, coming in for the week before New Years; Alan King and Anita Bryant are January pactees; others on the Roc roster are Ella Fitzgerald, Peggy Lee, Nat King Cole (if his legit effort does not prevent); Tony Martin, Joe E. Lewis, Lena Horne and — although this may be denied—Harry Belafonte.

Miss Lee is taking her first crack at this town, while the others have played—and done well—in the big swankery. There'll be the usual complement of supporting comedians, where there is a singing star. Two Roc staples of recent winters will be playing next door at the Fontainebleau; definitely, Sammy Davis Jr., and reportedly Louis Prima & Keely Smith, who got their first big break hereabouts at the Roc, several seasons back.

The Font's season starts with Joey Bishop and a Latino revue in support for the year-end holiday period. Mort Sahl arrives in January, with the revue holding over for the month, and other toppers to fill out the three remaining weeks. Dean Martin is due as is Davis, Prima & Smith and of course, prexy Ben Novack's buddy, Frank Sinatra. There's been some talk around anent the reason for the switch to the Font by Davis and Prima-Smith stemming from their palships with Sinatra. It makes the competition the more intense between the two places. Both Mufson and Novack now play it close to the vest before readying official announcements on who will play their rooms until the contracts are signed, and sealed: case in point—Belafonte.

Intense Competition

The intensity of the competition between the Font, Roc and Deauville, and resultant upping in bids for acts they want, has led to the return of the revue idea to several hotels unwilling to chance too big payoffs. The successful Lou Walters production now entering its third winter edition—it runs the year around at the Carillon, looks to have started a trend.

Some of the big spots are talking about their own production ideas, come summertime. As of now, the Americana was to have had the "Holiday In Japan" company for a February-through-March run, but the package broke up after its Latin Quarter, N. Y. run. The Tisch freres are reported setting up a production to replace, and that it it being cast, planned and rehearsed in Manhattan. They prefer to stay out of the costly competition for names, having taken a bath in past winters with their bookings of the mid-Beach "draws" to their Bal Masque and then seeing them fade at the b.o. after big opening nights. However, they still are opening their season at Xmas with Eyde Gorme & Steve Lawrence.

The Seville hotel, which several years ago was another competitor for the better acts, they dropped out after a couple of losing winters in its Matador Room, is coming back to the regular show scene. A revue staged by Jack and Marilyn Nagle—ex Walters aides—is being prepared for the season and will have Nejla Ates and comic Dave Fisher (and White) as leads. The Montmartre, which had mid-bracket comedians and singers last year, is also entering the revue sweepstakes with a Jolson-dedication theme and recapture in staging of the dances and music of his era: Norman Brooks, the Jolie soundalike will be featured.

At the Saxony

Diosa Costello, who headed the long-runner Latino wingding at the Lucerne, has moved to the Saxony, where a new cafe has been built for her and in which she will present her own production, as well as operating the spot. The Lucerne is out of the pic, having gone bankrupt last Spring, with its builder-owner back and nixing any show ideas.

There are several little-revue packages being shown around the one-niter circuit. Incidentally, that run has several duplicates of the Lansburgh "Cavalcade" with the most important the "Shower of Stars" group of hotels that will offer, at each hotel's cafe throughout the week, such performers as Harvey Stone, Liberace, the Crew Cuts, Los Chavales, Lillian Ross, Cab Calloway, Mickey Katz, Betty Kean and Lew Parker, Tito Guizar and others. All are booked on a one-week guarantee.

One of the biggest buzz-stirrers around town was Alan Gale's takeover of Copa City, rebuilding its main room and converting it into a 950-seat theatre layout. In this setting he is introducing Thursday (1), the Copa Theatre with a vaude-type revenue, complete to a Boots McKenna line. First top-liners to join Gale, who will emcee, do his own turn when required—and just manage when not—are Arthur Treacher and Fran Warren, with Arnold Dover and the Dave Tyler orch.

Special material and sketch writers under contract to Gale set up and framed a vaude-cafe act for Treacher, as they will for others in his bookings group, requiring material; set are Reginald Gardiner, Paul Winchell, Vivienne della Chiesa, Roberta Sherwood, Linda Darnell, Imogene Coca, June Havoc and Marion Colby. This is first-half-of-the-season lineup with others being dickered for.

Gale Operation

What makes the Gale operation a conversation piece here is the admissions structure and overall operation. There'll be no food or beverages served in the theatre section, with admissions charge set at $2.25 and $3.30 and no minimum cover. In the lounge, there'll be liquors served and pre-show dinner (a one choice, steak and potato affair) for package price of $6.50 with show included. Beverage tariffs at the bar will be 57c for standard brands, 73c for imports. In his local ad campaign, Gale stresses that his place is "not a nite club" but a "theatre" and that he is "bringing back vaudeville in a big way" at "small prices . . . to fit the average man's pocketbook." There will be two shows nightly, at eight and 11 p.m., with all seats reserved. Worthy of note is the fact that Gale is bringing in names that—give or take two or three—have never appeared in the area's niteries, although some have been offered to the posh spots.

Of the indies, Murray Franklin's is the big biz puller again, off and running in a new and sumptuous location around the corner from his long-time base, opposite the Roney Plaza. That building is being torn down to make way for a new inn, to be started next Spring. The new Franklin setting is on the site of the original Five O'Clock Club (not the present club of like name) and is a spacious spot, but Franklin kept seating down to 200, to retain the intimate atmosphere and leave room for his fabled foam-covered rocking chairs for the patrons. Back as his top draws are Paul Gray (who's also co-host and has a piece) and Kay Carole, the tiny femme ventro-artists who made a big stir last season with her "everyone's in the act" gambit. Added to the already potent draw at Franklin's is Jackie Heller who switched over from the Roc. The dynamic little songster has a big following on the Beach. He joins as co-emcee with Gray and co-hosts with he and Franklin, who is the show's winder.

The small El Patio—once Mother Kelly's—is bringing back Lenny Bruce, a click last year; and, there are literally dozens of hotel bar-lounge-clubs. The Font's Boom Boom Room is getting a big play, thanks to the exposure on teevee's "Surfside Six" series. The Roc's Harry's American Bar is always one of the crowded drink-dance-listen attractions with a fine Latin crew batoned by Luis Varona and with solid jazz units. Pupi Campo is featured at the Americana's Carioca Room; the Saxony is reopening the Beach's only roof top cafe, the Ivory Tower with "harem-type" entertainers to fit; on the same floor, there'll be a gourmet dining club on the key-club idea.

Every oceanfront inn will present one niters, of high and medium budget. All have a musical unit for accomps and for dancing—and that takes in over 100 hotels and motels.

of bars and "hotels" which surround every base. They expect that the family-less GI will seek out their diversions.

The on-base military club should see a falling off of business, particularly on the officer and NCO level. But the decline is not expected to be overwhelming since the men would visit the clubs more frequently sans family members, often with local substitutes.

Impact on theatres would be slight. The GI sees most of his pictures on base and is not a factor on the civilian circuits.

sameness in the various scenes. This was at least partly offset by the advantage of quick scene shifts.

The costuming was impressive and the orchestra excellent except for a bit too exuberant finale which almost drowned out the singers. The ensemble work was outstanding throughout and the young singers not only sang like principals in an amorous adventure, but looked their parts.

Goldovsky troupe was brought here as a part of a four-event $8 concert series of the Amateur Musical Club of Peoria. Klein.

Orfeo ed Euridice

(TOWN HALL)

American Opera Society, the foremost musical archeological organization operating in this country, excavated Gluck's "Orfeo ed Euridice" for its premiere offering of its 1960-61 season. With Met mezzo Giuletta Simionato in the leading role, "Orfeo" was presented to a jammed Town Hall Tuesday night (1).

Impresario Allan Sven Oxenburg did more than excavate the opera. He went further and dug up a totally unfamiliar orchestral dress for the 1762 opus, an orchestral version made for a Paris production, tailored by Gluck himself in 1774. It calls for a smaller group of sidemen than the Berlioz orchestration, and the singing becomes more transparent, less romantic in style.

Simionato had the evening to herself. She had the most important vocal role, and she sang with style, authority and great feeling. She adhered to the classic tone, yet interpreted her text with warmth and fervor. Her portrayal is more in the Italian operatic tradition than that of the late Kathleen Ferrier, the English contralto who sang in a more dignified and restrained vein. Simionata's "Orfeo" is more emotional and gripping, yet Ferrier's was perhaps more moving.

Opera Society also introduced a young conductor, Antonia de Almeida, who made an excellent impression. The Margaret Hills trained chorus, which has the most important assignment aside from the title role of Orfeo, performer its chores well. Mildred Allen and Irma Gonzalez were adequate in their parts. The astute Herbert Barrett management, which in earlier seasons had sold out Carnegie Hall for these operatic rarities, naturally sold out the smaller Town Hall. Next year, it doubtless will return to Carnegie. Booking of the hall and the important guest artists had to be coordinated before the rescue of Carne.

BETTY LAWFORD

Betty Lawford, legit, film and tv actress, died Nov. 20 in New York, after a long illness. She was the daughter of the late Ernest Lawford, a prominent leading man in the theatre of the 1920's and Janet Slater Lawford, an English actress.

She began her career in 1926 making her debut with the Players Club in "Henry IV." Miss Lawford is best remembered as the "bathtub girl" in the Broadway production of "The Women." Her B'way credits also include "The Lady Lies," "Heat Wave," There's Wisdom in Women," "Glamour Preferred" and "Walk With Music."

She also appeared in more than 40 films produced at the major Hollywood studios. Included among these were "Old English," with George Arliss; "Berkeley Square," "Gallant Lady," "Gentlemen of Press," "Return of Sherlock Holmes" and "Lucky in Love." She also appeared in numerous tele shows including "Robert Montgomery Presents," "Studio One" and "Kraft Theatre."

Ad exec Barry Buchanan, her husband, mother, brother and cousin, actor Peter Lawford survive.

KYLE CRICHTON

Kyle Crichton, 64, writer and editor, died Nov. 24 in New York.

He began writing in 1922 and soon after was writing for the N.Y. newspapers and magazines. In 1929, he came to Manhattan and became a book editor at Scribner's under Maxwell Perkins. During the depression years he took the pen name of Robert Forsythe and became editor of "The New Masses." He turned out two books which were sensations of the 1930s, "Redder Than the Rose" and "Reading From Left."

In 1933, Crichton became associate editor of Collier's Weekly, serving on the now defunct mag until 1949. With the signing of the Stalin-Hitler Pact in 1940, he became disillusioned with Communism. Wags said he turned from Marx to Marx Brothers. And during the 1940's, he took a year's leave from Collier's to do research on Harpo, Chico, Groucho, Gummo, Zeppo and their mother, Minnie, which yielded "The Marx Brothers" (1950). He wrote, in collaboration with Mrs. Cordelia Drexel Biddle Duke Robertson, "My Philadelphia Father," the story of Anthony Joseph Drexel Biddle. Later he dramatized it and it was seen on Broadway as "The Happiest Millionaire."

His wife, two sons, daughter, brother and sister survive.

'Bye Bye Birdie'

Stewart (book), Charles Strouse (music) and Lee Adams (lyrics) property have thus far been repaid 70% ($210,000) of their stake. The production is maintaining a large reserve, principally for the financing of the touring production, which is budgeted at $190,000.

The Broadway production, currently in its 32d week of operation, moved recently from the Martin Beck Theatre to the 54th St. Theatre at a cost of about $25,000 for hauling, advertising, signs, etc. The musical, which had to move from the Beck because of a prior booking commitment by the theatre, has an arrangement whereby it can move to the Shubert Theatre, regarded as more desirable than the out-of-the-way 54th St., when the Shubert's current "Take Me Along" vacates.

The picture version of "Bi die" is scheduled to get rolling late next fall, with the Broadway management producing.

MORE MONEY FOR PRETTY FACES THAN HEALTHY BODIES

Two years ago in Britain, almost £55,500,000 ($155,400,000) were spent on beauty preparations and treatment. (Some are itemized above.)

In the same year, the government's bill for new hospitals was £31,000,000.

Feminine habits add up to startling statistics. Granada documented them for television in a special program: The Price of a Pretty Face. Fashion magazine editors, models, beauty parlor owners, chemists and psychologists were interviewed. English husbands were edified.
